Another major obstacle in forming a proper understanding of revival again revolves around a cultural difficulty. The critics of revival (I speak here of evangelicals who no longer believe revival a possibility), often cite that the great historical awakenings were generally confined to 18th and 19th century America and Britain because their respective cultures were suited to such religious movements. The implication being that there cannot exist an immutable set of biblical principles which can transcend time and sophistication of culture in order to bring revival to every tribe and kindred on earth.

Of course, this short and truncated view fails to take into account the mighty evangelical awakenings which are currently taking place in such diverse places as Asia, South America, Africa, and the Soviet Union. Thus it is imperative for the success of the churches global mission that we reject any notion that revival is based upon certain cultural conditions. Revival is distinctly biblical not cultural!

The third major obstacle in arriving at an understanding of revival and spiritual awakening has to do with a confusion over the terms themselves. Very often the terms "revival" and "spiritual awakening" are used interchangeably to describe large numbers of converts being added to the church in a very short period of time. Large numbers of converts can be expected as a result of what is called a "spiritual awakening." Revival and spiritual awakening are related; both may be attended by the salvation of a large number of souls. However, they are in fact two separate events.

In light of our discussion so far, it is now time to properly define the terms revival and spiritual awakening. While there exist many good and varied explanations for revival, we will opt for simplicity by defining revival as a recovery of Christ's glorified testimony within a particular generation of the church. Such revival may take place on a local scale, but usually takes on national and international implications. The marks of such reviving include corporate repentance, humility, renewed spiritual vigor, holiness of life, and large sweeping movements of corporate prayer. Thus revival is a specific blessing of divine intervention which Christ bestows to the elect in order to arrest spiritual atrophy and enhance the churches testimony in society.

Spiritual awakening on the other hand, takes place when an already "revived" church begins to righteously leaven the society in which it is located. The evidences of awakening usually include mass conversions and dramatic changes in a given nation's social structure. Virtually every historic revival has inaugurated an awakening which has challenged and reformed society in some degree. This all encompassing vision can best be summed up in a little known yet poignant statement by the great 19th century revivalist Charles G. Finney in which he exhorted:

"Now the great business of the church is to reform the world - to put away every kind of sin. The church of Christ was originally organized to be a body of reformers ... The Christian church was designed to make aggressive movements in every direction - to lift up her voice and put forth her energies against iniquity in high and low places - to reform individuals, communities, and governments, and never rest until the Kingdom and the greatness of the Kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the saints of the most high God - till every form of iniquity is driven from the earth."

Let us now summarize our opening statements concerning revival and spiritual awakening.

- 1) Revival and spiritual awakening cannot be defined from a cultural perspective. Culture cannot create revival movements. Revival is based upon immutable biblical principals and this in turn affects both church and culture.
- 2) Revival is distinctive in that it embodies the sovereign movements of Christ on behalf of His church, in order to enhance her testimony in a given generation.
- 3) Spiritual awakening takes place among those who are lost in sin due to the relevance of an already revived church.

This is part one in a two part series by Jeff Ziegler on Revival and Spiritual Awakening.

Jeff Ziegler is president of Christian Evangelistic Endeavors, a ministry dedicated to bringing a great and mighty revival to the Church and spiritual awakening throughout the nations. C.E.E. sponsors Intensive Revival School, a two year discipleship training program designed to prepare students for the ministry. Revival Flame, a bi-monthly newsletter published by C.E.E., contains articles written by staff members and revivalists of old concerning revivals past and present. If you wish to receive Revival Flame, write to the following address:

Revival Flame
c/o Christian Evangelistic Endeavors, Inc.
35155 Beachpark Dr.
Eastlake, OH 44095

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Perfect Love and Revival

by Jeff Ziegler

The greatest weight and encumbrance to a revived Church displaying the glorious character of her all absorbing Bridegroom is the abject poverty of knowing and experiencing the perfect love of God.

When speaking of perfect love, one speaks of love as distinctly heavenly and set apart from earthly sentiment. Perfect love emanates from Christ alone and is to be shed abroad in our hearts. Perfect love demands a heavenly response to Him who first loved us. It is this all encompassing romance which promotes the permeating fragrance of Christ's supremacy throughout the earth.

"Mary took a pound of very costly, genuine spikenard ointment, and anointed the feet of Jesus, and wiped His feet with her hair; and the house was filled with the fragrance of the ointment" (John 12:3).

Perfect love moves far beyond the reach of human understanding - "the love of Christ which passes knowledge ..." (Ephesians 3:19). It is the highest sphere of love so often claimed and esteemed by the Church which in reality is the least obtained, misunderstood and abused attribute of God in our present age. For if perfect love were indeed manifest in all the splendor of Christ, there would be experientially within the Church a complete eradication of carelessness, prayerlessness, fearfulness, sloth and ease, backslidings, unholy affections, vanity, spiritual blindness, traditions of men, abasement of divine justice, lawlessness, and every vile rebellious thought which exalts itself against God.

Perfect love infused in our hearts is not the broad way of non-discerning human sentiment and unstable emotion which excuses and winks at ungodliness leading thousands down a comfortable, blinding path to eternal damnation.

Perfect love is the narrow way which leads to the straight gate of holiness where we are in union with our Lord and are changed from glory to glory into the image of Christ. Perfect love mingled with Christ's manifest character is the divine nourishment which animates the Church in glorious liberty to subdue iniquity and obtain full mastery over the power of sin.

It is in the state of perfect love that we may know unbroken fellowship with Christ exalted at the right hand of God and testify of that union upon the earth eclipsing fully the religious order and all that is in connection with it. Perfect love and the testimonies of holiness are eternally inseparable.

"And we have come to know and believe the love which God has for us. God is love, and the one who abides in love abides in God, and God abides in him. By this, love is perfected with us, that we may have confidence in the day of judgment; because as He is, so also are we in this world" (1 John 4:16,17).

Perfect love does not originate with our affections. Indeed, our affections - even when raised to a religious fervor - are always slanted and biased toward the justification of man and his ways rather than the exalted character of God. Perfect love flows from our enthroned sovereign Lord. The very lofty thought of our heavenly Father's perfect loving of Adam's helpless race stems from His unchanging nature which is, above all, holy!

Only a supremely holy God could love us in such a way so not to merely forgive us of our sins, but to judge and purge our earthly, sinful image that we may be brought into the blessed state of partaking of His holiness.

"For those whom the Lord loves He disciplines, And He scourges every son whom He receives" (Hebrews 2:6).

The way of perfect love is the way of holiness. It is the passionate affection of God Himself constraining those who are born of His Spirit, His sons, toward glorification and perfection (Hebrews 2:10-11). Perfect love romances and bears up into Christ's rich wounds in beauty glorified. Perfect love not only brings the saints to the place of His supremacy at the right hand of God, but pours down within our spirits the supremacy of His place, the upper world, His glorified, endless, perfect life whereby we may cry, ABBA, FATHER!

Beloved, do you know Him in this way? Do you know the love of God to bear you up into His presence and witness of that presence within your heart? Beloved, renounce the slothful, fearful, humanistic love which has hardened and calloused your heart against the perfectings of Christ. Release now the sentimental, deceptive denial of your sinfulness which treads underfoot the Son of God and counts the blood of the covenant to be an unholy thing. Yield your heart to be turned toward the irresistible flood tide of perfect love that you may behold your God and be transformed into His image.

"Whenever a man turns to the Lord, the veil is taken away. Now the Lord is the Spirit; and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty. But we all, with unveiled face beholding as in a mirror the glory of the Lord, are being transformed into the same image from glory to glory, just as from the Lord, the Spirit" (II Corinthians 3:16-18).

When this divine romance is realized within the Church, the sweet fragrance of revival will demonstrate the superiority of the Lord's testimony on the earth. There will be no more room for the religious man! His testimony will be fully abased by those who emanate the ministry of righteousness in the power of Christ's glorified life. To some the fragrance of revival is a savour of life unto life, to others a savour of death unto death.

God Himself will preserve those made perfect in love. The Lord shall release the same perfect love from our inner man toward all the same divinely inflamed brethren, and together one joint supplying the other we shall grow unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ.

As for the religious man - the one who is bound in the instability of humanistic and religious traditions - he will forever resist and seek to destroy the path of perfect love and its superior testimony of Christ's holiness. His way is the way of fearfulness.

The fearful, hypocritical, religious man always in a cowardly, darkened way resists revival. They are not made perfect in love! They cringe at perfect love's superior witness for all the power of natural man lies exposed and rotting in the face of His glory and grace.

But beloved, we are not of them who shrink back to destruction. Rather, the Spirit of adoption even now wishes to unfold in our hearts the way of perfect love that we may testify of the life of Christ which has been revealed to us.

Jeff Ziegler is president of Christian Evangelistic Endeavors, a ministry dedicated to bringing a great and mighty revival to the Church and spiritual awakening throughout the nations. C.E.E. sponsors Intensive Revival School, a two year discipleship training program designed to prepare students for the ministry. Revival Flame, a bi-monthly newsletter published by C.E.E., contains articles written by staff members and revivalists of old concerning revivals past and present.

If you wish to receive Revival Flame completely free of subscription cost, you may do so by writing to the following address:

Revival Flame
c/o Christian Evangelistic Endeavors, Inc.
35155 Beachpark Dr.
Eastlake, OH 44095

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Who Will Rule the Earth?

By Jeff Ziegler

8/91

"All the ends of the earth shall remember and turn unto the Lord,
And all the families of the nations will worship before Thee.
For the kingdom is the Lord's,
And He rules over the nations.
All the prosperous of the earth will eat and worship,
All those who go down to the dust will bow before Him,
Even he who cannot keep his soul alive.
Posterity will serve Him;
It will be told of the Lord to the coming generation.
They will come and will declare His righteousness
To a people who will be born, that He has performed it."

- Psalm 22:27-31

Notice the universal dimensions of Christ's rulership by virtue of His resurrection:

- * All the ends of the earth shall remember and turn to the Lord.
- * All the families of the nations (ethnic groupings) shall worship before Him.
- * He alone is the ruler among the nations.

Thus the resurrected Christ has rightful rule over all men, and all nations by the dynamic of His finished work upon death's tree, the cross. His resurrection is the key in advancing His reign upon the earth. The emphasis is upon the "FINISHED WORK." Christ need not perform any other act in order to have rightful rule over all the earth, His work is indeed finished!

The Apostle Paul, in Ephesians chapter one, echoes the prophetic nature of the 22nd Psalm giving definition and sinew to Christ's comprehensive victory along with its implications for the Church.

"That in the dispensation of the fulness of times He might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth even in Him ... And what is the exceeding greatness of His power toward us who believe, according to the working of His mighty power, which He wrought in Christ, when He raised Him from the dead, and set Him at His own right hand in the heavenly places, far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in the one to come. And He put all things under His feet, and gave Him to be the head over all things to the Church, which is His body, the fulness of Him who fills all in all" (Ephesians 1:10,19-23).

Ephesians depicts the triumphant Christ reconciling all things in heaven and earth. All power, rule, and authority, whether human institutions or spiritual wickedness in high places are beneath His feet, and this great victory is communicated to His Church as a witness of His supremacy!

In Psalm 72:7-11, we have further reinforcement of Christ's comprehensive reign in the earth. While this utterance is in reality a prayer of David for his son Solomon, it actually points by way of type to Christ's universal dominion over all the nations of the earth.

In His days may the righteous flourish,
And abundance of peace till the moon is no more.
May He also rule from sea to sea,
And from the River to the ends of the earth.
And let all kings bow before Him,
All nations serve Him.

Finally we turn to Psalm 110:1-3 to see the participation of the Church in spreading Christ's dominion making full application of His victory through the dynamic of revival.

The Lord says to my Lord:

"Sit at my right hand,
Until I make Thine enemies a footstool
for thy feet."

The Lord will stretch forth Thy strong scepter from Zion, saying:

"Rule in the midst of Thine enemies."

Thy people will volunteer freely in the day of Thy power;
In holy array, from the womb of the dawn,
Thy youth are to Thee as dew.

Again we have the picture of an exalted Christ at the right hand of the Father. Christ is seated, a position of rest, His work fully accomplished. From this position the rod of His strength (the Holy Spirit) is sent down from the plane of Christ's supremacy to a people (His Church) willing and voluntary in the day of His power. The purpose? To testify of the victory of Christ to all the ends of the earth, to make His enemies His footstool!

On the day of Pentecost, Peter's inspired sermon which depicted what was taking place, in the giving of the Holy Spirit, clearly shows the purpose of the Spirit's work when he quotes from Psalm 110 in Acts 2:32-35:

"This Jesus God raised up again, to which we are all witnesses. Therefore having been exalted to the right hand of God, and having received from the Father the promise of the Holy Spirit, He has poured forth this which you both see and hear. For it was not David who ascended into heaven, but He himself said:

"The Lord says to my Lord:

"Sit at my right hand,
Until I make Thine enemies a footstool
for thy feet."

Thus the rod of His strength (the Holy Spirit) is being given to the Church to subdue all of Christ's foes.

The question for you, dear reader, is found in the first part of the third verse of Psalm 110 - THY PEOPLE SHALL VOLUNTEER FREELY IN THE DAY OF THY POWER. Clearly the Lord is looking for a willing and voluntary people who will bow the knee and participate especially in prayer for Christ's purposes in the earth. Are you willing in the day of revival?

In conclusion, we find Christ in Psalm 2:6-9 inheriting the earth for His choice possession.

But as for Me, I have installed My King
Upon Zion, My holy mountain.
I will surely tell of the decree of the Lord:
He said to Me, "Thou art My Son,
Today I have begotten Thee.
Ask of Me, and I will surely give the nations as Thine inheritance,
And the very ends of the earth as Thy possession.
Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron,
Thou shalt shatter them like earthenware."

Notice Christ, though very much God, nevertheless is to ask the Father for His inheritance - worldwide rule. This is the high priestly role of our Christ who "EVER LIVETH TO MAKE INTERCESSION" (Hebrews 7:25). If the Son of God, the expressed image of the Father's glory is not exempt from this law of asking, how can the people, "willing in the day of His power," remain prayerless and neutered in regard to revival speeding Christ's rule throughout the earth!

The saints of the Most High God are not exempt from participation through intercession for God's purposes! I end with Paul's unqualified injunction to the Thessalonian church (1 Thessalonians 5:17). It is the marching orders for all saints in every generation for all time - "PRAY WITHOUT CEASING!"

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

What is Revival?

by Jay Rogers

One of the best known verses in the Bible is Habakkuk 2:14:

"For the earth shall be filled
With the knowledge of the glory of the Lord
As the waters cover the sea."

But there is a lesser known verse in Habakkuk:

"O Lord, I have heard thy speech and was afraid.
O Lord, revive thy work in the midst of the years
In the midst of the years make it known
In wrath remember mercy"
(Habakkuk 3:2).

Habakkuk's prayer is a necessary prerequisite for God's glory filling the earth. Before such a great awakening can take place there needs to be a great revival of prayer in the Church.

Revival ...

Ever since I have been a Christian, I have heard much about revival. I have heard people praying for revival and talking about revival. I have read many books concerning revival. Yet few of the Christians I have spoken with can claim to have experienced revival. It seems so elusive. The consensus is that there is a stirring taking place and many are anticipating a strong move of the Holy Spirit in the Church. There is going to be a revival in the land. But I have often wondered, "Do we really know what revival is?"

Psalms 85:6 says: "Wilt thou not revive us again: that thy people may rejoice in thee?"

Revival comes from the word "revive" which means literally "to live again" or "to come back to life." The lack of the presence of God in church meetings and the numerous problems in the church are seen to be evidence of the need for revival. But I often wonder - if we have never experienced revival, then how do we know what it is? And if we don't know what it is, then how can we be so sure that we want revival?

Apply this illustration to yourself. Revival means to come back to life. But this implies something more - to say that you need to come back to life is to say that you are dead. This is a startling revelation. Revival can only come when you admit that you are dead and far away from God. Are you in need of revival today? Are you really?

If you see yourself as being alive and yet sense that something is still lacking in your spiritual life, then it is the natural life, or the flesh, that still has to die.

"Self is the opaque veil that hides the face of God from us. It can only be removed in spiritual experience, never by mere instruction. We may as well try to instruct leprosy out of our system. There must be a work of God in destruction before we are set free. Let us remember that when we talk of rending the veil we are speaking in a figure, and the thought of it is poetical, almost pleasant, but in actuality there is nothing pleasant about it. It is never fun to die. To rip through the dear and tender stuff of which life is made can never be anything but deeply painful. Yet this is what the cross did to Jesus and it is what the cross would do to every man to set him free" (A.W. Tozer, The Pursuit of God).

How much of your own life is merely religious activity and how much of it is truly born of God? Do you allow the Holy Spirit to conduct your life? Or do you have your own agenda? You may be excelling spiritually compared to others, but without revival this is still a status quo experience. Even if you are above average compared to others, you are still very religious.

This revelation challenges everything that appears to be a move of the Holy Spirit in the Church. Although many appear to have a measure of the Presence of God in their lives, most Christians rely on the strength of their own flesh and much of their activity is devoid of the Presence of the Holy Spirit.

Before Revival Comes the Church Must Die

The contrast between a religious experience and true revival is seen in Luke 7:36-50. In this passage Jesus is invited to have dinner with Simon the Pharisee. A woman, who perhaps had been a prostitute, comes and stands behind Jesus holding an alabaster jar of perfume. She then sits at His feet weeping and begins to wet his feet with her tears, wiping them with her hair and kissing them. She pours perfume on his feet, weeping all the time.

Simon the Pharisee is content to have Jesus, a great prophet, at his table and hear his teaching. Perhaps he may be able to pick his brains for some interesting sermon material, or gain some insight into the scriptures. He is disturbed by this woman, a repulsive sinner, who is carrying on at Jesus' feet. To his dismay, Jesus doesn't seem to care and goes on teaching:

"Simon, two men owed money to a certain moneylender. One owed him 500 denarii, and the other owed him 50. Neither one of them had the money to pay him back so he canceled the debts of both. Now which one of them will love him more?"

Simon replied, "I suppose the one who had the bigger debt canceled."

"You have judged correctly," Jesus said.

Then he turned toward the woman and said to Simon, "Do you see this woman? I came into your home. You did not give me any water for my feet, but she wet my feet with her tears and wiped them with her hair. You did not give me a kiss, but this woman has not stopped kissing my feet since the time I came in. You did not put oil on my head, but she has poured perfume on my feet. Therefore, I tell you, her many sins have been forgiven - for she loved much. But he who has been forgiven little loves little."

The woman in this passage has no name. She is of no position in society; she has no reputation. Simon was a man of great reputation - a teacher among the Jews, God's chosen people. Yet the woman was more highly esteemed in Jesus' eyes.

Jesus turned to the woman and said, "Do you see this woman?" Jesus was able to praise the person of low esteem because she saw her desperate position in life. She humbled herself, lowering herself at Jesus' feet and shedding many tears. Her love for Jesus consisted of a great awareness of her need and a deep thankfulness for Jesus as her Savior.

Simon the Pharisee, on the other hand, was self-righteous. He had already arrived at a high position in life and did not perceive a great spiritual need in himself. He saw himself as already having great favor with God. Simon looked to Jesus solely for intellectual stimulation. Simon was absorbed by Jesus' teaching and neglected his great need for spiritual salvation. Jesus turned to Simon and rebuked him, "You did not wash My feet ... You did not give Me a kiss... You did not put oil on My head."

Now I ask you - be honest with yourself - which one of these people do you more closely resemble - Simon or the woman? When was the last time you truly wept before the Lord? When was the last time you truly thanked Jesus for redeeming your life from the pit? Are you like the sinful woman who bathed Jesus' feet with her tears? - Or are you like Simon who looked to Jesus to feed his intellect? Although his head was swollen with theology, his heart was shrunken and lukewarm.

The woman in this story brought an alabaster box of ointment. Back in those days perfume was very expensive - a person would have to spend a life's savings to buy enough perfume to anoint another person. The woman came with one purpose only - to worship Jesus. She poured her life out at his feet, then as she cleansed Him with her tears and hair, the fragrance of God came back upon her.

If you desire the fragrance of God in your life then you must spend time loving Jesus and pouring your life out to Him. God is not impressed with your natural talents or your intellect. The glossy veneer of religion is more repulsive to Jesus than the sin of a harlot. You may have three degrees and a colossal I.Q. but if you are not intimate with Him then you are dead and you need revival.

So, What Is Revival?

It is a realization of a great need for forgiveness, deep conviction of sin, followed by repentance and a fresh experience of joyful obedience. This experience begins with personal holiness and results in the transformation of society. A.W. Tozer has said, "Revival changes the moral climate of a community."

"Wilt Thou not revive us again:
That thy people may rejoice in Thee?"

The greatest characteristic of revival is the great joy found in the people of God for the work he has done in their lives. A revived people speak only of loving Jesus. They have a set of doctrines but these are merely primary teachings. They have moved on to a passionate love relationship with their Savior. Their lives are a testimony of his holiness.

Of course, it is important to receive biblically balanced teaching. But if you are like most Christians in America today, you have already soaked in enough teaching to save China. The great need for the Church today is not more teaching, but realization of need and conviction.

We have become like the church at Laodicea. Jesus beckons to us, "Behold I stand at the door and knock." Although we appear to be rich in God on the surface, in our hearts we have become miserable, wretched, poor, blind and naked. Many churches in America today are among the richest and most prosperous that have ever appeared on the face of the earth. And yet Jesus is pounding on the door! While many are excelling among their peers, few are changing the moral climate of our nation. Most spiritual experience remains within the four walls of a church building, but little emerges on the outside.

We need only to look to the great awakenings of past centuries to see that the Church has fallen from great heights. The men who led these great awakenings were ordinary men. They were intelligent, but they carried none of the distinguishing marks that accompany those who are capable of changing a nation. There is no money or fame here - no power or prestige. In fact, the greatest characteristic of these men was that they were consumed with a passionate love for Jesus Christ. They were humble men who loved the holiness of God. They were jealous of God's glory and refused to compromise with those who would lower the standard of His holiness. If we would only follow their example then the Church would be reinstated to a place of power and the world would be shaken by our testimony.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

The Untold Progress of the Gospel

By Dawson Lewis

Reprinted from the South African Forerunner

2/94

TODAY THE TRUE MESSAGE OF THE GOSPEL IS liberating people from every tribe and every tongue and every people group around the world. Here are a few of the many examples:

SAUDI ARABIA - 13-year-old Riyadh International Charismatic Christian Fellowship (RICCF) now has several thousand members from 12 nations, including Pakistan, India and at least 500 Saudis. This, in a country that publicly beheaded a Saudi evangelist in 1992.

IRAN - Despite 14 years of war and Islamic Fundamentalist revolution, or perhaps because of it, there has been an 800 percent increase in the number of converts to Christianity.

ALGERIA - Hundreds of Kabyle Berbers living in and around the Atlas mountains came to Christ in 1992 and an indigenous missions agency was established.

INDIA - Among the Gamit people in Guyurat, India, Church membership has grown from zero in 1980 to 60,000 today. In Bihar province, once known as the "graveyard of missions," one church baptizes 600 converts per month.

NEPAL - Nepal is a Hindu kingdom with harsh laws against the spread of Christianity. Converting to Jesus is punishable with 5 years in jail. Yet since the mid-1950's the number of Nepalese Christians has grown from near zero to around 150,000. Last Easter, 4,500 Nepalese Christians gathered in front of the National palace for a prayer and praise rally. At the April 1992 conference of the "Nepal Christian Fellowship" plans were laid to increase churches from 200 to 8,000 by the year 2000.

LAOS - Local pastor Khan Ohou Keohavong reports that church membership has increased from 5,000 to 20,000 in the last five years.

VIETNAM - So many highland tribes are converting to Christianity that in early 1992 a Vietnamese newspaper article concluded: "We don't know what is happening, but it is something called the 'Good News' religion."

CHINA - Officials in Henan Province declared in 1992, "It was you Christians who brought down the regimes in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union, but here in China we will stop you now!" In the last 10 years the number of Christians in Henan Province grew from 260,000 to about 600,000. In Szechuan Province, home to one out of every 40 people on earth, 2,000 new churches have been planted in the last three years despite government opposition.

MONGOLIA - A team of German missionaries saw 1,500 residents of the western town of Olgiy convert to Christ in less than two months.

AFRICA - The Assemblies of God, which had only 2,000 churches in 1970, grew to almost 14,000 churches in Africa by 1991. Some missions experts estimate that as many as 20,000 Africans are coming to Christ every day. One example is Bursino Faso, where Assembly of God membership has gone from 25,000 to 350,000 since 1970.

There are many other examples from North and South America, Europe, the former Communist Bloc, Australia and Oceania. But they all have one thing in common. From every race and economic class, from the Arctic Ocean to the Sahara, from Zaire's rain forest to the board rooms of Wall Street, men and women are serving Jesus with their whole lives. Christianity is the most wide spread ethnically diverse faith in the world.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

The Victorious Overcoming Church

By Jay Rogers

"Christ also loved the Church and gave Himself up for her; that He might sanctify her, having cleansed her by the washing of water with the word, that He might present to Himself the Church in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that she should be holy and blameless" (Ephesians 5:25-27).

Ever since the beginning of time, the Word of God has gone forth with power. In centuries past, holy men of God have shaken the foundations of the world and have altered the course of history through their mighty revival preaching. Men such as George Fox, Jonathan Edwards, John Wesley, George Whitefield, Charles Finney, William Booth and D.L. Moody all made an impact on their generation.

Although they appeared at first glance to be lone voices crying in the wilderness, the preaching of these men preceded the outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the masses. God's blessing went into the whole world through their lives - to change individuals, families, cities, governments and entire nations - and the increase of this blessing has not ceased.

The kingdom of God continues to advance forcefully in the earth today. This kingdom is going into the territory of the enemy and is pulling down the strongholds of darkness - and light is coming forth! As the kingdom of God moves forward, the glory of the Lord will be revealed and all the world will see it!

As we trace the advancement of Christ's victorious kingdom from the beginning, we will begin to see a divine plan unfold. We will begin to see that God has been preparing His Church for centuries. And we will begin to understand the glorious destiny that Jesus has for His Bride.

Pentecost

Beginning in an upper room in Jerusalem in 33 A.D., an infant Church began to proclaim the Word of God to the nations of the world. Having been endued with the power to be witnesses, the early Church brought the message of the Cross to individuals and also saw the power of the Gospel to transform entire cities within the Roman Empire.

By the year 300 A.D., the Church saw the Roman Empire begin to come under the rulership of Jesus Christ. Some compromised to escape the message of the Cross, however, and the Church lost its anointing and power of life in the Holy Spirit. Those in positions of Church authority began to look to the pleasures of riches and earthly power. What followed this demise was centuries of spiritual darkness. Those calling themselves by the name of Christ succumbed to idolatry and the Church became nothing more than a pagan institution.

Yet even during the Dark Ages there were a few who carried the light of the Gospel. Fiery evangelists, such as St. Francis of Assisi, who stirred all Italy and parts of Egypt and Spain, would appear sporadically to reclaim thousands for the kingdom of God. Others, such as Girolamo Savonarola, John Wycliffe, Jan Hus had the courage to attack the corruption of Church leadership of their day.

Revival Christianity Reappears

Following over a thousand years of spiritual darkness in Europe, the Protestant Reformation brought a rekindling of the true message of the Gospel to the world. It was the belief of the Reformers that the Church would experience great outpourings of the Holy Spirit on a consistent basis. It was the Holy Spirit Who gave them the grace to advance the kingdom of God in the world. Ultimately these outpourings would result in "a revival that never needed to be revived."

At this time the glory of the Lord would fill the whole earth and Jesus would return in the fulness of His kingdom. The Reformers looked forward to a day when the nations would stream into the kingdom of God. Wycliffe, Hus, Luther, Calvin, Knox, and Tyndale were just a few of the Reformers who held this view.

Another group of Reformers who greatly impacted Europe and America in the 1600s and 1700s were the Puritans. They believed that the whole world would someday come under the rulership of Jesus Christ. It was this vision that caused America to be founded.

The Puritans saw the New World as an unconquered kingdom in which to advance the Gospel. They saw the world as property of Christ to be cared for and cultivated by men. They saw themselves as soldiers in a war against Satan and all of human history as a progression toward the fulfillment of God's purposes in the earth. The Pilgrims who came to plant the first colony in America came for the glory of God and the advancement of the Christian faith.

The Great Awakening

During the First Great Awakening in the 1700s, Jonathan Edwards, John Wesley and George Whitefield all labored to see multitudes converted to Christianity through their mighty revival preaching.

Jonathan Edwards was the Congregationalist Minister who preached the Word in his home church in Northampton, Massachusetts. His ministry was the spark that caused the fire. He was initially responsible for the great revival that has become known as the Great Awakening. Edwards' disciples became known as the "New Lights," a generation of believers who saw a new order coming on the earth.

In the hearts of the New Lights, a promise was reborn. They looked forward to Christ's kingdom coming on the earth and to a day when all people would speak a common language of the heart. They found that just as they had been reborn, entire societies might do the same. Just as they had been severed from their own individual pasts, so, they believed, an entire nation might shed its former self and find joy and fulfillment.

At the same time, John Wesley, laboring in England, saw the decadent moral condition of his nation - and met it head on - as a great challenge. He believed in the overcoming power of the Gospel that is destined to conquer the world. John Wesley told his followers not to worry about gaining an audience when they preached. Rather he urged them: "Get on fire, and people will come to watch you burn!"

During his life, he wrote extensively, publishing 50 volumes of theology; 233 books on a variety of subjects including medicine, natural science, and literary criticism. Wesley traveled over 225,000 miles on horseback and preached 50,000 sermons. He did all this to advance the kingdom of God and hasten the return of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Another young man, who preached on both sides of the Atlantic and was a close personal friend of Wesley and an acquaintance of both Jonathan Edwards and Benjamin Franklin, was also used powerfully of God during the First Great Awakening. George Whitefield's success was due to his purity of heart and the simplicity of the gospel which he preached. He almost never strayed from telling his hearers of their sins, Jesus Christ, the Holy Spirit, the absolute need of repentance, faith and holiness.

But the Church of England did not love Whitefield. As churches began to close their pulpits to him, Whitefield went to the open places and lifted up his voice for Jesus Christ, preaching to thousands of sinners at a time - people who never frequented a church building.

Whitefield was, in his time, one of the most famous men in England and America. Everywhere he preached, thousands would come from miles around to hear a man on fire for God. He arose at 4:00 A.M. and delivered twelve messages each week! He was, by far, the greatest orator of his day.

He also wrote extensively, visited almost every town in England, Scotland and Wales, crossed the Atlantic seven times, preached in the cities of Boston, New York and Philadelphia, and traveled up and down the east coast of America raising money to build orphanages. The result of his life was seeing multitudes stream into the kingdom of God and seeing the transformation of American and English society.

The Second Evangelical Awakening

In the 1800s, revivals came more and more frequently, so much so that the first 60 years of that century has become known as the Second Great Awakening or the Great Evangelical Awakening. One of the great revival preachers of this time was Charles G. Finney. This is what Finney had to say about the progress of the kingdom of God in the earth:

"Now the great business of the Church is to reform the world, to put away every kind of sin. The Church of Christ was originally organized to be a body of reformers ... the Christian Church was designed to make aggressive movements in every direction - to lift up her voice and put forth her energies against iniquity in high and low places - to reform individuals, communities, and governments, and never rest until the kingdom and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High God - until every form of iniquity be driven from the earth."

This was the vision of the Second Great Awakening. Some of the most far reaching social changes that this country has ever experienced came out of this spiritual awakening. These social reforms included: the abolition of slavery, the women's suffrage movement, the temperance movement, advances in public education and care for the mentally ill.

The Church of this age had a mandate from heaven to advance the kingdom of God on the earth. The reformation of society was one of the results of this viewpoint. In fact, historians are almost unanimously in agreement that virtually all of the social reform movements of the 1800s had their roots in Christian revivals.

From the lives of the men who led the great awakenings of past centuries, we see a pattern emerging. Their success was due to a simple revelation about the kingdom of God - there is more to God's plan for our lives than just obtaining a blessing and securing a personal faith. God intends for His Church to make bold, violent aggressive movements against the forces of darkness and advance His domain into every area of human life.

This is a commitment that begins with personal holiness and ends in the transformation of society. A life of excitement and fulfillment awaits the true child of God.

The Untold Progress of the Gospel

What is the progress of the Gospel in the world at present? What is happening throughout the nations of the world today?

The two largest unevangelized continents of the world, Africa and Asia seemed unreachable just a short time ago, due to the satanic strongholds of Islam and communism. Yet today, these nations are being shaken by the power of God. There are great revivals happening in the South Pacific Islands as well as China, where the underground Church has grown so powerfully that there may be more Christians in China today than in America!

Africa has also been experiencing great outpourings of the Holy Spirit. Islamic countries such as Ghana and Nigeria are the sights of massive evangelistic thrusts where many are coming to know the Lord. When we look at the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, we see the kingdom of God forcefully advancing in many places. There is also revival in parts of Germany and Great Britain.

How does this compare with what is happening in the Church in America today?

In America today, there is more gospel preaching than ever before. It is estimated that the gospel is preached 10,000 times everyday on television and radio nationwide. There is more gospel literature than ever before, more gospel music, more evangelism and more fund raising to proclaim the gospel ... and still there is no revival.

We have more programming, more seminars, conferences and teaching tapes on than ever before ... and still there is no revival! We have more advertising and mass media communication geared for evangelism than ever before but much of it is in vain.

How can this be? What is it that we are lacking today?

The answer is simple: we are lacking the power of God that comes from knowing Him intimately. We must face this fact. Although we have heard many messages about God, we seldom hear any message from God. And yet this is what true preaching is: the voice of a man who has beheld the glory of God. Our only course of action is to humble ourselves and seek the face of God. And unless we do this, we have no right to claim that we know Him.

In the midst of much of the religiosity in America today, God is preparing a generation who will praise Him. God Himself is raising up an army of young people who will speak as prophets to their nation!

So how about you?

Will you dare to be different? Will you be a part of God's prophetic generation? Do you believe that the gospel has conquering power? Do you see yourself as part of a victorious, overcoming Church that will be bringing the gospel to the whole world?

Many will choose the easy path and will grow faint and weary in the battle that lies ahead, but a few will catch a vision of what God is doing in the earth today. They will be as bold as lions and they will lay their lives down to see that the gospel of the kingdom goes to every nation of the world. His glory means everything!

"But the people that do know their God shall be strong and do exploits" (Daniel 11:32).

Revival Accounts & Biographies:

Cane Ridge

The following account of the Cane Ridge Revival Meeting in August of 1801 is a reminder of the awesome movements of God's Spirit that our country has witnessed in the past. The scenario is a six-day camp meeting attended by 20,000 people! It was a remarkable event, since this occurred in the sparsely populated frontier. Among the thousands who were converted was a young skeptic, James B. Finley, who wrote this account:

"The noise was like that of Niagra. The vast sea of human beings seemed to be agitated as if by a storm. I counted seven ministers, all preaching on stumps, others in wagons and one standing on a tree which had in falling, lodged against another.... Some of the people were singing, other praying, some crying for mercy in the most piteous accents, while others were shouting most vociferously.

"While witnessing these scenes, a peculiarly strange sensation such as I had never felt before came over me. My heart beat tumultuously, my knees trembled, my lips quivered and I felt as though I must fall to the ground. A supernatural power seemed to pervade the entire mass of mind there collected.... I stepped up on a log where I could have a better view of the surging sea of humanity.

"The scene that had presented itself to my mind was indescribable. At one time I saw at least five hundred swept down in a moment as if a battery of a thousand guns had been opened upon them and then immediately followed shrieks and shouts that rent the very heavens."

This was the beginning of the Second Great Awakening. Many great personalities emerged from this outpouring, men and women such as Charles Finney, Peter Cartwright, Harriet Beecher Stowe, the Methodist Circuit Riders and the Baptist Revivalists. America's early westward movement was characterized by true Christianity.

Mendell Taylor, Exploring Evangelism, (Beacon Hill, 1964), p.142.

Finney

Charles G. Finney was one of America's foremost revivalists. Over half a million people were converted during his ministry in an age that offered neither amplifiers nor mass communication as tools for evangelism. Finney literally altered the course of American history with his mighty revival preaching. His ministry began after the following experience:

"Without any expectation of it, without ever having the thought in my mind that there was any such thing for me, without the recollection that I had ever heard the thing mentioned by any person in the world, the Holy Spirit descended upon me in such a manner that seemed to go through me, body and soul. I could feel the impression, like a wave of electricity, going through and through me.

"Indeed it seemed to come in waves of waves of liquid love; for I could not express it in any other way. It seemed like the very breath of God. I can recollect distinctly that it seemed to fan me, like immense wings. No words can express the wonderful love that was shed abroad in my heart.

"I wept aloud with joy and love; and I do not know but I should say I literally bellowed out the unutterable gushings of my heart. These waves came over and over me, one after the other, until I cried out, 'I shall die if these waves continue to pass over me.' I said, 'Lord, I cannot bear any more;' yet I had no fear of death."

Charles G. Finney, Memoirs, (New York, A.S. Barnes & Co., 1876), pp.20-21.

Moody

Dwight Lyman Moody, the great evangelist who labored in the cities of Boston, Chicago and New York, had an experience after ten full years of ministry which changed his life:

"My heart was not in the work of begging. I could not appeal. I was crying all the time that God would fill me with His Spirit. Well, one day, in the city of New York - oh, what a day! I cannot describe it, I seldom refer to it, it is almost too sacred an experience to name.

"Paul had an experience of which he never spoke for fourteen years. I can only say that God revealed Himself to me, and that I had such an experience of His love that I had to ask Him to stay His hand.

"I went to preaching again. The sermons were not different; I did not present any new truths, and yet hundreds were converted. I would not now be placed back where I was before that blessed experience if you should give me all the world - it would be as small as the dust of the balance."

W.R. Moody, The Life of D.L. Moody, (New York, Fleming H. Revell Company, 1900), p.149

Bartleman

Frank Bartleman experienced a revelation of Jesus Christ in Pasadena, California several months before the onset of the Azusa Street Revival. Bartleman was used mightily by God after this experience to write and preach as a leader in the early Pentecostal movement. His writing and preaching has also literally changed the course of world history:

"Then suddenly, without any premonition, the Lord Jesus revealed Himself to us. He seemed to stand directly between us, so close we could have reached out our hand and touched Him. But we did not dare to move. I could not even look. In fact I seemed all spirit. His presence seemed more real, if possible, than if I could have touched Him naturally. I forgot I had eyes or ears. My Spirit recognized Him.

"A heaven of divine love filled and thrilled my soul. Burning fire went through me. In fact my whole being seemed to flow down before Him, like wax before fire. I lost all consciousness of time or space, being conscious only of His wonderful presence. I worshipped at His feet. It seemed a veritable 'mount of transfiguration.' I was lost in the pure Spirit."

Frank Bartleman, Azusa Street, (Plainfield, NJ, Logos International, 1980), pp.16-18.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(dd161862f9164df98f62b726e9846241_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(758ebdf4629c903da74c2e079717ae32_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

The Cross of Jesus Christ

By John Christopher Rogers

"Just as man is destined to die once and after that to face the judgment, so Christ was sacrificed once to take away the sins of many people; and He will appear a second time, not to bear sin, but to bring salvation to those who are waiting for Him."1

During His life, He loved and taught and mended broken lives. Then He was nailed to a cross - the most brutal method of execution known in His day. But His death brought life to those who believed in Him.

For those who would forsake everything to follow Him, it became possible to have access to throne of heaven and to know God. Even now He is seated at the right hand of God where He is praying for us that we might know Him.

This man, of course, is Jesus Christ. His sacrificial death was prophesied in the Hebrew's Book of Psalms long before He came on the scene.

"Sacrifice and offering you did not desire,
but a body you prepared for me;
with burnt offerings and sin offerings
you were not pleased.
Then I said, "Here I am - it is written about me in the scroll -
I have come to do your will, O God."2

Most people living in the Western world are aware of the life of Jesus Christ and His death on the cross. But how many, I wonder, really understand the deep significance of that death and how it affects them?

The Bible tells of the life of Jesus and His death on a cross. For many this is an accepted fact. But why did Jesus have to die this way? In order to understand this, we need to examine the nature of man.

According to the Bible, God created man in His own image - sinless and perfect. He placed men and women in the world and commanded them to fill the earth and subdue it. He gave them the fruit of every seed yielding tree for food. He commanded them to take dominion over every living thing. Man's destiny from the beginning was to reign and rule with God.

But this perfect image was tainted early on - Satan, a fallen angel lurking in the disguise of a reptile, convinced the human race to rebel against God by disobeying the one commandment God had given them. In order to lure all mankind into sin, Satan cunningly appealed to the pride of life - "You will not surely die (if you disobey God); but you will be like God!"3

And this is the basic sin of man - to be his own god and to exalt his own will above God's will. God had a perfect plan from the beginning. God gave man a perfect purpose - a destiny to rule the earth! A loving God made man and that man decided of his own will to turn away from Him.

Man was created in the image of God, but something happened when sin entered the world. The deliberate choice to sin spawned something insidious in man that has enslaved the human race ever since. Every descendant of Adam has inherited this disease; the law of sin and death has appeared in every person born of the line of Adam. This disease is known as SIN NATURE.

Sin nature is simply the desire to do your own thing. It is the idolatry of SELF - an inborn separation from God which continually works death into us. The only way to be reconciled with God is to somehow get rid of this sin nature.

The Adamic Nature

"This is the written account of Adam's line:

"When God created man, he made him in the likeness of God. He created them male and female; at the time when they were created, he blessed them and called them 'man.' When Adam lived 130 years, he had a son in his own likeness, in his own image; and he named him Seth."4

Notice that although God created man in His own likeness, when Adam had a son he was in his (Adam's) own likeness, in his own image. Many people believe that we are all created in the image of God. This is not the case! We are all born into the image of Adam.

Only when we are born-again are we recreated into the image of God. This is why Jesus had to be born of a virgin; when Jesus was born, the line of Adam was broken. He was not born of Adam; He was born of God. Jesus did not have an adamic, sin loving nature ruling His life; He had a God-like, obedient nature.

So what is the nature of man?

"There is none righteous, not even one;
there is no one who understands,
no one who seeks God.
All have turned away,
they have together become worthless;
there is no one who does good,
not even one ...

For all have sinned and have fallen short of the glory of God."5

The problem with man is that he is a sinner. Not only does he do sinful acts but he is the chief agent of evil in the world. It is impossible for man to change - not through psychology, not through the New Age movement, not through positive thinking - sin is inherent.

Sin is a part of your genetic code (so to speak). If you don't believe this, just try to stop sinning! This, you will find, is more difficult than easy, because our very sin nature compels us to hellish deeds.

The Atonement - a covering for sin

When sin entered the world, there needed to be atonement.

Atonement is a theme that is repeated many times in the Bible in both the Old and New Testaments. Atonement in Hebrew is kaphar. It means literally - a covering. When Adam and Eve - the first man and woman mentioned in the Bible - first sinned, God provided a covering for their shame. God made garments of skin for Adam and his wife and clothed them. These animals were slaughtered and were substitutes for punishment.

All throughout the Old Testament the blood of animals was used for atonement. "For the life of the creature is in the blood, and I have given it to you to make atonement for yourselves on the altar; it is the blood that makes atonement for one's life."⁶ The law's penalty for sin was death. However, in God's great love and mercy, He provided a substitute. The bloody sacrifice of animals became a "covering" for sin throughout the Old Testament.

Abel's sacrifice was "more excellent" than Cain's because the blood was shed from the best of his flocks. God's warning to Cain, "sin is crouching at your door; it desires to have you but you must master it," speaks of man's problem of sin and God's solution of atonement.

Noah became an heir because he alone of all the men of the earth had faith in God and knew of His atoning sacrifice. Noah built an ark which speaks to us of God's atonement. The ark was the only vessel able to save him from God's judgment on the world.

Noah covered the ark - inside and out - with pitch. It is interesting to note that the word translated "pitch" in Hebrew is phonetically identical to the word for atonement. The words used are kophar and kaphar. The pitch, the atonement, was designed to keep out the waters of judgment and to make Noah safe within. That is what the blood did also - it restrained the judgment of God from reaching the occupants of the ark, and made them safe in spite of the fact that God was destroying the world outside. ⁷

The same pattern is repeated over and over. Abraham met King Melchizedek and offered sacrifice. Later, he was even willing to sacrifice Isaac, his only son, but God spared him and in his place provided a male lamb with a crown of thorns.

Moses was given the design for the Tabernacle, an open tent where the priests of Israel were able to atone for the sins of the children of Israel day after day. These sacrifices were necessary but they were only a shadow of something greater to come. The blood of animals was an imperfect sacrifice (hardly a fitting substitute for a human being!) These were only types pointing to a perfect sacrifice made "once for all," the blood of Jesus Christ the Great High Priest.

Jesus Christ: The Great High Priest

In the Old Testament, the blood is defined as the life of a man; the two are synonymous. Man must sacrifice his life, bear the penalty of his sin, and surrender himself entirely to God before God could dwell in him with His New Life.

The Tabernacle was an illustration for the Hebrew people pointing the way to a more perfect sacrifice - the body of Jesus Christ. Animal sacrifices were never able to clear the consciences of the worshippers. What man could not do for himself, the Lord Jesus, the Son of Man, did for him. He shed His blood, He gave His life in entire surrender to the will of God as a satisfaction of the penalty of sin.

Under the Old Covenant we see the blood of sheep, goats and bulls being shed day after day for the sins of the Hebrews. These were merely a reminder of sin. Under the New Covenant, however, we see Jesus Christ the Great High Priest who shed His blood for man while he was yet a sinner. This sacrifice was final, once for all, and it was able to cleanse us completely from all sin.

When Jesus Christ died on the Cross, the curtain in the Jewish temple was supernaturally torn in two.⁸ This signified that He had entered into the "Holy of Holies" which is in heaven. The New Covenant guarantees for us a High Priest, holy and blameless, who will always live to intercede for us.

The law of the Old Covenant and the atonement serve only to remind us of our sin; but Jesus came to take away our sin.

The Power in the Blood

At some point, you may have asked - "How could something that happened almost 2000 years ago possibly affect me today?" Does the Blood shed at Calvary, a hill in a distant country, many centuries ago still have power in the present day?

As we are dealing with spiritual things, it is necessary to let God birth this revelation in our hearts. It is impossible, with mere human thought, to fathom the mysteries of "the Holy of Holies" - God's dwelling place in heaven - and few people have attempted understand these mysteries which are outlined in the Book of Hebrews.

We think of the shedding of the Blood of Jesus as a distant event, but it is present and real and it available to us today through the Holy Spirit. Throughout the Old Testament, the blood of a man was linked with the life and spirit of a man. So, in the New Testament, the Blood of Jesus is linked with His Eternal Life and Spirit.

The Blood and The Eternal Spirit are bonded together in the life of Christ. They are one. The shedding of His Blood was brought about by the Eternal Spirit and the Spirit lived and worked in that Blood. As a result, when the blood was shed it did not die and decay as a dead thing - No! The Blood was taken up into heaven when Jesus gave up His Eternal Spirit to the Father.

The Blood abides as a living reality - in "the Holy of Holies" - as it exercises its divine authority from heaven today. The Blood of Jesus abides as an eternal sacrifice for sin. Jesus Christ Himself entered the Holy of Holies once for all by the means of His own Blood. The Blood will manifest its power in us because the Eternal Spirit works in it and through it.

The Blood shed at Calvary does not merely "atone" for (cover) our sins. It does much more than that! The Blood alone possesses the power to cleanse us of our sins and enables us to serve the Living God. "How much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God."9

Many people believe that Jesus died for their sins. This is true, but something more is required - Has the Blood of Jesus truly set you free from the law of sin and death? Have you experienced the Blood? Truly experienced it? - or is it just a legal acceptance - you believe but there has been no visible change in your life?

Many say that although we are redeemed by the Blood of Jesus, we still "sin every day in thought, word and deed." This belief is a shallow view of the Atonement. God did not send His own Son to die for us as a mere "covering" for our sins. Although this is a great thing, He did much more than that!

Jesus Christ is not interested in forgiving you every single time you sin! He is more interested in breaking that horrible sin nature that controlled your life. If you think of yourself as merely a "poor, wretched sinner saved by grace," then you have missed the point entirely! You have made Jesus Christ, the expressed image of the glory of God, into nothing more than a "better cow!"

Jesus did not die for your individual acts of sin - He died to break the power of sin nature in the lives of those who follow Him to the Cross. We must cease to think in terms of our individual acts of sin and concentrate instead on the revelation God has given to us in the Cross - God sent His own Son to die and break the power of sin - "once for all" - He is asking us to accept His forgiveness once for all, and to put away, to eradicate, to completely destroy the sin nature.

Jesus came to set us free from our sins not in our sins. If you haven't experienced this today then you need not only to come to the Cross and look at it - but also get on it.

Have you done this?

Identification

How can I die? It is true that I cannot literally die on a cross to crucify my sin nature - so how can I be crucified with Christ? Dying to sin and self is accomplished through IDENTIFICATION. "I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live, yet not I, but Christ lives in me."10

When Jesus Christ died on the Cross, I went up there with Him, not only my sins, but my whole life, my thoughts desires, emotions and will. When Jesus went into the tomb, I went in there with Him. I died to sin and self. But when Jesus rose from the dead - I rose from the dead! He gave me new life through the Spirit.

"Therefore walk after the Spirit and you will not fulfill the desires of the sinful nature ... Those who belong to Christ Jesus have crucified the sinful nature with its passions and desires. Since we live by the Spirit, let us keep in step with the Spirit."11

"Put to death, therefore, whatever belongs to your earthly nature: sexual immorality, impurity, lust, evil desires and greed, which is idolatry. Because of these, the wrath of God is coming."12

All this is accomplished through identification with the death, burial and resurrection of Jesus Christ. The Bible tells us what to do with the works of the flesh - mortify them, put them to death, completely destroy them! It is vital that this be understood. The Bible also tells us of the consequences of treating the Blood of the New Covenant as a mere covering to excuse sin.

"If we deliberately keep on sinning after we have received the knowledge of the truth, no sacrifice for sins is left, but only a fearful judgment and of raging fire that will consume the enemies of God. Anyone who rejected the law of Moses died without mercy on the testimony of two or three witnesses. How much more severely do you think a man deserves to be punished who has trampled the Son of God underfoot, who has treated as an unholy thing the blood of the covenant that sanctified him, and who has insulted the Spirit of grace?"13

Since we have the availability of the Eternal Spirit, it is easier to obey God under the New Covenant than under the Old. However, the punishment for disobeying under the New Covenant is even more severe. We must always remember that true salvation can only come through an experience with the Cross. It is the only message that can bring New Life.

Although God is full of infinite compassion, love, mercy and grace, He is also a holy God and cannot allow a single sin to go unpunished. The exceeding sinfulness of man must be viewed in light of the holiness of God. In the Cross we find the love of God for man but also his intense hatred for sin. If you truly love God, you will hate all sin. You will desire above all else to be made holy by His Blood - not merely forgiven but also cleansed.

The New Cross

In an effort to comfort people struggling with sin and to gain a following, many ministers have fallen prey to the message of "The New Cross." Author A.W. Tozer describes the deficiency of this message:

"The new cross does not slay the sinner; it redirects him. It gears him into a cleaner and jollier way of living and saves his self-respect. To the self-assertive it says, 'Come assert yourself for Christ.' To the egoist it says, 'Come and do your boasting in the Lord.' To the thrill-seeker it says, 'Come and enjoy the thrill of the abundant Christian life.'

"The idea behind this kind of thing may be sincere, but this kind of sincerity does not save it from being false. It misses completely the whole message of the cross. The cross is a symbol of death. It stands for the abrupt, violent end of a person. God salvages the individual by liquidating him and then raising him to newness of life.

"How can this idea then translate itself in life? Simply the sinner must go on to forsake himself. Let him cover nothing, defend nothing, excuse nothing. Let him not seek to make terms with God, but let him bow his head before God's stern displeasure and acknowledge himself worthy to die."14

This false teaching of "The New Cross" has wreaked havoc all across our nation. This message seeks to comfort rather than convict. People are told, "Just say this sinner's prayer and accept God's forgiveness and grace." There is one major element missing from this message. What must we do to be saved? - REPENT! Any message that does not require repentance from sin and a resulting outward change is a Cross-less message and is false.

Understand that the requirement for holiness is not legalism. Jesus Christ is not so concerned with individual acts of sin as He is with sin nature. When sin nature is destroyed, individual acts of sin will disappear. If we stumble in obedience and commit individual acts of sin we can seek forgiveness. However, sin nature must be eradicated. The people of God must be moving from glory to glory and be changing from moment to moment into the image of God.

This message is currently spurned by many. But the day is coming when the presence and the glory of God will be revealed in His people. Even now a great shaking and purging is taking place. The end result will be a holy people. The message of the Cross is a hard message - but it is the only true message and the only one that will make a difference in the world today.

Do not be deceived by those who say that it is impossible to live a holy life. The Gospel message is very simple and clear - forsake your life and cling to the Cross. It is your only hope.

"So do not throw away your confidence; it will be richly rewarded. You need to persevere so that when you have done the will of God, you will receive what He has promised. For in just a very little while,

"He who is coming will come and will not delay.
But my righteous one will live by faith.
And if he shrinks back,
I will not be pleased with him.

"But we are not of those who shrink back and are destroyed, but of those who believe and are saved."15

1 Hebrews 9:27,28 2 Psalm 40:6-8 3 Genesis 2:16-17

4 Genesis 5:1-3 5 Romans 3:10-23 6 Leviticus 17:11

7 M.R. De Haan, M.D., The Tabernacle, (The Zondervan Publishing Co., Grand Rapids, 1955), p. 157

8 Luke 23:44-46 9 Hebrews 9:14 10 Galatians 2:20

11 Galatians 5:16,24,25 12 Colossians 3:5,6

13 Hebrews 10:26-29 14 A.W. Tozer, "The Old Cross and the New" 15 Hebrews 10:35-39

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

The Strategic Imperative for Unity

By John D. Beckett

Chairman of the Board, Intercessors for America

8/92

Last fall I attended a "solemn assembly" of pastors and church group leaders, based on a pattern found in Joel 2. During the three days of the assembly, which was accompanied by fasting and much prayer, reconciliation took place and many damaged relationships were restored.

More recently, several from this assembly regathered, this time on a site overlooking the juncture of two of Ohio's beautiful rivers. Exactly 175 years earlier to the day, a hearty pioneer had arrived by horseback from New England and decided these rivers provided the ideal location for a frontier settlement, and a town was born. With one heart and voice, we lifted up strong prayers for the area, asking God to displace spiritual strongholds and flood our community with His grace and mercy.

I see an important link between the solemn assembly and our territorial prayers. We needed right relationships to pray effectively. Our impact was rooted in our unity. But such unity is only beginning in our area. Satan has successfully used his time-tested arsenal of accusation, deception, turf-building and outright lies to divide and weaken us. He knows that a divided house cannot stand. He trembles at the prospect of a Church that is walking in submission to the Head and in love and forgiveness with each other. I believe this is why the New Testament makes clear that unity is not an option.

Our first encounter in the Scriptures with the early Church is at a prayer meeting, where they were all together in one accord. This was the context into which the Holy Spirit was poured out. Later we see them breaking bread from house to house, taking their meals together with gladness and sincerity of heart. They enjoyed each other's company.

Paul continually urged unity among believers, emphasizing that by one Spirit we are all baptized into one body. He admonished us to grow up in all aspects into Him, who is the head, even Christ, from whom the whole body is fitted and held together. He exhorted us to agree, that there be no divisions among us, and that we be made complete in the same mind. He pressed the men to pray, lifting up holy hands, without wrath and dissension. He described a Church in all her glory, having no spot or wrinkle. I once heard a pastor remind us the Lord is coming back for a beautiful bride, not a nagging wife!

Peter said that all should be harmonious, sympathetic. He spoke of us as living stones, being built up into a spiritual house for a holy priesthood. James urged us to confess our sins to one another, and pray for one another, so that we might be healed.

So compelling was the idea of unity that Jesus petitioned His Father that his followers might all be one, even as He and the Father were one. He spoke of the power that would be released through a united church: "Again I say to you, that if two of you agree on earth about anything that they may ask, it shall be done for them by My Father who is in heaven." The Greek word translated "agree" is sumpheneo, literally to sound together, or be in harmony. From this root we get the word symphony. Sumpheneo is so essential in a fine orchestra that a skilled conductor will detect even a single note that is out of place and speak firmly to the errant musician.

Our Heavenly Father is the conductor of the earthly orchestra called the Church. Whether it's a duet, a small ensemble, or a full-scale symphony, He wants us in harmony. Only then will we produce the clear sound that engages the energy of heaven itself, which in turn will change the destiny of communities and nations. This is the strategic imperative for unity.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Love blows the trumpet of HOLINESS!

By Keith Johnson

The God we serve is awesome in holiness!

"Who is like unto thee, O Lord, among the gods? Who is like unto thee glorious in holiness, fearful in praise, doing wonders?" (Exodus 15:11)

"Who shall not fear thee, O Lord and glorify thy name? For thou only art holy; for all nations shall come and worship before thee; for thy judgments are made manifest" (Revelation 15:4).

"Exalt the Lord our God and worship at his holy hill; for the Lord our God is holy" (Psalms 99:9).

In examining the subject of holiness, the order of topics I shall pursue is the following:

- I. What is the holiness of God?
- II. The call to holiness
- III. Why holiness?
- IV. Some hindrances to holiness
- V. Some concluding remarks

What is the holiness of God?

"It is the highest and most all embracing of the attributes of God."¹

The very word "holy" has come down from heaven. Isaiah and John tell us of what they have seen and heard. They speak of heavenly realities - of cherubim and seraphim - of living creatures! The God they saw was not just holy - but He was HOLY, HOLY, HOLY! This was their eternal message to mankind - God is three times holy!²

The Apostle John perceives something of the holiness of God when he says, "God is light and in him is no darkness at all"³ None at all! No sin or wickedness - only pure light and perfect holiness! What fellowship does light have with darkness? None at all! A holy God cannot have fellowship with sin.

Wrong views about holiness are generally traceable to wrong views about human corruption. So holy was God and so wicked was man that God would rather have sent his own Son to die rather than let sin reign! The plain truth is that a right knowledge of sin lies at the root of all saving Christianity. If we don't understand what sin is then how can we repent and feel sorry for our sins? If we don't understand that sin separates us from God then how can we be reconciled to Him?

I am convinced that the first step toward obtaining a higher knowledge of holiness is to realize the awful sinfulness of sin. When we see our sins the way that God sees them, as totally hateful, then we will cry out to God for deliverance. Then and only then can His wonderful grace have its full effect upon us. His blood will not only cover our sins - it will also wash them away! This is His joy - to save us and cleanse us with His precious blood. The result of this great work is holiness!

The Call to Holiness

But just as He who called you is holy, so be holy in all you do: "Be holy, because I am holy."³ The holiness of God is His greatest attribute. When we read, "Be holy," what is our reaction? How do we respond? Many view this command negatively with a slavish mentality. But this should not be the case! It is God's desire to share with us, His people, the greatest thing He has: His holiness!

Just as the athlete pursues excellence in his training and attains a certain degree of satisfaction and accomplishment, so it is for us, the children of God. We should approach God's call to holiness in a positive light knowing that it is a great privilege to be saved by grace and washed in His blood. We should rejoice that we are partakers of His divine nature - to be holy just as he is holy.

God calls every Christian to a life of holiness. This call is not merely for a "select few" - there are no special categories of saints who may be holy. It is not just for leaders and "super-spiritual" people. No! - He calls all to be holy!

Why Holiness?

J.C. Ryle, the famed Bishop of Liverpool from 1880 to 1900, once wrote: "Where there is no sanctification, there is no regeneration and where there is no holiness of life, there is no new birth. This is no doubt a hard saying but it is a simple Bible truth."⁴

So why holiness?

Holiness of life is a "must" because it is the only acid test of true Christianity. This is a point that is all but forgotten by the modern church. "If we can get someone to say a prayer and join the church," they say, "we've done our job!" This is a shallow view of the work of evangelism compared with all the great moves of God throughout history and the ministries of the men who have led these movements.

John Wesley, for instance, preached the gospel to the poor and wretched - the outcast of society. He preached the free grace of God and salvation through the blood of Jesus Christ by faith. But that was not all he preached: "Wesley followed up conversion by demanding that it must be confirmed by changed habits of life."⁴

So why holiness?

Let me explain - a Christianity Today poll of Americans over the age of 18 found that 94% of those polled believed in God. Furthermore, 45% said that personal faith in Christ is the only hope of heaven. Church membership rated at 67%. Half of these members polled attended church at least monthly. Another survey found 70 million Americans claiming to be born-again, almost one-third of America! It would seem evident by these statistics that we live in a Christian nation - but do we?

The theologian Reinhold Niebar warned: "take no satisfaction in the prevailing religiosity of our nation. Much of it is a perversion of the Christian gospel."⁵

Why? - Because of the watered-down message devoid of holiness that has gone out to the masses! Dietrich Bonhoeffer comments on this deficient gospel:

"Cheap grace is the deadly enemy of our Church. Cheap grace means grace without price; grace without cost! The essence of grace, we suppose, is that the account has been paid in advance; and, because it has been paid, everything can be had for nothing.

"Cheap grace means grace as a doctrine, a principle, a system. It means forgiveness of sins proclaimed as general truth, the love of God taught as the Christian "conception" of God. An intellectual assent to that idea is held to be of itself sufficient to secure remission of sins.

"Cheap grace means the justification of sin without the justification of the sinner. Grace alone does everything, they say, and so everything can remain as it was before. Cheap grace is the preaching of forgiveness without requiring repentance.

"The price we are having to pay today in the shape of the collapse of the organized Church is only the inevitable consequence of our policy of making grace available to all at too low a cost. Our humanitarian sentiment made us give that which was holy to the scornful and unbelieving. We poured forth unending streams of "grace." But the call to follow Jesus in the narrow way was hardly ever heard.

"Cheap grace has turned out to be utterly merciless to our evangelical church. This cheap grace has turned out to be utterly disastrous to our own spiritual lives. Instead of calling us to follow Christ, it has hardened us in our disobedience.

"Deceived and weakened, men felt that they were strong now that they were in possession of this cheap grace - whereas they had in fact lost the power to live the life of discipleship and obedience. The word of cheap grace has been the ruin of more Christians than any commandment of works."⁶

We must never forget that the grace of God is holy! We must once again preach and teach the whole gospel. We must tell the truth!

So why holiness?

If Christianity is ever to be restored to a place of power in America, then the truth about God's holiness must once again be lifted up to its rightful place. The message of God's holiness is needed to save the masses in America from deception!

Some Hindrances to Holiness

The following are a list of reasons that most people fail to seek the holiness of God thus missing out on His greatest desire for their lives:

1. One may not seek after God's holiness because: he fails to recognize its great value.

To him holiness is viewed as something that is too "legalistic" or "too intense." These people have never come to the realization that God desires to give us his holiness, so that we may be partakers of His divine nature.

The great value of God's holiness is found in His call to each one of us. This calling also involves many great promises.

"Having therefore these promises dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit perfecting holiness in the fear of God."⁷

What motivates you in your walk with God? I hope that it is not fear or legalism! God desires to motivate you toward holiness by His love.

2. One may not seek after God's holiness because: he has heard an inadequate definition of holiness.

A pastor stands before his church or perhaps before a television camera and says: "The word holiness means 'set apart,'" and he's right! But surely the word implies much more than that! Usually the people who hear such a definition walk away from the service with a big question mark in their heads. "Separate from what?"

"Holiness, a term... meaning separate from the ordinary or profane, also in Hebrew and Greek 'holy' implies connection with God or the divine. Thus God is holy and people, things and actions may be holy by association with God. Holiness may also include the idea of consecration to God and purity from what is evil and improper... In general, the Christian way of life derives from God and so is holy. Consequently, the community must avoid sin and evil and anything that would compromise its holiness and closeness to God."⁸

Don't be afraid to call a spade a spade - to be holy means to be set apart from "sin" unto God!

3. One may not seek holiness of life because of a prevailing teaching that places human beings in a position so weak by nature that they are unable, with or without God's help, to be holy.

"I mean ... nobody's perfect," people say. "We're only human ... we have to sin a little bit every day!"

A.W. Tozer has commented on this sad state of affairs: "Our moral helplessness is hammered into us in sermon and song until we wilt under it and give up in despair."⁹

There are no two ways about it, either we can or cannot please God. If we cannot, then we should not worry, for we are not morally responsible. But if we can but will not, then we are guilty and are deserving of God's punishment. Does God command anything which is impossible? No! Therefore, it is possible to live a holy life that is pleasing to God.

4. Another reason people lack the determination and desire for God's holiness is: the teaching of "theological holiness."

This teaching is usually communicated along these lines: "When you get saved, you get holy. There is nothing more that you can do, so just rest. Don't be concerned about living in sin - in God's eyes, you are already holy."

This teaching comes from a warped view of the doctrine of justification. The Bible does teach us that we are justified at conversion. Justification, as used in scripture, means to "declare or cause to appear innocent or righteous" (Deut. 25:1); "to reckon righteous" (Romans 4:2-8); "not to impute iniquity" (Psalms 32:2).

Yes, we are justified - just as if we never sinned - at conversion. But remember ... this is only one part of our salvation. God will not give us the one (justification) without the others! "Justification is a change in my standing before God; regeneration is a change in my nature; adoption is a change in my position; and sanctification means a change in my character and conduct."¹⁰

These are all separate aspects of salvation but all of these operate as one. This is, briefly stated, the plan of salvation. It is one thing to become a "Christian" and claim to be justified, but it is quite another thing to live the Christian life of sanctification. The word "sanctification" holds no strange meaning; it means "to make holy" or "consecrate" a place, thing or person to God.

Since holiness is primarily the attribute of God, what is sanctified is removed from "profane" or "common" use and is reserved for the Lord. Sanctification is not a "passive gift." Christians must live out their lives in a holiness that reflects what they have received.¹¹

J.C. Ryle once said; "Tell me not of your justification, unless you have also some marks of sanctification. Boast not of Christ's work for you, unless you can show us the Spirit's work in you."¹²

Don't be deceived by the compromising voice of religiosity! Without holiness no one will see the Lord!

A holy man will seek to be of one mind with God. He will love what He loves and hate what He hates. He will shun every known sin. He will walk after the Spirit and not after the flesh. He will strive to be like Jesus in everything he does. He will walk the path of love and kindness toward his brothers and sisters. In short, he will live his life in obedience to the written word of God.

Some Final Remarks

Do you hunger for more of Jesus? Then run to Him, leave everything behind and go to Him just the way you are. You will find all that you need in Him! He will be your holiness. Do not try to make yourself holy. Many people have tried, struggling and laboring, making resolutions, only to collapse under the weight of the Law.

Remember ... without Christ you can do nothing. Allow His work on the cross to change you. Let His love motivate you. Commune with Him, love Him, worship Him! His desire is to clothe you with His holiness. Will you be holy?

It is time to lift the standard of holiness higher than it has ever been lifted before! Don't settle for the second rate, lukewarm, compromising kind of "Christianity" that is so prevalent today! God has called you to be holy. You were saved and called with a holy calling. What will you do? Will you be holy?

And remember ... it is love that blows the trumpet of holiness!

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

1958 Classic, "Why Revival Tarries," Predicted the Liberation of the Communist Bloc

8/90

World renowned evangelist, Leonard Ravenhill, in his book, Why Revival Tarries, predicted the downfall of communism in 1958. Ravenhill, whose outdoor evangelistic crusades in England often drew traffic stopping crowds, began to call Christians to demonstrate the truth and power of the gospel over 30 years ago.

Prophesying a worldwide awakening which would galvanize the power of the Church and result in a great harvest of souls, Ravenhill foresaw three specific events which would serve as signposts for the beginning of this revival.

These signposts included (1) the dissolution of "organized systems" of religion in God's Church, (2) the sudden appearance of prophets bringing words of deliverance to God's people, and (3) the precipitation of revival in China, the Soviet Union, and Germany which would bring an end to communism.

Speaking of the demise of religiosity in the Church, Ravenhill predicted: "When God-given heaven sent revival does come, it will undo in weeks the damage that blasphemous Modernism has taken years to build. By the gale of the Spirit the deceptive doctors of divinity will see swept away the house which they built upon the sand."

The advent of the prophetic ministry was foretold as appearing suddenly in fulfillment of Joel 2 and Malachi 3: "Ten minutes before John the Baptist arrived - no one knew he was there. As it was, so it will be. God will get some man's ear and heart and will. Men, hidden in secret at this very moment will utter soon, in the Spirit's might, the burning truths that this people must hear."

"At the operation of the Spirit," Ravenhill said, communism will "bend as corn before the wind. The Kremlin will tremble at the news of a supernatural operation in China, Russia, Germany, etc. - lands scorched with the fire of militant Communism. For one reason, they need it so greatly; for another, our free nations need to be provoked as Jonah was with Nineveh."

These three events, according to Ravenhill, would be a precursor to a worldwide awakening.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Will We Get the Message?

by Bob Muni
10/89

Recently a team of researchers led by Dr. Ralph Neighbor conducted a survey in New Zealand. They asked people: "How would you describe the apparent condition of the Church?" The answers: "Irrelevant, unheard, ineffective, impotent ..." Strong words!

We may not like the above description, but the facts are hard to ignore. The very people we are called to reach, the world, have responded with a negative and unpleasant message. It would be easy to give way to pious platitudes and self-righteous remarks. As human beings we would rather convince ourselves that they are wrong, they don't understand, they are just not one of us. It might be tempting but it would be wrong.

We need to take a look at ourselves through the eyes of those we are trying to reach. The lessons might be painful as we see ourselves through their eyes. If we have ears to hear we might benefit immensely from what is being said and become more effective in our mission.

In Matthew 5:13-6, Jesus likens the Church to the salt of the earth and the light of the world. We are exhorted to be full of flavor as salt causing people to be thirsty for the source of our life. Our lives must be as a light open for all to see, set on a hill, our good works causing people to glorify our Father in heaven.

We are warned also, that if the salt loses its flavor and the light is hidden, we become good for nothing and easily trampled under foot. This sounds a lot like the description of the Church in the survey, doesn't it? Irrelevant, unheard, ineffective, impotent ... these words describe a savorless salt and a light that has been hidden.

Let us examine several reasons why the salt has become tasteless to the lost and the light has grown dim to the world. In viewing the problem, we will also see some of the solutions.

The Salt Has Been Kept In The Shaker

Christian activities have consumed so much of people's lives that they have no time and little energy to make or have an impact in the world. Salt is most useful when it has been poured out of the shaker.

Christianity has been practiced in the midst of our "holy huddles." There is a lack of Christian energy being expended on reaching the lost. We are using it all up at our gatherings.

Jesus has commanded us to go - to bring the kingdom of God with us to a lost world. We have instead been trying to bring the world to Christian meetings. We have been seen as irrelevant because Christians have been nowhere to be seen.

The Power Of The Cross Has Been Diluted

Compromise in standards of holiness and biblical purity has allowed the people we are supposed to reach to ask: "How is your life different from mine?"

We must have tangible evidence of integrity, honesty, and purity consistent with biblical principles. If the Cross has no effect on our lives and we do not conduct ourselves any differently than the world, we will have no power to witness. No one is going to listen to the words of truth from a life riddled with sin.

If there really is power over sin from the Cross, then it must be practiced before it can be preached with power. When we begin to believe that there really is power in the Cross and our lives consistently reflect it, then we will arrest the world's attention.

The light is growing dim because there is too much darkness in our midst. We have been living in gray areas and God has called us to be lights. That means we have a stark contrast with darkness, not a compromise to accommodate it.

Wrong thinking from humanism, secularism, existentialism and all the other "isms" have crept into our thinking and lifestyles. Too much emphasis has been placed on man. We must return to the power of the Cross as the power source of life in the Church.

Legalism Has Left a Bad Taste in People's Mouths

In the absence of real internal power being expressed in our lives, we have reverted to lists, rules, expectations and traditions to govern our behavior. We have too often relied on forms but have not enlisted or trusted the power of God. The Holy Spirit wants to govern our lives as the love of Christ constrains us. The grace of God is a mixing of the power and desire to do God's will internally.

God wants the freedom to mold people into His image for them. Often we are too quick to try to mold new converts into the image of what we think God wants them to be rather than letting God do it.

We need to closely examine all areas in our Christian institutions to rid them of all the vestiges of legalism. Only what is found in the liberty of the Spirit will contain the flavor to draw others to the Father.

In John, 13:35 Jesus says: "By this all men will know that you are My disciples, if you have love for one another." Is the world seeing this love? Or are they seeing church splits, factionalism and backbiting?

Who would want to be a Christian if all they see is division? There is too much of that in the world already. How can they believe that we would love them if we can't even express love among ourselves?

Our example of love speaks louder than our words. People are looking for the real thing - LOVE - the unconditional agapé flavor. When people see us living lives full of love, their desire for love will be aroused. When we can be united our light will burn far brighter than it does.

We Have Lost Our First Love

The only flavor or light we have as Christians is that which the Father imparts through us. The only way to remain flavorful and full of light is to spend time with Him.

We must return to our first love. Seeking God must be our passion. Activity is no substitute for time with God. Doing God's work is not the same as seeking Him. Our priorities must be adjusted accordingly.

Jesus said He would spew the lukewarm out of His mouth. We must remain hot, full of passionate love, not lukewarm and half-hearted. That means 100% of our lives must be given to Him. Anything less than full consecration is diluted and lukewarm.

We Christians have created a safe little subculture. We have our own protocol, traditions, methods and meetings. We have even developed our own language. To the outsider looking in, we appear weird. The result is that people stay away in crowds.

We need to be real people relating to the world in real ways. We are commanded to be "in the world but not of the world." But too many of us have compartmentalized our lives wanting to be "out of this world." We won't be heard if we are not understandable.

We need to find ourselves relating in real ways, addressing the pressing, relevant issues of today in language they can understand, not in "Christianese" or with chapter and verse. There needs to be a tangibly felt link in bringing the kingdom of God within us to the outside world.

So many of our attempts at reaching out have really been inviting people into a meeting to watch us be different. We need to be different out in the world and not just in meetings. Our love and compassion is what make's us different. If we can't demonstrate our love for the lost, we are totally missing the purpose of the Great Commission.

We have been commissioned to go out into the world and be in their midst, demonstrating the love and power of God in practical, understandable ways. But first we must remove the religious garb that isolates us and keeps us from being real among real people.

Up until now, we have been using methods that are comparable to fishing with a pole. When we go out in the way Jesus did among sinners, ministering in their midst, addressing real problems with working answers, we will begin to fish with nets and they will be full.

There is a tremendous challenge set before us. In God's grace let us meet it and see our world rise up to meet Jesus.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Fallow Ground

- by David Houston

It is amazing to me that people think they can live life the way they want to and still know God. The Bible says in Hebrews 12:14 that "without holiness, no man shall see God." This does not refer to conjuring up some emotion. The Bible is speaking about allowing our hearts, our minds, and our actions to be purified by the Word of God.

We cannot be casual and expect that God will come meet us. It is impossible for us to come into the presence of God with sin in our lives. Without holiness, we will never meet God; and without an increasing holiness, we will never get close to Him. It is the greatest privilege in the world to know God. It's also the greatest privilege for God to be shining the spotlight of His Word on our hearts, breaking up the fallow ground.

One thing that will block us from the presence of God is presumptuous sins. In Psalm 19:13, King David said, "Keep back Thy servant from presumptuous sins; Let them not rule over me." Presumption is defined as "blind or headstrong confidence; unreasonable confidence in divine favor. Bold and confident to excess." King David understood that presumptuous sins can rule over us. In the Psalms we are commanded to hate evil. We cannot be passive about fighting temptation or wicked thoughts in our minds; we have to hate them!

God is putting a spotlight on the sin in our hearts because He loves us. He wants our consciences to be pricked and convicted. God doesn't want us to have head knowledge only, just knowing we've sinned, because that doesn't change anyone. It does not benefit us just to know in our heads that we have sinned. God wants to let it convict our consciences. He wants our consciences to be hurt, to be remorseful, because we have offended a holy God.

In Psalm 51, David repented to God for his sin. We must keep in mind that an entire year had passed since he committed the sin of adultery against a woman, ordered her husband killed, and ultimately sinned against all of Israel. Yet in verse four he says, "Against You [God] only have I sinned." His conscience was so pricked because he had sinned against God and offended him - that was so real to him at that time that everything else paled in comparison.

The only way you are going to have the kind of friendship with God that He desires with you is to be pricked in your conscience. It requires a tender conscience which causes you to realize that you have offended a holy God.

Sin separates us from a holy and pure God. It keeps us from being able to love Him. We have dealt too lightly in the past with our sin, and we are too familiar with it. God wants us to develop a hatred of sin. The reason a lot of people never experience God is because they haven't realized that they have to hate evil and separate themselves from it to walk with a holy God. God is love, but He is also holy.

Joy Dawson, in her book Intimate Friendship With God, explains four distinct levels of attitudes toward sin. Let's look at these different levels:

* Level One: The person who does not sin because the consequences are too great. This person lusts after someone else in his or her heart but does not commit adultery or fornication because of the consequences being too great. Obviously, there is no hatred of evil and, therefore, no fear of the Lord.

* Level Two: The person who lives by the Golden Rule. He wants peace at any price and cannot understand anyone who is so radical that he would try to change the status quo of his life or anyone else's. This person can be full of the sins of selfishness and self-righteousness without being aware of it. If you asked him: "How long has it been since you spent more than an hour in prevailing prayer for the lost souls of men? ... What is the depth of your commitment to the Lord Jesus Christ for the lost souls of men to be reached by your witnessing to them on a personal basis?"

In all honesty he would have to answer, "Very little or none at all." There is no fear of the Lord manifest in these sins of selfishness, prayerlessness, self-centeredness, complacency, and self-righteousness. There is no acknowledgment, let alone any hatred, of these sins in the person who lives on this level.

* Level Three: The sincere Christian who earnestly desires to please the Lord Jesus Christ. He does not want to sin and is deeply concerned when besetting sins are in his life. He wishes he could find an answer as to why he is always having to confess over and over again the same sins. Perhaps he commits the sins of criticism and of judging others, the sins of pride ... He is deeply concerned and longs for freedom.

* Level Four: The person who has the fear of God upon him. He hates sin; therefore, he seldom sins. If he does, there is a quick awareness of sin, immediate repentance, and a willingness to humble himself before others if directed by the Holy Spirit to do so.

Do you know which level you are demonstrating? Whatever sin you see in your life, God wants you to turn against that sin. We need to get violent at sin trying to rule our lives. We must turn our hearts toward God and let Him illuminate our hearts to see any sin.

I wrote a letter to our church at UCLA recently explaining a practical way God had given me to break up the fallow ground in my heart.

Hosea 10:12 says, "Break up your fallow ground for it is time to seek the Lord until He comes to reign righteousness upon you." I believe that the Lord has shown me practically how He wants us to go about this, and I will share it with you in this letter.

I'm quoting a great deal of this from a booklet, How To Promote a Revival, by Charles Finney. Finney said that the way to tenderize our hearts and break up the fallow ground is in self-examination: considering our past actions, the motives of our hearts, the thoughts that have been in our minds. Go over your past sins one by one. Write them down in detail and meditate on your sin. Meditate on the coldness and indifference and uncaring attitude of your heart in order to let the Holy Spirit begin to convict you deeply of your sin and your lack of love for God.

Finney lists several topics that I think are helpful and that I have been using in my prayer times in the last few days.

1. Lack of love toward God. Think of the little time that you have given to God. Write it down. Think of the indifference that you have had to God's feelings and opinions. Think of the lack of affection that is in your heart toward God.
2. Lack of love for the Bible. Write down in detail the lack of desire and fervency in reading the Word of God. Is it simply rote or duty?
3. Neglect of prayer. List your attitude in prayer; your lack of zeal for prayer; the excuses that you make instead of prayer; the lack of listening to God and earnestly desiring to hear His voice. Does not your prayerlessness reveal your self-sufficiency?
4. Worldly-mindedness and carnality. The love for things of the world has crept in. List the desires that you have for your worldly possessions above the love of God. List the amount of time that you give to thinking of worldly things versus the love of God and worship.
5. Pride, Vanity. Detail the manifestations of pride that the Holy Spirit shows you. Is it not sin to care more for external appearance than your eternal soul? Do you have selfish ambition more than zeal for God's glory?
6. Personal worship. Write down as well as you can remember the last times you had personal, intimate worship time with God. Why does your mind wander so? Why do you find so little time for worship with God? Why do other things take precedence?
7. Hardness of heart. As you are listing these things, list the indifference that is in your heart even now as you acknowledge the sins of lack of love and lack of gratitude toward God.
8. Lack of personal holiness. Detail the compromise: looking at things that you should not, listening to things, even saying things out of your mouth that grieve the Holy Spirit.
9. The thoughts of your mind. Jesus said if you look on a woman to lust after her you have already committed adultery. List how unholy and impure your thoughts have been and how little you have done to take them captive to the obedience of Christ.

10. Disobedience to the written Word of God and to the spoken Word of God. Write down every instance where you have deliberately disobeyed your conscience, the voice of the Holy Spirit. Acknowledge to the Holy Spirit in writing how you have grieved Him and offended Him by not listening, by deliberately ignoring or disobeying His voice.

11. Acknowledge the lack of fruit of the Holy Spirit. Write down the sins of anger, jealousy, envy, backbiting, exaggerating.

Be thorough in your work. In breaking up your fallow ground, you must remove every obstruction. As you go over the catalogue of your sins, decide that you will repent and change. Wherever you see wrong, resolve at once in the strength of God to sin no more in that way.

You need not expect that God will do all the work. Much is up to you. Fasten your attention upon your sin. You cannot look at your sins long and thoroughly and see how bad they are without feeling, and feeling deeply. Let the Holy Spirit bring full conviction and a thorough repentance, as well as the cleansing and refreshing of a clean conscience and a pure heart before God.

Parts of this article were taken from Intimate Fellowship With God, by Joy Dawson, (Old Tappan, NJ: Chosen Book, Fleming H. Revell Co., 1986), pp. 51-55.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Fire From Heaven

by Del Fehsenfeld Jr.

It had been an exhausting day. The hot sun beat down on the parched earth. The crowd had sat under the cloudless sky for what seemed like an eternity - silent spectators in this play-off between Baal and Jehovah. Jehovah's side was hopelessly outnumbered - the odds, 850 to 1 in favor of Baal.

Silently they watched and waited and wondered, as the prophets of Baal tried first one tactic and then another to persuade the god of lightning and fire to prove himself and send fire from heaven. They pled, they appealed. Unsuccessful, they began to cry out more earnestly, to cajole, to demand that Baal heed them and send fire. Still no answer. Still no fire.

Undaunted, they persisted in leaping upon the altar, and in cutting themselves until the blood flowed - desperate, vain attempts to prove their sincerity to Baal and to see some evidence - any evidence - of spiritual reality. But there was no sign of fire from heaven - not even a spark. In fact, there had been no movement of any kind in the heavens for more than three years - no fire, no rain, no voice, no reality.

Weary with the exercise in futility, desire turned to disappointment and defeat.

At this point in the familiar account, one cannot help but notice some striking similarities to the church in our day.

By and large, we are not lacking in activity, fervor, or attempts to obtain spiritual power. To the contrary, our church calendars are bulging with services, retreats, conferences, and programs. We are making lots of noise. We are busy, earnest, and perhaps, sincere. But still, there is a deafening silence in the heavens. There is no fire. It's not that we're not trying. We are. But, apparently, all of our programs, promotions, meetings, buses, budgets, baptisms, committees, and conventions have failed to produce the one thing which we most desperately need - fire from heaven.

And while the spiritual leaders and activists are busily trying to produce sparks, the average church member sits back with the rest of the world - waiting, watching, and wondering. Oh yes, theologically they know that Jehovah is the only true God of fire. But can they be blamed for asking deep within themselves questions they would never dare to verbalize? Is God really as powerful as their pastor claims He is? After all, they've never seen anything truly supernatural or unexplainable. Most of the "spiritual" results they've seen can be accounted for in purely human terms.

Into the arena now steps a solitary figure. For years he has been a fugitive from the king whose wrath he incurred three years earlier. One would expect him to cower in the presence of the offended monarch. After all, he stands to lose his life. But, no, he is secure, assured, and bold.

Now he is calling to the people to listen. They gather around him somewhat skeptically. This man has always been something of an oddity - a real contrast to the other religious leaders of his day. His has always been a minority voice. His message cuts across the grain of what is traditional and palatable. His challenge to "get off the fence" and take a public stand for Baal or Jehovah, makes the average person uncomfortable. They'd rather not commit themselves.

Now he directs their attention to the altar of Jehovah. Unused for many years, it is in a state of disrepair. One by one, he selects 12 large stones and constructs an altar. He prepares the sacrifice and places it on the altar. Nothing out of the ordinary yet.

But then he catches them off guard. Turning to the crowd, he directs them to fill four barrels full of water and pour them on the sacrifice.

What?! Has he lost his mind? Anyone knows wet wood won't burn! And, even more importantly, doesn't this strange man know that it hasn't rained for over three years? They are down to the last few days of their meager water supply.

"Fill four barrels full ..."

"He sounds crazy to me - but, on the other hand, this may be the only hope we've got. After all, Baal hasn't done anything to help us ..."

"Whoosh."

"What a waste! We're all going to die!"

"Do it again ..."

"There goes the last drop of water we've got. It's never cost me so much to serve God!"

Then a short, simple prayer, and ... FIRE! No matches. No kerosene. No magic tracks. No gyrations. No pretending. Just fire. Real fire. Fire that licks up the water and utterly consumes the sacrifice, the wood, the stones - even the dust on the ground. Fire from heaven. The fire of God.

What Is the Fire of God?

I do not know of any greater need in the church today than for the fire of God to fall. Just what do we mean by the fire of God?

I'm talking about the manifest presence and glory of God. I'm talking about the supernatural power of God. I'm talking about services that are more than just nice meetings with nice music and nice preaching. I'm talking about results that cannot be explained in terms of human effort. I'm talking about that which man cannot program, manipulate, plan, or make happen. I'm talking about something more than the ordinary operation of the Holy Spirit in the lives of His people. I'm talking about the extraordinary outpouring of His Spirit. I'm talking about the fire of God.

What Does the Fire Do?

When the fire falls, we see God for who He really is. Both the Old and New Testaments reveal God to be a God of fire. In the 20th century, we have come to teach and worship two Gods - "the God of the Old Testament," who is loving, merciful, and gracious. But the God of the Old Testament is the same as the God of the New Testament. At Mt. Sinai, where the law was given, God revealed Himself with "lightnings and thunderings and voices." Then, in the last book of the Bible, the Apostle John was given a glimpse into the Throne Room of Heaven. Out of the throne "proceeded lightnings and thunderings and voices."

What we have today is a concept of God as a gray-haired, cosmic grandfather, sitting in a rocking chair, pushing buttons, passively tolerating and winking at the sin in the world and the church.

But God has not changed since Mt. Sinai. The only difference in John's vision is that there is a Lamb next to the throne. He has given His life to satisfy the wrath of a holy God against our sin. But God is no less holy or just. He is no less a God of wrath and judgment against those who spurn the provision of the cross by sinning willfully.

When the fire falls, God comes. And when God shows up, people are more comfortable on their face on the floor, than sitting in a pew. The Beloved Apostle John fell back, terrorized at the vision of God. Even the seraphims in Isaiah's vision had to cover their faces from the overwhelming view of God's holiness and glory.

Dear Friend, how long has it been since you've seen God? How long since you have been overcome by the awareness of His holiness and a sense of your unworthiness before Him?

When the fire falls, it consumes everything that is unholy, earthly, or temporal. The fire of God purifies, purges, melts, and devours, for "our God is a consuming fire" (Hebrews 12:29). God is like a refiner's fire (Malachi 3:2) that brings impurities to the surface, and exposes and consumes them.

When the fire falls, sin is judged and dealt with thoroughly and uncompromisingly - not just the obvious sins of the flesh, but subtle, secret sins of the spirit, as well. Masks of respectability are pulled off, pretense stripped away, and the souls of men laid bare before the gaze of an all-seeing, all-knowing God.

When the fire comes, there is deep, heart conviction and grief over sin. The intense searchlight of God's holiness makes things once thought acceptable, to suddenly become abhorrent. Indifference is turned to mourning. A casual attitude toward sin is replaced by brokenness and genuine repentance.

When the fire falls, the efforts and works of believers are tested. Much of what appeared to be spiritual activity, is exposed to be nothing more than fleshly effort and is consumed as wood, hay, and stubble.

When the fire falls, our traditional methods and programs are all yielded to His Lordship and the Holy Spirit begins to preside in reality over the workings and operation of His Church. When the fire falls, there is power, there is life, there is purity, there is spontaneity, there is reality.

Where is the fire of God today? Where is the evidence of His presence and power? Where is the sense of awe, of wonder, of fear in His presence? Where are the tears of brokenness and contrition? Where are lost people falling on their faces, overcome by the reality of God's presence in the midst of His people? What church in your community is known to have the fire of God? In what Sunday School class, what home, what mom, dad, or teen-ager is the fire present?

Why Don't We Have the Fire?

1. In many cases, we don't have the fire of God because we don't think we need it. We are content to live without it. The Israelites didn't think they needed fire. They thought they needed water. They focused on their felt need, while being blind to their real need. But once the fire came, then the rain came.

For the most part, our nation, churches, homes, and lives today are devoid of the glory and power of God. But when asked to state our needs, we speak of needing bigger buildings, more money, more volunteers, better staff, more equipment, etc. Why can't we see that our real need is for God Himself?

We have sinned against God and He has withdrawn His manifest presence from us. But our eyes have grown accustomed to the darkness. We have gotten used to functioning in our own effort. Hardly anyone questions the authenticity of our results. Someone has said that if the Holy Spirit were taken out of the average church, 95 percent of the program would just keep right on going.

We have become blinded to our true spiritual condition and need. Like the Laodicean church, we think we are "rich, increased with goods, and have need of nothing."

I hear Christian leaders today speak of how Christianity is flourishing. Others insist we are in the throes of revival. If that is the case, then why is every form of moral impurity rampant in our evangelical, Bible-preaching churches? Why is the divorce rate as high in the church as it is in the world? Why do the vast majority of Christians never introduce anyone to Christ? Why do people laugh their way down the aisle to make "decisions"?

Why are our churches loaded with people who want a part-time, convenient, weekend Christian experience and who show no serious interest in spiritual growth? Why do pastors have to twist people's arms to give, to serve, to get involved in the work of the ministry? Why are church splits so common? Why are so many professing Christians barren, empty, hurting, confused, and in spiritual bondage? Why is the world so utterly disinterested in what we have to offer?

As long as we think we're doing all right, we will never be motivated to cry out to God to send fire from heaven.

2. I believe another reason we don't have the fire is that we really don't want it. Oh, we say that we do. But what too many of us really want is the kind of "fire" that will draw attention to our church, pack our auditoriums, increase our offerings, and solve all our problems. We don't want the fire that will consume, destroy, expose, root up, burn, and hurt. We're afraid of what might happen if God appeared on the scene. We want a tidy religious experience that we can control.

Furthermore, we don't want the kind of preaching that precedes revival. I have found that many people want nothing but encouragement and "love" from the pulpit. They don't want the truth! Preaching on sin, repentance, holiness, brokenness, or confession is considered negative. "You're putting people on a guilt trip. You'll damage their self-esteem." I wish we were half as concerned about people having a proper view of God as we are about people having a proper view of themselves! Deceived by the world, our ego-centric theology has become more concerned about self-image than about God's image.

3. We don't have the fire of God because we don't believe it can happen today. In order to justify our impotence, we have dispensationalized away most of God's Word. "That's Old Testament!" "God doesn't work that way today." A serious study of the history of revival reveals that every revival is, in a sense, a repetition of what took place on the Day of Pentecost. The Spirit is poured out upon His people in an extra-ordinary way, and the manifest presence and power of God are released.

But in our concern to avoid the excesses and abuses of certain movements, we have denied altogether the possibility of a supernatural outpouring of the Holy Spirit. We don't pray for miracles, because we don't really believe that God still does miracles in the 20th century!

4. Finally, we don't have the fire of God, because we aren't willing to pay the price to get it.

We want an instantaneous, costless, painless revival. We want all the positive results and benefits of revival - all at little or no cost. We want gain without pain. We want the joy of new life without going through the travail of labor pains. We want healing, without surgery. We want joy without mourning. We want to enter into the power of the Resurrection, without first suffering the agony of the Cross. We want our schedules and programs and institutions to stay intact - we want a minimum of disruption or interference with our plans and traditions.

Revival involves a process - a process that requires plowing up the hardened, uncultivated ground of our hearts, before there can be planting of the seed, and ultimately, a harvest. The plowing is painful. But it cannot be circumvented. And it takes time. Yes, time is an unavoidable part of the price. Weekend, mini "revivals" may be easier to fit into our schedules, but they are unlikely to result in genuine revival.

Elijah had been in a process of preparation and purification for 3-1/2 years, before God sent the fire. And the people of Israel had suffered the consequences of their sin for the same period of time before they got desperate enough for God to send the fire.

We're too busy to listen to God. God meets with those who wait for Him (Isaiah 64:4), but we want Him to send the fire on our timetable. And He'd better be through by noon! Friend, God simply will not fit into our plans, our schedules, or our timetables. He is God! And He must be given the freedom to operate as He wills, on His schedule.

If God is going to send the fire, we've got to be willing, if necessary, to discard our man-made traditions, methods, structures, and programs, to make room for Him. It's not that those things are wrong, in and of themselves. But for too many of us, they have become gods. Anything that has become more essential to us than His presence, is part of the price He will require.

There certainly will be no fire until the sacrifice has been offered. For the Israelites, it meant placing their water supply on the altar. God didn't need water. But when He had their water supply, then He had them. And that's what He wanted all along.

I don't know what sacrifice God may require of you or your church. He may ask you to surrender your reputation and what others think of you. He may ask you to bear criticism, misunderstanding, and rejection from those whose opinions matter most to you. He may ask you to quit your job. He may ask you to put your life savings or retirement fund on the altar. Ultimately, it is ourselves that God wants to be laid on the altar.

Let me ask you a question. Do you want the fire? How badly do you want it? What price are you willing to pay to get it?

Are you willing to sacrifice that which is most precious to you? Are you discontent to go on living without it? If so, join me in crying out to the God of Elijah, the God of Fire:

Revive us again;
Fill each heart with Thy love.
May each soul be rekindled
With fire from above.

Hallelujah, Thine the glory;
Hallelujah, Amen.
Hallelujah, Thine the glory;
Revive us again!

Reprinted with permission of Life Action Ministries, Buchanan, MI 49107.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(cf531ed27e91483460120fcc057b3901_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(d3102649f02e825ddb76dc3de0190154_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Rock Music

HELLS BELLS: The Dangers of Rock and Roll by Eric Holmberg

Over The Edge: A Brief History of Rock and Roll

The Power of Music

Over the Edge

The Force Behind Rock

Rock's Underground

Former Guitarist for Prince Finds You Can't Fool God

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!

It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Back to The Forerunner!

Hell's Bells

By Eric Holmberg

Hell's Bells - part 1

Hell's Bells - part 2

Hell's Bells - part 3

Hell's Bells - part 4

Hell's Bells - part 5

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Back to document index

Back to The Forerunner!

Hell's Bells - part 1

-The Dangers of Rock and Roll-

Part 1

What is wrong with this man? Is this just a good time or is there something of a deeper significance going on here as well? What type of effect does this music have upon people? Is it only rock 'n' roll?

These questions and others will be answered as Hell's Bells takes you on a journey to the heart of rock 'n' roll. You'll discover what it can do to an egg. Your head. Your life. And your eternal soul. We'll explore rock's relationship to sex, violence, suicide, drugs, rebellion, and, most importantly, the occult. Come with us now as we join our host, Eric Holmberg, Founder and Director of Reel to Real Ministries for Hell's Bells: The Dangers of Rock 'n' Roll.

Thanks for taking the time to watch this video and I hope and pray that you'll get something good, maybe even life-changing out of it. Before we get started, however, I wanted to make a few points clear kind of lay down the ground rules for you. First, we're going to be taking a pretty hard look at contemporary music and I'll be saying some pretty direct things, both about the music and the artists. Please understand that nothing personal is intended here against anybody. I don't hate these artists, I'm not trying to say that God hates them, and I'm certainly not trying to get you to hate them. We simply want to look at rock music from the perspective of truth as defined by both the scriptures and the Person of Jesus Christ. And in that context if we find something that looks like a duck, sounds like a duck, and acts like a duck, then shoot we're just going to have to call it a duck.

Now you might not believe that the Bible and Jesus are the standard for absolute truth and that, therefore, their comments as they relate to rock music are irrelevant. Well, don't get up-tight. We'll hopefully deal with the issue of faith as we progress, but at least at the outset, try to keep an open mind and, at minimum, understand that right or wrong, what you are about to see and hear is what the Bible and Jesus have to say about these things.

Now you might also find some of the information about the artists and the music incredible, maybe even hard to believe. Please understand that every point has been carefully researched and documented. All quotes, for example, were taken either from the artist's own writings, rock magazines, books on musicology, or biographies written by sympathetic fans. Because of the wealth of material we're going to cover, and in the interest of time and the aesthetics of this presentation, I'm not going to generally site the sources. If you're interested, the closing credits will contain information on how you can get a copy of the script along with all the documentation.

And finally, to preempt the inevitable outcries of censorship, let me go on record. We're not here pushing for record banning, record burning, or even the dubious practice of rating rock albums. So don't anybody worry! We're not trying to control what people listen to. What we are trying to do is help people understand the big picture, to peel back the veneer of pop culture and gaze into the bedrock of truth that lies beneath. Then people can make decisions about their lives, music, or anything else armed with truth and understanding.

Now, as we begin our video journey to the heart of rock 'n' roll, let's listen to probably the only true thing that Wendy O. Williams and the Plasmatics ever laid down on vinyl. Appropriately enough, it was recorded backwards. (from the end of Side 2 of "Coup d'Etat")

When we play the tape reversed we hear.

"The brain-washed do not know they are brain washed."

At 12:32 Wednesday morning a performance by the popular punk rock group The Huns was cut short when police arrested the groups volatile lead singer, Phil Tolstead. Charged with inciting a riot, this incident becomes the latest in a young and sordid career that has featured not only the standard spewing forth of obscenities and hate, but has also included mock crucifixions and the ridicule of God and prayer. The confrontation is said to have begun as Tolstead pointed at a uniformed police officer while singing the Hun's song "Eat Death, Scum!"

That's right Mike Rock 'n' Roll! Powered by space-age technology and popularized by the largest, wealthiest and most leisure generation of young people in history, rock music has changed the modern world in ways more profound than perhaps any other social phenomenon. Evidence of its impact are many and varied.

Rock has become a multi-billion dollar industry, one recently described by the National Review as "the most prosperous industry in the world". (National Review, February 24, 1989, p.28) Its superstars have annual incomes that easily eclipse those of all but a handful of the most successful industrialists and businessmen.

And the music is virtually everywhere from packed sports arenas to commercials that peddle everything from tennis shoes to alcohol from the sound tracks of movies and television series to the pulsing rhythms that reverberate in our health spas. Everything today seems to march to its rhythm.

Perhaps the only thing more notable than rock's pervasiveness is the manner in which it helps shape the hearts and minds of the worlds' youth. As Dr. David Elkind noted in his book The Hurried Child, one of the most underestimated influences on young people today is the music industry. (The Hurried Child, Addison Wesley Publishing Company, 1988, pp. 89 -93)

Citing again the National Review: "Rock's sheer pervasiveness makes it the most profound value shaper in existence today. Unless you are deaf it is virtually guaranteed that rock music has affected your view of the world."

(National Review, February 24, 1989, p. 28)

From the manner in which young people dress to the way they view and understand the key issues of life, little escapes the pale cast by rock's big sound.

And it's no wonder. Young people wake up to it, drive to it, play to it, study to it, and go to sleep to it. Studies show that between the 7th and 12th grades, the average teenager will listen to and watch 11,000 hours of rock music and rock videos - more than twice the time they will spend in class. (American Academy of Pediatrics)

As Dr. Alan Bloom noted in his best-selling book The Closing of the American Mind, "Nothing is more singular about this generation than its addiction to music." (The Closing of the American Mind, Dr. Alan Bloom, Simon and Schuster, 1987, p.68)

Incredibly, despite this unprecedented power and the mounting evidence that rock's influence can be less than positive, most people have never stopped to consider what is really going on in and through contemporary music. Why is music so powerful? How does it effect us? What is its source? And to where is it leading us?

Throughout the ages, wise men have noted music's profound impact on its listeners. For example, over 2,000 years before the birth of Christ, the musical systems of China were both highly developed and central to its society. It was to this that the philosophers directed much of their attention. Understanding its intrinsic power, they carefully checked their music to make sure that it conveyed eternal truths and could thus influence man's character for the better. (The Secret Power of Music, David Tame, Destiny Books, 1984, p. 34)

To this end, tradition states that one emperor, by the name of Shun, would monitor the health of each of the provinces of this vast kingdom by simply examining the music they produced. Course and sensual sounds indicated a sick society, one in need of his intervention and assistance. (The Secret Power of Music, pp. 13 - 14)

Two thousand years later the Greek philosopher, Plato, echoed the sentiments of Emperor Shun when he said, "When modes of music change the fundamental laws of the state change with them." (The Republic, Book 3, p. 401)

In his famous work Laws, Plato could have been writing about our modern age when he stated "Through foolishness they, the people, deceived themselves into thinking that there was no right or wrong in music that it was to be judged good or bad by the pleasure it gave... As it was, the criterion was not music but a reputation for promiscuous cleverness and a spirit of law-breaking." (The Secret Power of Music, p. 189)

Plato's contemporary, Aristotle, noting that music has "the power to form character" (The Secret Power of Music, p. 19), wanted to see it actually regulated by the state an approach, by the way, of which I and the producers of this video are not in favor.

Moving up to the present century, Vladimir Lenin, the co-founder of communism and one of history's greatest experts on subversion and revolution said, "One quick way to destroy a society is through its music." (The Marxist Minstrels, A Handbook on Communist Subversion of Music, American Christian College Press, 1974)

Changing laws, forming character, and toppling societies most of us are not used to talking about music in such expansive terms. To understand this magnitude of impact we must consider both the nature of music and man; and how music affects us in body, soul, and spirit.

Given the materialistic philosophy that marks this present age, it's surprising that more attention has not been given to the many profound ways sound and different musical forms can affect the physical world. For example, research has found that shrill sounds of sufficient volume can congeal proteins in a liquid media. So a soft egg placed in front of a speaker at some of the louder rock concerts can midway through the concert become a hard-boiled snack for the weary head-banger. Does anybody have any salt here? (The Day Music Died, Bob Larson, Bob Larson Ministries, 1973)

Moving from proteins to animate objects, repeated experiments have shown that plants respond positively to classical forms of music, actually growing and flowering faster than if there was no music at all. Conversely, more dissident forms of music, like heavy metal, can actually retard growth and even kill the plant. (The Secret Power of Music, p. 143)

Of course, humans are much more complex than plants, but it still makes one wonder what this type of music might be doing to us. As Dr. Adam Knieste, a musicologist who studies the effects of music upon people noted, "It's really a powerful drug. Music can poison you, lift your spirits, or make you sick without knowing why." (Family Weekly Magazine, January 30, 1983, p. 12, article by David Chagall)

As mathematics is the universal language of the mind, music is the language of the heart, what the great composer Robert Schumann called "the perfect expression of the soul." Biblically, when we talk about the soul, we are speaking of the human personality and its three component parts the mind, the will, and the emotions. And it's here where we begin to see music's real power take hold.

In the realm of the mind, there is mounting evidence that certain kinds of rock have a negative effect on one's ability to think and learn. Studies at two separate universities, for example, have found that rats have a much more difficult time learning to pass through a maze if they are subjected to hard-rock music. (Insight Magazine, April 27, 1987, p. 57)

On the emotional level, few would deny music's power. Its ability to influence and enhance moods is, in fact, one of music's greatest attractions. What most people are not aware of, however, is both the extent of this influence and the ease with which they can be unconsciously manipulated. As Eddie Manson, Oscar-winning composer and one-time president of the American Society of Music Arrangers has said,

"We manipulate people like crazy.... Every film composer mixes his experiences with a talent for musical manipulation, and then projects that Machiavellian power gut to gut." (Family Weekly, January 30, 1983, p. 15)

Moving from the gut to the brain, music is also a powerful "encoder", a term in psychology for something that helps determine the way we perceive and think about the world. In other words, music has an inside track to the subconscious levels of our minds. (The Secret Power of Music, pp. 148 - 150) This truth is even physically suggested by the fact that the auditory nerves are the most predominant of all the human senses. (The Secret Power of Music, p. 136)

Research done at Stanford University confirms not only this predominance at a physical and subconscious level, but also in an area that is perhaps the most uniquely human of all; that is in the area of transcendent experiences what the researchers term "thrills". They found that the most powerful stimulus for evoking thrill-like sensations in their subjects was music. (Physiological Psychology, 1980, Vol 8 (1), 126 - 129, Avram Goldstein)

Musicologist David Tame anticipates Stanford's discovery when he wrote in his book The Secret Power of Music, "Music is the language of languages. It can be said that of all the arts, there is none that more powerfully moves and changes the consciousness." (The Secret Power of Music, p. 151)

Changing one's consciousness is what David Crosby meant when he told Rolling Stone Magazine that through just his music he could alter his audience's value systems and, in effect, steal them away from their parents. (The Rolling Stone Interviews, Arthur Barker, 1981)

And Crosby is not alone. Perhaps rock's greatest genius, Jimi Hendrix, told Life magazine in 1969, "I can explain everything better though music. You hypnotize people to where they go right back to their natural state, and when you get people at their weakest point, you can preach into their subconscious what we want to say." (Life Magazine, October 3, 1969, p. 4)

In recognition of this transcendent power Eddie Manson went on to share a sober warning, "Music is used everywhere to condition the human mind. It can be just as powerful as a drug and much more dangerous, because nobody takes musical manipulation very seriously." (Family Weekly, January 30, 1983, p. 15)

As we just saw in the quote by Jimi Hendrix, music is a spiritual thing. And it is in this realm of the spirit where we will focus most of our attention because it is here where music reaches its greatest heights of power and influence.

Even the very word "music" suggests this spiritual dimension. Its root word "muse" were the spirit beings who the ancient Greeks felt were responsible for the inspiration of all art.

Today, it's not just the Greeks who feel that artists are inspired by spiritual forces. Folk jazz artist Joni

Mitchell, in an interview with Time magazine, was described as follows: "Joni Mitchell's own strongest creative impulses come to her in a somewhat unusual way. She deeply believes in a male muse named Art who lends her his key to what she airily calls the "Shrine of Creativity." (Time, December 16, 1974, p. 39)

Avant-garde musician Peter Rowan echoes this description when in an interview with the Washington Times he said, "I do believe that music itself is a spiritual force. The inspiration I feel is like a holy thing. It's beyond any words I can use to describe it." (Washington Times, March 7, 1986)

This perception takes on an more even more startling dimension when described by guitarist John McGlaughlin, "One night we were playing and suddenly the spirit entered into me and I was playing but it was no longer me playing." (Circus Magazine, April, 1972, p. 38)

Earlier in this presentation we saw this perception mirrored in these words by AC/DC guitarist, Angus Young, "Someone else is steering me. I'm just along for the ride. I become possessed when I'm on stage." (Hit Parader, 1985)

To fully comprehend both the nature and magnitude of the spiritual interrelationship between man and music, we must first understand something of the basic realities that attend the spiritual world.

1.The real reality is a spiritual one. One of the scripture's primary messages is that the time/space world we live in is a created one, having its origins in an eternal, spiritual realm that exists outside the scope of our physical senses. In John's gospel, Jesus tells us that God is Spirit (John 4: 24a) and it is this inexpressibly wise, loving and all powerful Spirit Who is the creator of all things. His is the transcendent reality.

2.Man is a spiritual being. Though as we have noted we live in a body and have a soul, we are first and foremost spiritual beings. Genesis 1:27 gives the account of the origins of man, "So God created man in His own likeness." In other words, Spirit begat spirit. From the breath of God that gave us life to His image indelibly impressed upon our hearts, you and I are spirits. And as spirits, we are profoundly affected by the principles and the personalities that make up the spiritual world, whether we are aware of them or not.

3.As God's offspring, the primary purpose for our existence is to know and experience God. In John 17:3 Jesus said, "This is eternal life to know God and the Savior Whom He has sent." Continuing with the passage of scripture we read earlier "The Father is looking for those who will worship Him in spirit and in truth." (John 4: 24b) The worship spoken of here is not some dry religious exercise, but the natural response to knowing and experiencing God. And biblically and scientifically, there is no more profound way to be drawn into and then express this experience than through music. As perhaps the greatest musician in history, Johann Sebastian Bach said, "The end of all music should be the glory of God and the refreshment of the human spirit."

4. Through sin man fell and was separated from God. Throughout the scriptures the words of God in Ezekiel are echoed again and again, "The soul who sins will die." (Ezekiel 18: 4)

The death spoken of here manifests itself in several ways, but most significantly in a spiritual sense as through our sin we are separated from the God of all life. Left stranded, subjected to the tyranny of our selfishness and lust, we are no longer citizens of God's kingdom but instead walk "according to the way of this fallen world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit who works in all who are disobedient." (Ephesians 2: 2) Into this hopeless situation, God sent a Savior, His own Son, to pay the penalty for our sins, to destroy the power of this "prince of the air", and to bring man back into His kingdom. (John 3: 16, John 10: 10, Heb. 2: 14)

5. The kingdom of darkness is real and is the spiritual source of all opposition to God.

The lord of this diabolical kingdom is the "prince of the air", more commonly known as Satan, or the devil. With a hoard of wicked spirits at his command, he is called the "god of this fallen world". (2 Cor. 4: 4) As this world's ruler, his task is essentially two-fold. First, to stimulate the variety of lusts resident within the human heart, thereby degrading people as well as bringing them into greater bondage and control "For by what a man is overcome, by this he is enslaved". (2 Peter 2: 19) Second, to oppose all of God's efforts to redeem man and thus steal away Satan's subjects. The battlefield here is primarily the human mind. Using a variety of techniques, Satan's strategy is to fill us with lies, to convince us that black is white and evil good, to justify sin and blind us to our need for a savior, to distort our image of God and erase or trivialize our image of Satan, convincing us that he either doesn't exist or that he's a cartoon imp in red pajamas. Put simply "...to blind the minds of the unbelieving so that they cannot see the light of Christ who is the image of God". (2 Cor. 4: 4)

Given its power over the heart of man, music is among the most potent of these techniques. And it's worth noting that both the scriptures and church tradition suggest that music comes quite naturally to Satan, that very possibly, before his fall, he was in charge of music in heaven. (This is based upon the popular exegesis of Isaiah 14 (esp. vs. 11) and Ezekiel 28 (esp. vs. 13 in KJV) that views the "King of Babylon" and the "Ruler of Tyre" as types of Satan before and after his fall from heaven.)

Of course, any style of music can be perverted by evil. Many of the elements this presentation examines are found in other musical forms as well. The reason for our focus on rock is both its unparalleled popularity and the manner in which it has given place to evil. Suddenly at first and then with increasing blatancy as rock's celebrants have been brought under its rhythmic sway, it has become one of the most potent weapons in Satan's arsenal of deception.

Fortunately, Satan's proven tendency for over-achieving has resulted in a blatancy that, when examined by an objective inquirer, can be used to expose the devil's presence and purposes hence this presentation. And one last point before we begin to dust rock music for Satan's fingerprints 2 Corinthians tells us that "the devil can disguise himself as an angel of light" (2 Cor. 11: 14) that he can, in other words, appear as something beautiful, even Christ-like. Don't be fooled! Satan doesn't just manifest his power through a

Hitler or a Manson. He can use your favorite guitarist, a pretty pop singer, maybe even you. Anyone who resists the will of God is fertile soil for his seeds of deception.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Over The Edge: A Brief History of Rock and Roll

By Eric Holmberg

There is a real, and somewhat ironic sense in which rock music has its tap root in the Kingdom of God. Virtually all music historians trace rock's family tree back through rhythm and blues to the black gospel music of the deep South during the early part of this century.

The African-American culture had at that time cultivated a strong, albeit somewhat rudimentary Christian tradition, which was reflected everywhere in their music.¹

Having experienced the ravages of slavery, racial hatred, poverty, and death, their music often focused on their experience with suffering and faith's response to it. Consequently, it tended to emphasize the emotional side of religious human experience rather than the more rational approach favored by the white culture.

The gradual freedoms afforded blacks after the Civil War saw the increasing secularization of gospel music and the corruption, or "sensualization" of this beautiful emotional dimension until a whole new musical category had been created - the "blues." To the casual listener, the difference between the two was often subtle; involving more the "spirit" of the song than the music itself.

Respected "bluesman" Leon Pinson noted this distinction in an interview with Spin magazine: "I'm a minister of the music, and I don't play no blues... Two white folk asked me once, how come your music feels different than the blues? I said it's supposed to make you feel different - if you listen to the words and what the Good Lord says."²

This same negative characterization of the blues from a Christian perspective is echoed in these words by Jessie May Hemphill, a female blues artist: "Mama ain't happy with me, 'cause my soul can't be saved with me runnin' around singing the blues."³

The history of rock and roll was literally written by African-American artists who left the "light" of the church and gospel music in order to embrace the darker and more main-stream possibilities of this emerging musical style.⁴ A good example is writer, producer, and musician Willie Dixon. Dixon was the master architect of the epochal Chicago sound defined by Chess records in the Fifties and early Sixties and practically shaped the musical destinies of groups like the Rolling Stones, Cream, and Led Zeppelin.

His own destiny, however, was worked out in a small farm in Mississippi some forty years earlier. His mother was a devoted Christian; his father an outlaw type he saw only periodically and who taught him that Christianity was just a subtle form of brainwashing. Whose example did he follow in his life and music? Sexually charged songs like "Back Door Man," "I Just Want to Make Love to You," "(I'm Your) Hoochie Coochie Man," and "Little Red Rooster," among many others, leave little doubt.

Perhaps the best example of this corruption of gospel music and its subsequent influence on the development of rock is found in the life and music of legendary blues artist Robert Johnson. While not as well known as Little Richard or Elvis Presley, it can easily be argued that Johnson, more than these two men or anyone else, is the true father of rock and roll. For example, in the liner notes of Columbia Records re-mastered collection of his recordings, music historian Stephen LaVere writes:

And to the world at large, however unaware it might be, Robert Johnson is the most influential bluesman of all time and the person most responsible for the shape popular music has taken in the last five decades!

In August of 1990, Spin magazine featured an article entitled "35 Guitar Gods" - a rating of the most important guitarists in rock history. Johnson easily won the competition. And Eric Clapton, guitar legend in his own right, described his singing as "the most powerful cry that I think you can find in the human voice."

Recalling the first time he heard his music, Clapton said: "It was as if I had been prepared to receive Robert Johnson, almost like a religious experience."⁵ Eric Clapton is far from alone in this type of adulation; from Keith Richards to Robert Palmer, those who understand rock's heart know that Robert Johnson is the man who made it beat.

We know surprisingly little about Johnson's short life. As a young black man in Hazelhurst, Mississippi, however, there is little doubt that he grew up in and around the church and gospel music.⁶ Friends recall that one of his earliest and most lasting musical influences was Son House, "a precarious combination of bluesman and preacher."⁷

Sadly, like many musicians after him, the life of singing and living the blues was simply too attractive for a talented young man with a knack for playing the guitar and getting in and out of trouble - what little Christian idealism he might have possessed was all but lost in his pursuit of "wine, women, and song."

Most of the twenty-nine titles he later recorded focused on what were to become the great themes of rock and roll - illicit sex (and the consequences thereof), getting high, and, incredibly enough, Satan. It was even commonly accepted that his sudden and almost supernatural ability to play the guitar came from making a deal with the devil. Superstition? Probably - though songs like "Me and the Devil Blues" make one wonder.

Early this mornin', ooh when you knocked upon my door
And I said, "Hello, Satan, I believe it's time to go."
Me and the Devil, ooh, was walkin' side by side

And I'm goin' to beat my woman until I get satisfied

On August 16 - the same day Elvis died - of 1938, and at the same age as Jimi Hendrix - 27- Robert Johnson died; the victim of strychnine-laced whiskey slipped to him by a jealous husband. The consummate rock star mold had been prepared into which many other talented lives would be poured in the decades to come.

To understand Johnson's life and legacy, we must first understand that classical satanic thought and activity, whether its sexual (moral), philosophical, or magical, is essentially a reaction to Judeo-Christian orientations within a particular society. As the "Resister" or the "Counterfeiter," both translations of the various diabolical names found in Scripture, Satan needs a God to resist; a truth to supplant with a lie.

It is in this context that we can understand not only the underlying forces that gave rise to the life and music of Robert Johnson, but why it was America and England that predominantly made rock and roll what it is today. Both countries were profoundly affected by the Great Awakening, a spiritual revival that firmly re-established Christianity as the religious and moral foundation of the nation.

Both had seen the gradual erosion of spiritual passion and the subsequent increase in social problems and unrest, particularly among their youth. And both ultimately provided a young, eager, and participatory audience for this new music's sensuous urgency. The battle had begun.

Where Christianity emphasized personal holiness and taught that physical passions needed to be brought under the control of the Spirit, the message of first the blues and then rock was to "get your mojo working." Because throwing off restraint is a gradual process, popular music initially maintained a certain measure of decorum, and sex was alluded to only euphemistically. Johnson sang about being a "steady rollin' man" and Fats Domino found his "thrill" on Blueberry Hill. Today, it's far more explicit.⁸

Where Christianity emphasized transcendence through God, discipline, and "seeking first the Kingdom of God," the new music told young people to "ramble," be a "freebird," get "satisfaction," and if they ever needed transcendence - to "get high with a little help from their friends."

Where Christianity gave preeminence and worship to Jesus as Incarnate God and Saviour, rock music either ignored Him, mocked Him, or tried to strip Him of His glory and parade Him about with a host of false prophets and cardboard messiahs.

Where Christianity abominated sin and its ravaging power and put forth a crucified God as its atonement, rock took as one of its primary themes the fiery embrace of rebellion against God's commandments. The blues was sin's lament, hard rock its celebration, soft rock its quiet advocacy - God's view was nowhere to be found.

Where Christianity insisted that children "obey their parents in the Lord" and respect, even reverence authority, rock and roll made Mom and Dad out to be idiots without a clue as to what was really going on. What began as "Don't trust anybody over thirty" became "I am an anarchist!" and suddenly time didn't seem to be on anybody's side.

Where Christianity identified Satan as the enemy of our souls, rock and roll lauded him as its patron saint.

Where Christianity warned of "a certain terrifying expectation of judgment, and the fury of a fire which shall consume the adversaries,"⁹ dozens of rock groups sang enthusiastically about the "highway to hell." Contemporary music fiddled and the nation burned.

Practically anything Christianity extolled, rock tore down; and virtually everything the Bible and Jesus condemned, at least some segment of the rock and roll industry promoted. Ultimately, its own nature, or at least the way that nature was defined, necessitated this "anti-Christ" orientation - as a reaction against authority it had no other choice but to square off against the greatest Authority of all. But instead of a "palace of wisdom," this "road of excess" led to a darkness of such suffocating intensity that for many there has been no return.¹⁰

¹ By "rudimentary," I simply mean that because there was little education available to blacks and most couldn't even read, their theological training was often not very sophisticated. This is not to say, however, that their spirituality wasn't. Quite the contrary; few seminaries can compete with the depth gained by a childlike faith and dependence upon God in the midst of tribulation.

² Spin, June, 1990, p.48 ³ Ibid, p.45

⁴ The same is true today. It's amazing how many black artists have received their musical training in church and then left to make a name for themselves in popular music. Some, like Lionel Richie and M.C. Hammer, even struggled with a calling into full time ministry before being "led" into the "big time." There's a lesson to be learned here somewhere.

⁵ "Robert Johnson - The Complete Recordings," Columbia Records, 1990, pp.22, 23.

⁶ La Vere describes Johnson as "a simple country boy with a view of life encumbered by a strict set of social and sexual mores ..." (Ibid, p.20) "Encumbered" is an interesting choice of words and tells the reader something about the bias that exists among the writers and reviewers who are into rock and roll.

⁷ Ibid, p.11. It's interesting that even La Vere recognizes the spiritual incompatibility that exists between these two styles of music.

⁸ I could use literally hundreds of ridiculously graphic songs as examples, including some by the biggest names in the music business. ⁹ Hebrews 10:27.

¹⁰ "The road of excess leads to the palace of wisdom." (Proverbs of Hell, William Blake) Incredibly, this was among Jim Morrison's favorite quotes.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

The Power of Music

By Eric Holmberg

Rock 'n' Roll! Powered by space-age technology and popularized by the largest, wealthiest and most leisure generation of young people in history, rock music has changed the modern world in ways more profound than perhaps any other social phenomenon. Evidence of its impact are many and varied.

Rock has become a multi-billion dollar industry, one recently described by the National Review as "the most prosperous industry in the world."¹ Its superstars have annual incomes that easily eclipse those of all but a handful of the most successful industrialists and businessmen.

And the music is virtually everywhere - from packed sports arenas to commercials that peddle everything from tennis shoes to alcohol - from the sound tracks of movies and television series to the pulsing rhythms that reverberate in our health spas. Everything today seems to march to its rhythm.

Perhaps the only thing more notable than rock's pervasiveness is the manner in which it helps shape the hearts and minds of the world's youth. As Dr. David Elkind noted in his book The Hurried Child, one of the most underestimated influences on young people today is the music industry.²

Citing again the National Review: "Rock's sheer pervasiveness makes it the most profound value shaper in existence today. Unless you are deaf it is virtually guaranteed that rock music has affected your view of the world."³

From the manner in which young people dress to the way they view and understand the key issues of life, little escapes the pale cast by rock's big sound.

And it's no wonder. Young people wake up to it, drive to it, play to it, study to it, and go to sleep to it. Studies show that between the 7th and 12th grades, the average teenager will listen to and watch 11,000 hours of rock music and rock videos - more than twice the time they will spend in class.⁴

As Dr. Alan Bloom noted in his best-selling book The Closing of the American Mind, "Nothing is more singular about this generation than its addiction to music."⁵

Incredibly, despite this unprecedented power and the mounting evidence that rock's influence can be less than positive, most people have never stopped to consider what is really going on in and through contemporary music. Why is music so powerful? How does it affect us? What is its source? And to where is it leading us?

Throughout the ages, wise men have noted music's profound impact on its listeners. For example, over 2,000 years before the birth of Christ, the musical systems of China were both highly developed and central to its society. It was to this that the philosophers directed much of their attention. Understanding its intrinsic power, they carefully checked their music to make sure that it conveyed eternal truths and could thus influence man's character for the better.⁶

To this end, tradition states that one emperor, by the name of Shun, would monitor the health of each of the provinces of this vast kingdom by simply examining the music they produced. Course and sensual sounds indicated a sick society, one in need of his intervention and assistance.⁷

Two thousand years later the Greek philosopher, Plato, echoed the sentiments of Emperor Shun when he said, "When modes of music change the fundamental laws of the state change with them."⁸

In his famous work Laws, Plato could have been writing about our modern age when he stated: "Through foolishness they, the people, deceived themselves into thinking that there was no right or wrong in music - that it was to be judged good or bad by the pleasure it gave.... As it was, the criterion was not music but a reputation for promiscuous cleverness and a spirit of law-breaking."⁹

Plato's contemporary, Aristotle, noting that music has "the power to form character,"¹⁰ wanted to see it actually regulated by the state - an approach, by the way, of which I am not in favor.

Moving up to the present century, Vladimir Lenin, the co-founder of communism and one of history's greatest experts on subversion and revolution said, "One quick way to destroy a society is through its music."¹¹

Changing laws, forming character, and toppling societies - most of us are not used to talking about music in such expansive terms. To understand this magnitude of impact we must consider both the nature of music and man; and how music affects us in body, soul, and spirit.

Given the materialistic philosophy that marks this present age, it's surprising that more attention has not been given to the many profound ways sound and different musical forms can affect the physical world. For example, research has found that shrill sounds of sufficient volume can congeal proteins in a liquid media. So a soft egg placed in front of a speaker at some of the louder rock concerts - can midway through the concert become a hard-boiled snack for the weary head-banger.¹²

Moving from proteins to animate objects, repeated experiments have shown that plants respond positively to classical forms of music, actually growing and flowering faster than if there was no music at all. Conversely, more dissident forms of music, like heavy metal, can actually retard growth and even kill the plant.¹³

Of course, humans are much more complex than plants, but it still makes one wonder what this type of music might be doing to us. As Dr. Adam Knieste, a musicologist who studies the effects of music upon people noted: "It's really a powerful drug. Music can poison you, lift your spirits, or make you sick without knowing why."¹⁴

As mathematics is the universal language of the mind, music is the language of the heart, what the great composer Robert Schumann called "the perfect expression of the soul." Biblically, when we talk about the soul, we are speaking of the human personality and its three component parts - the mind, the will and the emotions. And it's here where we begin to see music's real power take hold.

In the realm of the mind, there is mounting evidence that certain kinds of rock have a negative effect on one's ability to think and learn. Studies at two separate universities, for example, have found that rats have a much more difficult time learning to pass through a maze if they are subjected to hard-rock music.¹⁵

On the emotional level, few would deny music's power. Its ability to influence and enhance moods is, in fact, one of music's greatest attractions. What most people are not aware of, however, is both the extent of this influence and the ease with which they can be unconsciously manipulated. As Eddie Manson, Oscar-winning composer and one-time president of the American Society of Music Arrangers has said, "We manipulate people like crazy ... Every film composer mixes his experiences with a talent for musical manipulation, and then projects that Machiavellian power gut to gut."¹⁶

Moving from the gut to the brain, music is also a powerful "encoder," a term in psychology for something that helps determine the way we perceive and think about the world. In other words, music has an inside track to the subconscious levels of our minds.¹⁷ This truth is even physically suggested by the fact that the auditory nerves are the most predominant of all the human senses.¹⁸

Research done at Stanford University confirms not only this predominance at a physical and subconscious level, but also in an area that is perhaps the most uniquely human of all; that is in the area of transcendent experiences - what the researchers term "thrills." They found that the most powerful stimulus for evoking thrill-like sensations in their subjects was music.¹⁹

Musicologist David Tame anticipates Stanford's discovery when he wrote: "Music is the language of languages. It can be said that of all the arts, there is none that more powerfully moves and changes the consciousness."²⁰

Changing one's consciousness is what David Crosby meant when he told Rolling Stone that through just his music he could alter his audience's value systems and, in effect, steal them away from their parents.²¹

And Crosby is not alone. Perhaps rock's greatest genius, Jimi Hendrix, told Life magazine in 1969, "I can explain everything better though music. You hypnotize people to where they go right back to their natural state, and when you get people at their weakest point, you can preach into their subconscious what we want to say."²²

In recognition of this transcendent power Eddie Manson went on to share a sober warning, "Music is used everywhere to condition the human mind. It can be just as powerful as a drug and much more dangerous, because nobody takes musical manipulation very seriously."²³

As we just saw in the quote by Jimi Hendrix, music is a spiritual thing. And it is in this realm of the spirit where we will focus most of our attention because it is here where music reaches its greatest heights of power and influence.

Even the very word "music" suggests this spiritual dimension. Its root word "muse" were the spirit beings who the ancient Greeks felt were responsible for the inspiration of all art.

Today, it's not just the Greeks who feel that artists are inspired by spiritual forces. Folk jazz artist Joni Mitchell, in an interview with Time magazine, was described as follows: "Joni Mitchell's own strongest creative impulses come to her in a somewhat unusual way. She deeply believes in a male muse named Art who lends her his key to what she airily calls the 'Shrine of Creativity.'"24

Avant-garde musician Peter Rowan echoes this description when in an interview with the Washington Times he said, "I do believe that music itself is a spiritual force. The inspiration I feel is like a holy thing. It's beyond any words I can use to describe it."25

This perception takes on an even more startling dimension when described by guitarist John McGlaughlin, "One night we were playing and suddenly the spirit entered into me and I was playing but it was no longer me playing."26

We see this perception mirrored in these words by AC/DC guitarist, Angus Young, "Someone else is steering me. I'm just along for the ride. I become possessed when I'm on stage."27

To fully comprehend both the nature and magnitude of the spiritual interrelationship between man and music, we must first understand something of the basic realities that attend the spiritual world.

1. The real reality is a spiritual one. One of the scripture's primary messages is that the time/space world we live in is a created one, having its origins in an eternal, spiritual realm that exists outside the scope of our physical senses. In John's gospel, Jesus tells us that God is Spirit (John 4:24a) - and it is this inexpressibly wise, loving and all powerful Spirit Who is the creator of all things. His is the transcendent reality.

2. Man is a spiritual being. Though, as we have noted, we live in a body and have a soul, we are first and foremost spiritual beings. Genesis 1:27 gives the account of the origins of man, "So God created man in His own likeness." In other words, Spirit begat spirit. From the breath of God that gave us life - to His image indelibly impressed upon our hearts, you and I are spirits. And as spirits, we are profoundly affected by the principles and the personalities that make up the spiritual world, whether we are aware of them or not.

3. As God's offspring, the primary purpose for our existence is to know and experience God. In John 17:3 Jesus said, "This is eternal life - to know God and the Savior Whom He has sent." Continuing with the passage of scripture we read earlier - "The Father is looking for those who will worship Him in spirit and in truth" (John 4:24b). The worship spoken of here is not some dry, religious exercise, but the natural response to knowing and experiencing God. And biblically and scientifically, there is no more profound way to be drawn into and then express this experience than through music. As perhaps the greatest musician in history, Johann Sebastian Bach said, "The end of all music should be the glory of God and the refreshment of the human spirit."

4. Through sin man fell and was separated from God. Throughout the scriptures the words of God in Ezekiel are echoed again and again, "The soul who sins will die" (Ezekiel 18:4).

The death spoken of here manifests itself in several ways, but most significantly in a spiritual sense as through our sin we are separated from the God of all life. Left stranded, subjected to the tyranny of our selfishness and lust, we are no longer citizens of God's kingdom but instead walk "according to the way of this fallen world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit who works in all who are disobedient" (Ephesians 2:2). Into this hopeless situation, God sent a Savior, His own Son, to pay the penalty for our sins, to destroy the power of this "prince of the air" and to bring man back into His kingdom (John 3:16; John 10:10; Heb. 2:14).

5. The kingdom of darkness is real and is the spiritual source of all opposition to God. The lord of this diabolical kingdom is the "prince of the air," more commonly known as Satan, or the devil. With a hoard of wicked spirits at his command, he is called the "god of this fallen worl" (2 Cor. 4:4).

As this world's ruler, his task is essentially two-fold. First, to stimulate the variety of lusts resident within the human heart, thereby degrading people as well as bringing them into greater bondage and control - "For by what a man is overcome, by this he is enslaved" (2 Peter 2:19). Second, to oppose all of God's efforts to redeem man and thus steal away Satan's subjects. The battlefield here is primarily the human mind. Using a variety of techniques, Satan's strategy is to fill us with lies, to convince us that black is white and evil good, to justify sin and blind us to our need for a savior, to distort our image of God and erase or trivialize our image of Satan, convincing us that he either doesn't exist or that he's a cartoon imp in red pajamas. Put simply: "To blind the minds of the unbelieving so that they cannot see the light of Christ who is the image of God" (2 Cor. 4:4).

Given its power over the heart of man, music is among the most potent of these techniques. And it's worth noting that both the scriptures and church tradition suggest that music comes quite naturally to Satan, that very possibly, before his fall, he was in charge of music in heaven.²⁸

Of course, any style of music can be perverted by evil. Many of the elements this presentation examines are found in other musical forms as well. The reason for our focus on rock is both its unparalleled popularity and the manner in which it has given place to evil. Suddenly at first and then with increasing blatancy as rock's celebrants have been brought under its rhythmic sway, it has become one of the most potent weapons in Satan's arsenal of deception.

Fortunately, Satan's proven tendency for over-achieving has resulted in a blatancy that, when examined by an objective inquirer, can be used to expose the devil's presence and purposes - hence this presentation.

And one last point before we begin to dust rock music for Satan's fingerprints - 2 Corinthians tells us that "the devil can disguise himself as an angel of light" (2 Cor. 11:14) - that he can, in other words, appear as something beautiful, even Christ-like. Don't be fooled! Satan doesn't just manifest his power through a Hitler or a Manson. He can use your favorite guitarist, a pretty pop singer, maybe even you. Anyone who resists the will of God is fertile soil for his seeds of deception.

- 1 National Review, February 24, 1989, p.28.
- 2 The Hurried Child (Addison Wesley Publishing Company, 1988) pp.89 -93.
- 3 National Review, February 24, 1989, p.28.
- 4 American Academy of Pediatrics.
- 5 Dr. Alan Bloom, The Closing of the American Mind (Simon and Schuster, 1987) p.68.
- 6 David Tame, The Secret Power of Music (Destiny Books, 1984) p.34.
- 7 Ibid, pp.13,14.
- 8 Plato, The Republic, Book 3.
- 9 Tame, p.189.
- 10 Tame, p.19.
- 11 The Marxist Minstrels: A Handbook on Communist Subversion of Music, American Christian College Press, 1974.
- 12 Bob Larson, The Day Music Died (Bob Larson Ministries) 1973.
- 13 Tame, p.143.
- 14 David Chagall, Family Weekly Magazine, January 30, 1983, p.12.
- 15 Insight, April 27, 1987, p.57.
- 16 Chagall, p.15.
- 17 Tame, pp.148-150.
- 18 Ibid, p.136.
- 19 Avram Goldstein, Physiological Psychology, 1980, Vol 8 (1), 126-129.
- 20 Tame, p.151.
- 21 Arthur Barker, The Rolling Stone Interviews, 1981.
- 22 Life, October 3, 1969, p.4.
- 23 Chagall, p.15.
- 24 Time, December 16, 1974, p.39.
- 25 Washington Times, March 7, 1986.
- 26 Circus, April, 1972, p.38.
- 27 Hit Parader, 1985.
- 28 This is based upon the popular exegesis of Isaiah 14 (esp. vs. 11) and Ezekiel 28 (esp. vs. 13 in KJV) that views the "King of Babylon" and the "Ruler of Tyre" as types of Satan before and after his fall from heaven.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Over the Edge

Is All Rock Music Bad?

By Eric Holmberg

It is the height of oversimplification to look at any area of human endeavor and totally discount the secular world's contributions. As a function of the Holy Spirit's ministry, truth and beauty should first and foremost be an inheritance of the sons and daughters of God.

But the "Lord of all flesh" freely uses non-Christian people to uncover these things as well. We see the greatest examples of this in the objective fields of science and mathematics, but even in more subjective areas like philosophy and art, God has regularly made "even the wrath of man praise Him."¹

Still, let the buyer beware - lies masquerading as truth and art saturate the atmosphere around this present age. We should continue to "watch over our hearts with all diligence" especially when getting into an area as spiritually charged as music. The simplest and safest way to accomplish this is not to say that all non-Christian music is bad - it isn't - but through what I call Plan A.

PLAN A

1. Acknowledge that with certain styles of music, most notably rock, the time it takes to sift through a sampling of songs in order to find something good just isn't worth it. Ephesians 5:15-16 is particularly relevant here: Therefore be careful how you live, not as unwise men, but as wise, making the most of your time, because the days are evil.
2. Listen exclusively to music by people who know God and purposefully write and perform for His glory. Unfortunately, most people today aren't into playing it safe, in this or any other area, so I'll go on to Plan B and point out the specific factors you might want to consider before opening up your spirit to a non-Christian musician.

PLAN B

1. Consider the "spirit" of the musical style you are evaluating as well as the degree to which that style has been affected by the gospel.

Typically, these two factors will in some measure determine the extent to which the Holy Spirit has influenced and continues to operate within that particular musical style. For example, the inherent majesty, order, and intelligence of classical music lends itself to the transcendent emotions that God seeks to evoke in all men's hearts.

In addition, this same genre was so profoundly influenced by Christian artists and ideals, that even a musician as immoral and troubled as Amadeus Mozart was still, at least externally, constrained to write for God's glory. With scripturally accurate lyrics or where there are no lyrics, a musical piece that has been "leavened"² in this way can be appropriate to enjoy.

With rock and roll, however, this proximity to the Holy Spirit's influence is much more distant. As we've already noted, its style is significantly more sensual and "earthy" in its orientation - more the fodder of a fallen angel than a transcendent God.

To what extent, then, has rock's sympathy with the gospel and scriptural principles created a milieu in which the Holy Spirit is free to provide inspiration to non-Christian musicians? - Well, we might as well consider how well come the American Cancer Society would be at a tobacco grower's convention. Not only is the God of Scriptures persona non grata within the rock industry, His enemy has been made honorary Chairman of the Board!

2. Consider the character, lifestyle, and the orientation of the artist whose music you are evaluating.

Here, let me begin by quoting musicologist David Tame:

Surely the lowest common denominator which determines the precise nature of any musical work is the mental and emotional state of the composer and/or performer. It is the essence of this state which enters into us, tending to mold and shape our own consciousness into conformity with itself. (His emphasis) Through music, portions of the consciousness of the musician become assimilated by the audience.³

In other words, when we listen to a song by a particular artist or group, we're not only getting their music, we're getting them! Shouldn't we therefore be at least a little concerned about whether that artist is, for example, promiscuous, rebellious, or under the influence of some drug or false prophet?

A lot of people will struggle with this concept not only because they don't understand (or accept) Tame's observation and the scriptural principles that back it up, but because they have fallen victim to a certain "sleight of hand" modern technology can perform on us if we're not alert to it. I call it the "I would never watch in real life what I'm willing to watch at the movies" phenomenon.

We think, for example, that just because it's "make believe," watching someone in a film is somehow okay. In the same way, because the music we listen to on our stereo has been completely removed from the context of both the performer and the performance, we can be easily lulled into thinking that the relationship between them no longer exists. Don't kid yourself - it does.

When listening to a song, then, we need to mentally note that we are, in effect, inviting the writer and the performer of that song into our home and asking them to minister to us. Even more important, we are asking "Jehovah Shammah" - the Lord Who is With Us - to attend the concert as well. Does the artist's character and spirit warrant this access and level of intimacy?

3. Consider the song's lyrics as well as the thoughts and emotions it produces.

The first part of this consideration, the lyrics, couldn't be more straight forward; if the song isn't true, if it doesn't line up with scripture, then there is no way that it should be listened to for entertainment.

But beyond this, we need to also consider the song's effect on us. Lots of songs are true, or at least don't have anything in them that is obviously false; but if we honestly evaluate the emotions that the songs evokes and then hold them up to the light of God's Word, we will often find that the song is not as benign as we once thought.

Some examples to consider:

A. Does the song engender a fascination with the opposite sex?

This is probably the most popular attraction of "safe" music and the one that trips up the most people. Some love songs are great - in their place. When they become maudlin, however, or the only focus of interest; when they are targeted at young people who are not even close to being ready for serious courtship to begin - at that point what might (I'm assuming a lot here) be fine for a married couple becomes ridiculous for the fourteen-year-old boy or girl.

Young people would be considerably better off today if they got their minds off the opposite sex and onto God, school, and growing up; getting ready for the day when their Heavenly Father will bring them their mate. Music that generates emotions which run contrary to this divine plan should be avoided at all costs.

B. Does the song create an unrealistic view of romance and married life?

I was on a talk show recently and, between the breaks, the interviewer asked me about some popular music she enjoyed; songs that were primarily about relationships and romance. I asked her if she felt that the prevailing sentiment of the songs conveyed the truth that marriage is first and foremost a covenant, a commitment; that romance is great and should be cultivated, but even when it isn't there, the marriage covenant remains unbroken and undefiled.

She looked at me for a moment and then it was as if a light had gone on in her head. By the end of the show, she was warning others about the subtle lies in music; how they can create unrealistic expectations that can never be met and the resulting feeling that one's marriage is a failure. She knew - it had happened to her.

Personally, I'm convinced that when we finally go beyond the veil and understand what really went down in this life, we are going to see that the human pain suffered as a result of marriages failing because of overly sentimental views of love will far outweigh the ravages of illicit sex, drugs, violence, occult philosophy, or any of the other sins that contemporary music has glorified. Those sins would never have taken hold in a culture where the family was strong and secure.

C. Does the song promote either an undue fascination with the band or the fantasy that the listener is playing the music?

We live today in a culture where the human ego reigns supreme and unbridled. The sophisticated star-making machinery of the entertainment industry grinds out the "hero of the week" with marked precision. Thousands of bands, artists, and actors lust for "the Big Time," "the Big Break" that will make them a "Big Name." And as for the rest of us - how are we to enjoy the happiness that supposedly can only come from being Somebody? Well, we get to fantasize that we are either dating one or that we are one. (Air guitar anyone?)

It's difficult to imagine a more ridiculous and destructive lie. The bottom line is that God has created each of us as unique and valuable individuals who are precious in His sight. We are to find our ultimate purpose and reality in Him and in Him alone. Any time we find ourselves putting a person or a band on a pedestal or living in a fantasy world, we've got a very real problem. To put it another way: music, all art, should point us to beauty, truth, understanding, God - let it point us to the artist or our selves and we need to stop and lay that music aside. It's just that simple.

There are other, more obviously negative emotions that should be considered as well. Does the song provoke unrighteous anger? Rebellion? Unreality? Irresponsibility? Recklessness? The list is as long as the range of fallen human emotion, and music has the power to evoke them all. We should be careful to avoid those songs which have that power over us.

4. Consider the big picture - the album on which a song appears and the financial endorsement your purchase of the recording represents.

This consideration presupposes that we are evaluating a song for purchase and are not just listening to it on the radio. What happens with a lot of people is they hear a song they like and think is acceptable and then they buy the record on which the song appears. This simple and seemingly innocuous act, however, overlooks some unfortunate realities even beyond the ones we've already examined.

There are typically between seven and fourteen other songs on that recording; some of which are very likely to be unacceptable if not blatantly wrong. Most will find themselves sneaking a "peek" at the other songs until they find themselves liking if not preferring them and coming up with all kinds of interesting justifications for their compromise. ("I don't listen to the words!") For the one in a hundred who can control themselves; well, so what? They're still straining at gnats after having successfully purchased a camel.

Second, there is the issue of "causing your brother to stumble" (Romans 14). It's very difficult, if not impossible, to separate one's appreciation for a song from appreciation for the artist. We should be very careful about what we promote, particularly in an area where so many people are vulnerable.

Finally, we should always remember that when we purchase something, we are voting with our pocketbooks; we are saying that we like this and we hope that its producer will give us more of the same. Think about that the next time you buy a recording - are you prepared to take your money and cast a ballot for every sentiment and philosophy that is found on it?

There you have it - four simple factors to take into account before listening to and/or purchasing music. I leave it to the readers to decide for themselves whether they prefer Plan A or Plan B. I will tell you one thing, though - when it comes to rock and roll, both plans will generate practically the same playlists. Why make it more complicated than it is?

1 Psalm 76:10, (John 7:24. 2 Matthew 13:33. 3 David Tame, The Secret Power of Music, (Destiny Books, 1984) p.152.

Eric Holmberg spent his young adult life immersed in the rock music scene. As founder and director of Reel to Real Ministries, Eric has produced videotape presentations on subjects ranging from abortion to rock music.

In this series, Eric answers some of the most commonly posed questions that he encounters in his work.

For more information about videos produced by Reel to Real:

Reel to Real Ministries
P.O. Box 4145
Gainesville, FL 32613
1-800-992-9696

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

The Force Behind Rock

5/89

Grimly Fiendish plays the game that never pays sing out loud but never prayed.
Grimly Fiendish wears a coat that's black and long he doesn't know that it's all wrong.

Simply fiendish, a child caught in a grown up world, no lies convince the court.
Once a week, I could be, found on the faces or the frowns
Hide and seek, tried so hard and just to find that crime could pay.

Just for today.
Bad bad bad boy etc.

Let me get the story straight
You never gave me a break
It's a case of give and take
You didn't make me good, you just painted me green
You made me part of your forgotten dream.

Grimly Fiendish, we'll send you just where you belong, where the children can't be found Hide and seek, tried so hard and just to find that crime could pay just for today.

bad bad bad boy etc.

Just who is "Grimly Fiendish" in this rock song by The Damned? He wears a coat that is black and long and is a deceptive liar. Some may say that this is an isolated case of occult imagery in rock music by a heavy metal band known for promoting sadomasochistic sex, suicide, and murder in its songs. Others, however, such as video producer Eric Holmberg, believe that the rock music industry is caught up in a "web of Satanic intrigue" which is beyond their control, and that songs deemed as "extreme" 10 years ago are commanding the mainstream of American popular music.

Occult imagery, violence, sex, and drugs in rock music have attracted the nation's attention through the Parents Music Resource Center's campaign to label rock albums which contain obscene lyrics. Recently PepsiCo decided to drop Madonna's controversial "Like A Prayer" commercial - which featured scenes of her dancing through a parochial school wearing black lingerie and cavorting with teenagers. The commercial spot, which Newsweek said "had it all - singers, dancers, sex, children, adults, schools, churches, and nostalgia," was dropped because viewers confused it with her sexually suggestive video, "Prayer."

"We are becoming desensitized with this constant bombardment," said Holmberg, director of Reel to Real Ministries in Gainesville, Florida. Reel to Real is in the last stages of production of a fast-paced, 90-minute presentation on rock music called "Hell's Bells."

"George Orwell said, 'Art in its final degeneration exists to shock.' This is where we are at in contemporary music," said Holmberg. "We have to shock to sell. We have to grab people's callous attention with more and more perverse imagery."

Named after the popular AC/DC song with the same title, "Hell's Bells" focuses on occult themes in mainstream rock music and addresses the impact of rock on the mental, physical, and spiritual aspects of the listener. Although it delves into the most intense occult themes, such as footage of women being carried across a stage to be sacrificially sawed in half at a rock concert, Holmberg also offers lighter moments with demonstrations of rock music's impact on plants, eggs, and rats.

"We are taking a hard look at contemporary music and the artists," he said. "Every point is carefully researched and documented by biographers, musicology books, and rock magazines." Holmberg and his staff have already produced one video on rock, "Rock 'n' Roll: A Search for God," which has been shown in countless churches and on campuses all over the world. But "Hell's Bells," according to Holmberg, promises to be technically and aesthetically superior to the first version.

The Satanic Connection

The "web of Satanic intrigue" which Holmberg traces with detective-like accuracy leads to the late Satanist Alistair Crowley. Formerly based in England, Crowley was a guru and spiritual patriarch to some of the main pioneers of the rock culture, such as Jimmy Paige (Led Zeppelin), Daryl Hall, Jim Morrison (The Doors), Ozzie Osborne, and The Beatles. Timothy Leary, darling of the 1960s drug culture, was another distant Crowley follower.

"I see a pattern developing among different rock personalities," Holmberg explained. "Few in contemporary music are intentionally involved in it. I think the majority of them are caught up in something much bigger than they realize. They are making a buck, and don't mean anything wicked." "Hell's Bells" offers pointed documentation of this Satanic connection; many rock personalities have admitted being possessed by a supernatural force:

* AC/DC guitarist Angus Young said, "Someone else is steering me - I'm just along for the ride. I become possessed when I'm on stage."

* Former leading artist Joni Mitchell told Time magazine that she was controlled by a demon spirit: "She deeply believes in a male muse named Art who lends her his key to what she airily calls the Shrine of Creativity."

* Guitarist John McLaughlin said, "One night we were playing and suddenly the spirit entered into me, and I was playing, but it was no longer me playing."

Compounding the artists' Satanic inspiration is another common theme in rock music: a vehement attack of Christian themes and symbols, such as the cross, the Last Supper, and the resurrection. The album cover of The Damned features a woman with a crown of thorns; Graceland's "First Snack" album cover has a mock Last Supper scene with a prostitute seductively lounging on the floor with her leg raised up in front of Jesus, who is sitting with a goat's head beside him.

The cross, which is the heart of the Christian faith and a symbol of Satan's defeat, is the primary target of attack. Madonna told Spin magazine in 1985 that "crucifixes are sexy because there is a naked man on them." Jim Morrison sang in his song "The End," featured in The Doors' "L.A. Woman" album, about a man nailed to a telephone pole: "Behold the crucifix; what does it symbolize? Pallid incompetence hanging on a tree."

Undisputed Truth's "Night of the Demon" album cover shows a demon crucified on a cross. Another group, Frankie Goes to Hollywood, (banned by the BBC for grossly lewd lyrics and visual effects in their videos) features a mixture of hearts and crosses as the background design for an album cover.

Jesus' character, His name, and His ministry are also freely mocked by rock groups. Spooky Tooth's album, "Ceremony," depicts Jesus as a cosmic buffoon with His hand nailed into His head. Jefferson Airplane's "Long John Silver" album described Jesus as a bastard involved in a love affair with Mary Magdalene.

Bob Dylan told an interviewer in 1966, "If people knew what this stuff was about, we'd probably all get arrested." Satanic influence isn't limited to demonic possession and album artwork, but rather undergirds the entire value system of the artist. Just what values does rock music promote? Holmberg asserts that the basic value system is the creed of an avowed Satanist such as Anton Levy, head of the U.S. Church of Satan: "Do What Thou Wilt."

"'Do it if it feels good,' is the law of the Satanist," Holmberg explained. "And many are unwittingly wooed by the music to follow this law. According to the Bible, the devil has come to steal, kill, and destroy, and this is encouraged in the music."

Stuart Goldman, a former rock musician and critic, confirmed this in a National Review essay. "You needn't go to a slasher film to see a woman being disemboweled in a Satanic ritual - just turn on your local music video station. In short, rock has trivialized evil ... Rock's sheer pervasiveness makes it the most profound value-shaper in existence today. Unless you are deaf, it's virtually guaranteed that rock music has affected your view of the world."¹

"Music is a profound value shaper; a powerful communicatory which elicits thrills," added Holmberg. "Its a straight pipeline into the heart of man."

A British musicologist, David Tame, wrote in The Secret Power of Music, "The morality of the musician matters ... music must always have a moral effect. Either overtly or in subtle ways which are communicated from subconscious to conscious, musicians always express through their performances whatever level of psychological harmony or disharmony they have within themselves. This is inevitable. Even the slightest inner hang-up manifesting through the slightest shake of the performing hand or through the minutest weakness in composition becomes registered upon our own subconscious as we listen."²

Two songs by the group Slayer are prime examples of rock music's trivialization of murder and suicide: "Spill the Blood" and "Mandatory Suicide." The Misfits also sing "Can I Go Out and Kill Tonight?" Does this mean if a person listens to these songs, he will go out and murder someone? Consider the fact that 70 percent of all violent crimes in the U.S. are committed by persons under the age of seventeen.³ Police records also link many of these murders with rock music in some way. John Hinkley, Jr., the young man who attempted to assassinate President Reagan in 1980, said his favorite group was The Kamikaze Kloners.

In Motley Crue's song, "Bastard," we hear these words: "Out go the lights, in goes my knife, pull out his life, consider the bastard dead." In "Murder by Numbers," The Police sang, "Once that you've decided on a killing, first you make a stone of your heart. And if you find that your hands are still willing, then you can turn murder into art."

It isn't any surprise that the effect of such heavy metal songs which blared day and night in Gary Heidnik's "house of horrors" influenced him to commit several murders. Chief Inspector James Gallagher of the Philadelphia police department described the house as "ghastly." When police raided the house, they found three half-naked women; two chained to sewer pipes and one imprisoned in a shallow open pit covered with plywood weighted down by bags of dirt.⁴

According to Time magazine, April 6, 1987: "The captives told police that one woman had been electrocuted when Heidnik stood her in the basement earthen pit, and used a garden hose to flood it and touched a live wire to her chains. Her body was found in a New Jersey state forest near Camden."

A 14-year-old Canadian boy who murdered three members of a family told the court that his alter ego, "Eddie," made him commit the murders. Eddie is the skeletal figure featured on Iron Maiden's albums which is the band's "mascot." Police Sgt. Joseph Cziraky told the Toronto Sun that "When they (Iron Maiden) do a concert this is a central theme: he supposedly died and they're bringing him back." He testified that several Iron Maiden posters were on the boy's bedroom wall, including a hand-drawn picture of Eddie.⁵

Suicide is another prominent theme in rock songs. An Ozzie Osborne fan committed suicide in response to the song, "Suicide Solution": "Suicide is the only way out ... why don't you kill yourself cause you can't escape the Master Reaper ..." Eric Anderson, 14-years-old, told his father that he couldn't cope with the pressure. He then went into his room and took a .22 rifle and killed himself. When questioned about the suicides, Osborne defended himself by saying, "Parents have called me and said, 'When my son died of a drug overdose, your record was on the turntable.' I can't help that. These people are freaking out anyway, and they need a vehicle for the freak-outs."6

The Music of Sexual Perversion

Besides violent crime, rock music openly promotes "every sexual aberration known to man, from masturbation to copulating with dead bodies," Holmberg said. Alice Cooper's "Cold Ethyl" describes an intimate relationship with a dead body in a refrigerator.

Rock star George Michael, the first white man to make it to the top of the Soul music charts, took rock lyrics to new depths of explicitness with his Top 40 hit, "I Want Your Sex." In that song, he sings in a guttural and seductive voice: "What's your definition of dirty baby, what do you consider pornography, don't you know I love you til it hurts me baby, don't you think it's time you had sex with me?" Another George Michael song, "Father Figure," is about child molesting: "That's all I wanted, but sometimes love can be mistaken, for a crime. That's all I wanted, just to see my baby's blue eyed shine. This time I think my lover understands me ..."

Another Top 40 star, Prince, is known for sexual lewdness in his recordings and during concerts. His "Glam Slam" album, which features an erotic portrait of himself, is preoccupied with "LoveSexy" in his songs - which he says on his album is "the feeling you get when you fall in love not with a boy or a girl, but with the heavens above." His song, "No" is a litany of moral confusions which concludes with an acknowledgement that there is a heaven and a hell. However, in his next song, "Alphabet St.," he abandons his moralizing and sings, "I'm going down to Alphabet Street, I gonna crown the first girl that I meet, I'm gonna talk so sexy she'll want me from my head to feet ... "

The sexually wanton lifestyle of rock stars was accurately described in the hard-rock fan magazine Creem: "There's gonorrhea, syphilis, crabs, NSU, venereal warts and herpes ... I mean you'd simply be amazed at the number of times one has to schlepp (go) to the V.D. clinic; it's almost a regular stop for some groups on the way to or from a gig ... the wallowing through the muck and mire of sleaze is all part of the rock and roll lifestyle ... "7

Can rock music get anymore degenerated? Holmberg says he hopes not. "It's hard to believe that rock music can go any farther. These companies are without a conscience." Holmberg points out in his video that rock 'n' roll is one of the most lucrative industries in the world, with $15 billion in annual sales. In the U.S., record sales are larger then the combined grosses of motion pictures, television, professional sports and Broadway theater.

Rock music isn't the only subject under scrutiny by Holmberg. He also examines the impact of rap music and Top 40 "neutral" music. "There is no overt Satanic element in rap music," he said. "However, there is idolatry of sex. Ton Loc's "Wild Thing" is basically an act of sex. Its a prevalent theme with rap artists along with fighting and drinking."

He considers Top 40 or "pop" music the most dangerous form of music. "It's full of subtle lies. Whitney Houston, who calls herself a Christian, is featured on several sensual videos. Yet she told Parade magazine that her favorite book is Hollywood Wives, which is full of adultery. She presents a Christless Gospel. We need to examine the lives of the artists to see what is in their music."

Rock 'n' roll, pop, and rap music is a mirror of 1980s morality and culture. George Orwell once described the process of an artist who solves the problem of creative mediocrity by inserting that which is culturally and morally debasing to elevate the value of the work:

"There is always one escape: into wickedness. Always do the thing that will shock and wound people ... throw a little boy off a bridge, strike an old doctor across the face with a whip and break his spectacles - or, at any rate, dream about doing such things ... gouge the eyes out of dead donkeys with a pair of scissors. Along those lines you can always feel yourself original. And after all, it pays! ... You could even top it all up with a religious conversion, moving at one hop and without repentance from the fashionable salons of Paris to Abraham's bosom."8

This seems to be what rock and Top 40 pop music artists are doing today: trying to defeat mediocrity with shock value.

What Are Their Motives?

What are the motives of the rock and soul artists who attack the deity of Christ, eat the heads of bats during rock concerts, or croon about child molesting? Are they out to make money, or is there an underlying agenda to indoctrinate their fans in their immoral values? Mick Jagger, a former student at the London School of Economics, has shown that money is a definite incentive for proliferating his music, message and lifestyle. On one tour, carefully planned by Jagger, the group broke all previous records and made $40 million.

However, during one of his interviews, Jagger echoed the sentiments of his fellow artists when he revealed other motives: "We are moving after the minds, and so are most of the new groups." David Crosby, another former 1960s rock star, said, "I figured the only thing to do was to swipe the kids. I still think it's the only thing to do. By saying that, I'm not talking about kidnapping, I'm just talking about changing their value systems, which removes them from their parents' world very effectively."

Jimmi Hendrix, the late 1960's rock idol, said, "... (M)usic is a spiritual thing of its own. You can hypnotize with music and when you get people at the weakest point, you can preach into the subconscious what we want to say."

What Are the Solutions?

What is the solution to this widespread cultural debasement? Is it a crusade to put warning labels on albums with obscene lyrics? More parental guidance at concerts? Another government commission, task force, or study? This is where Holmberg holds no punches in presenting the solution to the moral crisis exacerbated by the lucrative rock industry.

"I believe there is a spiritual war waging right now among the youth. According to John 10:10, Satan has come to steal, kill and destroy. But Satan is an overachiever, and he is hellbent on perverting this generation. He has overplayed his hand and we have the goods on him. If we dust the lyrics of rock music, we can find his fingerprints all over it.

"The beginning of the solution is to diagnose the problem, and I believe it's a spiritual problem," he said. "The only one who can set the person free from the snares of the music is Jesus Christ."

Holmberg's 90-minute video presentation is now in the last moments of production in their Gainesville, Florida, studios, and will be completed by June 10, 1989. Families, church groups, and youth and campus ministries are all encouraged to purchase this excellent tool. For ordering, see the advertisement on page 23. "Hell's Bells" is The Forerunner's featured selection in this month's Resource Center Library.

1 Stuart Goldman, "That Old Devil Music," National Review, February 24, 1989, pp. 28-31, 59.

2 Tame, David, The Secret Power of Music (New York: Destiny Books, 1984) p. 155.

3 Campus Life, March 1984, p. 61.

4 "House of Horrors," Time, April 6, 1989.

5 Michael Smee, "Trial Told: 'Eddie made him do it,'" Toronto Sun, Nov. 1, 1985.

6 Ann Fadiman, "Heavy Metal Mania," Life, December 1984.

7 Creem, October 1975.

8 Goldman, p. 31, 59.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(3cb60d42b10e53f9522bb0b392c1c4cd_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(d0262bbe9d2356661a2e89321dfcc781_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Rock's Underground

Lisa Barstow's Testimony

By Lisa Barstow

If you're into bands like Sonic Youth, Soul Asylum, Motorhead, Cancerous Growth, The Mighty Lemondrops, Black Flag, and others that 99% of the world never heard of ... If you're cynical, rebellious, in question of authority, obsessed with the color black, everything but ordinary and in love with Budweiser ... I bet you can't even imagine what life would be like any other way. It's so much a part of your everyday life, you need to be this way to live.

It had taken me years to get to this point, where I was "in with the in crowd," on the guest list of every club in Boston and had my own radio show. And then - BANG! - nothing mattered anymore. It seemed to come at a time when I was just bordering on the step of getting in over my head - once again.

The underground world of Rock & Roll is a place where strangers eyeball each other yet never speak. It's a constant exchange of names and places and faces. It always seems like you're not where you want to be ... like there's one more step to complete the picture, one more missing link before reaching that ultimate place in the hierarchy of "cool" ... where you have to gain what you get.

But don't you ever get sick and tired of the games and scenarios? The constant striving to get a break? How much do you have to go through to feel like it's all worth it? Did you ever feel burnt out from it all and just want some peace? But you've already learned, there is no peace in this world, and there will never be, and nuclear disarmament isn't going to change things. So you just live life on the edge.

Did you ever get so high you didn't think you'd come back? Did you ever wake up and wonder what you did the night before? Did you ever get really scared while tripping? Did you really enjoy those feelings?

All of this used to be a part of my life every day, but not anymore. Somebody changed me, everything about me, and my values. What in the world would stop me from continuing on this path? What in the world made me not desire these pleasures anymore? Nothing in this world that I could figure. But I knew inside that it was the power of God.

I used to plot and plan what my next move would be in this life, and I thought I was always one step ahead of the rest. But I learned something really important - God had a plan for me! I didn't have to worry and think about what to do next. All I had to do was trust in Him.

Well I did trust in Him, slowly but surely, and I began reading His Word (the Bible). You know, there is so much in there. Real excitement and drama, with real results, not just entertainment. I still went to clubs, but after a while, they didn't enchant me like they used to. And I didn't want to waste any more of my money on drinking, when all it did was bring me down.

I looked in the Yellow Pages for a church to go to so I could investigate this Jesus further. I found a church in the North End called the Boston Worship Center - I even liked the name, kind of generic.

I walked in one Sunday morning, all dressed in black, and a really nice guy greeted me. I sat down and was ready to listen. Then the pastor began praying and something came all over me in an overwhelming way - the power of the Holy Spirit. One of the girls there put her arm around me and began praying the words I would have loved to pray, but was too scared and confused even to speak.

That day I gave my life to Jesus Christ and it was the greatest thing I've ever done. Better than hanging out with U2 back in 1983, better than mingling with Andy Warhol at a New York party, better than smoking cigarettes with Mick Jones and Joe Strummer back in 1982, better than discussing tennis with Elvis Costello (and the Attractions), better than having back stage passes for the Talking Heads and the Del Fuegos and so many other bands and famous personalities.

If you can only understand that Jesus really loves us, you and me both. He doesn't operate on society's systems of success and failure. He wants to take away our feelings of negativity, pessimism, self-centeredness, and a futile outlook on the future. If He didn't do this for me, why would I take the time to write this to you?

There is peace and happiness to be found, but we're so used to working for it and searching high and low for it, that it's hard to believe it's right at our fingertips, and the tip of our tongue. Take a minute and talk to Jesus. He's right there for you - 24 hours a day, whenever you need Him or are ready to accept Him. He's the one person who won't let you down.

Think about it, friends your own age have died. What's going to happen to you when you die? Talk it over with Jesus - just let Him know what you're feeling. Take it from me, it's the best decision you'll ever make. I know, 'cause I was just like you.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Former Guitarist for Prince Finds You Can't Fool God

10/89

"I knew that I was blowing it. I knew that Jesus was real, but I wanted to deny it because I had this selfish agenda."

It took him a little while, but Dez Dickerson, former lead guitarist for rock star Prince, finally realized that you can't fool God. Dickerson knew that the music he was performing with the band was destructive. So when he sang, he thought of an unusual means of compromise.

"I would mime the words to the offensive parts of the songs. I'd just move my lips and sort of lip sync rather than sing it out, thinking 'See God, I didn't say it.'" Looking back, Dickerson is pretty sure God didn't buy it. And today, Dez doesn't either.

Since he first recorded a Ray Charles song as a tot, Dickerson wanted to make his living as a singer and musician. However, after he finally hit the big time with Prince, he didn't find the joy he expected, but instead an uncertain world of masquerade.

Dickerson recorded three albums with Prince, including the album 1999 which sold two million copies. With the success of the 1999 tour, Dickerson attained celebrity status, riding in limousines, staying in beautiful hotels, and lifting a finger only if he chose to.

"After a while there's sort of an ongoing letdown, because being a rock star was supposed to make me happy. This was supposed to be the thing that was going to make life meaningful," he explains. "You find out it isn't. It's an occupation like anything else, and while there are seemingly tremendous benefits to it, there are just as many debits. I think every entertainer does what they do in order to feel loved and accepted. That's really the bottom line."

When the band was on the road, Dickerson and a few other members developed a habit of watching Christian television. "I remember a couple of times praying the salvation prayer under my breath."

While he was home for Christmas in 1980, Dickerson felt a tremendous sense of urgency that he needed to accept Jesus. "I just knew it was time to quit fooling around and stop running."

Although Dickerson received Jesus as his savior, he did not change his lifestyle and soon his spiritual dedication ceased to be important. He continued with the band through 1983, miming the lyrics he felt uncomfortable singing.

In 1983, at the completion of the 1999 tour Dickerson left Prince's group. He formed a group and toured to promote a much anticipated album that he never released.

Although producing quality music is important to Dickerson, he says no music should be made at the expense of compromise. "The place the Lord has brought me to is the realization that He has called us to holiness, and that true holiness is the outburst of a heartfelt desire to have unbroken fellowship with Him. If there's anything that causes you to fall out of fellowship with the Father, that's something that you have to determine."

This view of the holiness of God, has caused Dickerson to be discriminating in the material he releases.

Dickerson and his wife are now involved in music and youth ministry at a church in south St. Paul.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Hell's Bells - part 2

-The Dangers of Rock and Roll-

PART 2

As a means of systematically and objectively examining rock music for signs of the devil's influence, I want us to consider some of the basic beliefs of those who are willfully engaging in satanic religion. As a starting point, we'll look at this book, The Satanic Bible. The unholy scriptures of the legally incorporated Church of Satan, The Satanic Bible was written by the church's founder, Anton Szandor LaVey.

LaVey is perhaps the most famous satanist of this century. Along with establishing his own religion, he has served as a consultant to Hollywood on movies that deal with the occult, even playing the role of the devil in films like "Rosemary's Baby" and "Invocation of my Demon Brother", an underground movie by noted occultist Kenneth Anger. What does LaVey's Satanic Bible teach and are these teachings found today in rock music?

Beginning with the Person of Jesus Christ - "I dip my forefinger in the watery blood of your impotent, mad redeemer and write over his thorn-torn brow 'the true prince of evil the king of slaves.'" (The Book of Satan, Chapter 1, verse 6)

The obvious hatred expressed here is understandable when we consider that Satan's legal control over mankind was total and invulnerable to any human effort at breaking it until Jesus. On the cross, His thorn-torn brow and pierced body provided the perfect blood sacrifice for our sins. Now Satan's once invincible power is broken over anyone who believes on that blood. It's no wonder he hates it. Can we find this demonic doctrine in rock 'n' roll? Sadly, yes.

Jesus has become the focus of more ridicule in rock music than any other personality. Virtually every facet of His life and ministry is mocked and criticized.

This rock anthology is entitled "The Birth of the Y" and features the hideous "Litany of Satan" we heard earlier. Here history's most significant event, the incarnation of God, is questioned and trivialized.

In like manner, Nina Hagen's "Nun, Sex, Monk, Rock" lampoons the Madonna and Christ. Along with songs about reincarnation, witchcraft, and blaspheming the Holy Spirit, she sings: "And my little baby I tell you, God is your father." (Nina Hagen, "Cosmic Shiva")

Jefferson Airplane's song "The Son of Jesus" is filled with sacrilege suggesting among other things that Jesus was involved in the occult, had bastard children by Mary Magdalene, and that God the Father was sexually attracted to Jesus' daughter.

This same blatant disrespect for the Messiah characterized the life and art of John Lennon. One biographer records that Lennon, early on in his career with the Beatles, drew a cartoon of a crucified Jesus. At the foot of the cross was a pair of bedroom slippers. (The Beatles, Second Revised Edition, Hunter Davies, McGraw-Hill, 1985, p. 103) (The actual cartoon featured in the video is another drawing by John Lennon that appeared on page 189 of his "Skywriting by Word of Mouth", (Harper & Row Publishers, 1986))

During the Beatles' formative years in Germany, another biographer recounts how on Good Friday, the day that marks the Lord's crucifixion, Lennon made some nuns the target of his abuse. As they left their convent to attend worship services "they were shocked to behold across the street, a grotesque life-size effigy of Jesus on the cross, which John had fashioned and hung from his balcony. As the sisters gazed in astonishment at this sacrilegious display, John started pelting them with Durex condoms filled with water." To top it off, he urinated on them while crying "rain drops from heaven." (The Lives of John Lennon, Albert Goldman, William Morrow and Company, Inc., 1988, p. 120)

In his song "God", Lennon not only records his indifference to Christ but abases the Son of God by drawing a comparison between Jesus, JFK, Bob Dylan, Hindu mantras, and the Beatles. These examples taken together make it obvious that Lennon's infamous quote about Christ meant a lot more than just a commentary on the unnatural adulation given to the Beatles. He longed for the obliteration of Jesus as Messiah and Christianity as a faith.

The group Ludichrist pictorially and musically echoes Lennon's sentiments.

This type of overt blasphemy is not unique. Virtually dozens of groups openly sing about wickedness that, until recently, could not be found outside of occult book stores. For many it's a matter of economics.

Rebellion sells in rock and for the hardest types, what could be more rebellious than to revile Christ and blaspheme God. Whether or not this makes them less satanic is a question we'll address later. But for now, consider the music of Merciful Fate, a group that takes their satanism seriously. On the song "The Oath", King Diamond sings "I deny Jesus Christ the Deceiver and abjure the Christian faith, holding in contempt all of its works."

An icon for this confession of satanic faith could very well be this album cover by Celtic Frost with the devil or some demon using Jesus as a sling shot. Or these albums by Christian Death. This one is entitled "Sex and Drugs and Jesus Christ." The bottom portion of this album, "Blasphemy in the UK", is not shown because it features male genitalia. Though they belong to the man on whose chest the image of Jesus is projected, it's clear when you look at the whole album that the intent is to uncover the nakedness of Christ.

Punk artist Lydia Lunch has performed with a number of bands in the last decade among them Teenage Jesus and the Jerks. Their songs include "Crown of Thorns" and the strident "I am the Lord Jesus", most of which was recorded backwards.

In the world of rock, even the most significant, loving and sacrificial acts of the Lord's life, like the Last Supper, are dragged through the mud. In this, His last meal before His death, Jesus gave His disciples the bread and the wine to initiate a new covenant, a promise of love and forgiveness. The bread symbolized His broken body and the wine His shed blood together the horrible price He was to soon pay in order to redeem man. There was nothing funny about it. Graceland renames the Last Supper "The First Snack" and pictorially suggests that the menu included a prostitute. Here MDC's album "Millions of Damn Christians" mocks, among other things, the blood of Jesus by connecting it with the key phrase from a well-known beer commercial.

This blasphemy is echoed by the album artwork for "Blood on the Snow." The name for a group of witches, Coven has a demon playing his fiddle over the spilled blood of Christ. Likewise, the Cure's popular album "The Head on the Door" features along with songs like "The Baby Screams", the song "The Blood."

Hebrews 9:22 states that "without the shedding of blood there is no forgiveness of sin." The blood spoken of here is that of the Lamb of God. Apart from His blood our sins remain as an eternal wedge separating us from God. To mock the blood is to deny our only escape route from hell and that's why the desecration of the Lord's blood through ritual and liturgy is foundational to satanic religion.

Other aspects of Christ's sacrifice are mocked as well. As we saw with Nina Hagen and will see in great detail in our next section on the cross, a favorite occult technique for desecrating the sacred is to mix it with the profane. Take for example the crown of thorns that Jesus was made to wear. We've already seen Ozzy's. The Damned and Terence Trent D'Arby also mock the crown, with D'Arby throwing in the crucifixion for good measure. This decidedly non-Christian group even calls itself "Crown of Thorns".

Moving on to Christ's sufferings on the cross, Spooky Tooth's album "Ceremony" depicts Jesus as some cosmic buffoon with his hand nailed into his head. The sacred heart of Jesus, a Catholic symbol for Christ's love and sacrifice on the cross, is mocked by The Birthday Party. To call the Lord's gift to us "bad seed" is as blasphemous as anything in the Satanic Bible. Along with the swastika in the background, the album features these cryptic lyrics from the song "Wild World" "Our bodies melt together, we are one. Post-crucifixion, baby, post-crucifixion all undone."

Coven also renounces the work accomplished through the crucifixion. Anton LaVey himself would have been proud to pen the lyrics of "Burn the Cross" "Son of God repent your sins and pledge your soul to hell. Pray that Satan will forgive once your God has fell. Expect the death of those who pray to a God so long since passed. Your God is dead and now you die, Satan rules at last."

Universalism

Another way in which Jesus is attacked is to lump Him in with every other spiritual leader and religion known to man. This heresy, known as "universalism", has become extremely popular of late, particularly with the growth of New Age religion.

This album by Earth Wind and Fire shows various religious symbols Christian, mixed in with symbols for Hinduism, Buddhism and the occult. The Album title spells it out, "All in All". In other words, it's all the same thing there are many paths to the same God or gods.

Musically this heresy is best illustrated by ex-Beatle George Harrison's album "Somewhere in England" "They call you Christ, Vsnu, Buddha, Jehovah, our Lord. You are Govindam, Bismillah, Creator of All." (Song "All in All")

Harrison is joined by a host of other rock artists who have expressed, in one way or another, this philosophy. With Eastern, New Age, and occult religion the preferred spiritual diet of the rock industry, you can almost count on almost any mention of Jesus within secular rock and roll being a reference to the anemic and hydra-headed Christ of universalism.

The problem here is that no matter how nice it sounds to say that all religions lead to God, Jesus said they don't. Practically every religion tries to claim Jesus and write Him into their line-up of spiritual super-stars, but we have irrefutable evidence that Jesus totally denied that there is any other way to God except through Himself. As He said in John 14:6 "I am the way ,the truth, and the life. No one comes to the Father unless he comes through Me."

Elsewhere, He warned that in the last days men would try to deny His uniqueness " For false Christs and false prophets will arise... and try to lead people astray..." (Mark 13:22)

Think about it for a second if Universalism is true, then not only is Jesus a liar for saying it was a false and demonic doctrine, He is also the stupidest man who ever lived because He voluntarily underwent the most excruciating and shameful death imaginable for no reason at all!

In other words, if there are other ways to God, then Jesus didn't have to die in our place.

Ultimately, what the great philosopher and writer C.S. Lewis said has logically got to be true "Jesus was either a lunatic, a liar, or else He is Lord." (Mere Christianity, (The Macmillan Company, 1952), C.S. Lewis, p. 41) And His life, death and resurrection should prove beyond any shadow of a doubt to anyone seeking the truth that the latter is the case Jesus is Lord, the true Messiah of God. And that's why Satan tries so hard to convince man to the contrary.

These are just some of the many examples in rock where the person of Jesus is mocked and vilified. While few, if any, of the artists involved are card-carrying devil worshippers, is it just a coincidence that the satanic scriptures are being so clearly fulfilled?

Moving from the person to the primary symbol associated with Christ, the Satanic Bible says "Behold the crucifix; what does it symbolize? Pallid incompetence hanging on a tree." (Book of Satan, Chapter 2, verse 1)

Again, this reviling hatred on Satan's part is understandable the cross is at the heart of the Christian faith. Apart from the crucifixion and subsequent resurrection of Jesus, which, by the way, is one of the most logically proven events in ancient history, our faith, in the words of the apostle Paul, "is futile and we are still in our sins." (1 Cor. 15:17)

As a symbol of its defeat and future obliteration, satanic religion loathes the cross and constantly seeks to discredit it. To this end, the "prince of the air" attempts to influence man in one of two directions. The more subtle of the two and hence the most prevalent is to give it superficial respect while at the same time associating the cross with the very sins that nailed Jesus to it. For example, virtually millions of young people today think nothing of wearing the cross around their neck or dangling from their ears while engaging in everything from sexual immorality to drug abuse sins for which the Lord was sacrificed on the cross. How Satan must enjoy the irony.

This type of desecration is virtually rampant in rock, with crosses the most popular jewelry choice of the stars. It seems as though the more perverted the artist, the larger, the more numerous, or the more obsessive is their focus on the cross.

Prince's music is filled with allusions to Jesus and the cross, leading the spiritually naive into thinking that he is some new breed of Christian. Jesus said however, "If you love me, you'll do what I say." (John 15: 10, 14; Matt. 7: 21) Among the things Jesus said was to avoid temptation to not tempt others to direct all worship to God to clothe oneself modestly to obey God and not our physical desires and to keep oneself sexually pure.

Prince's Jesus bears virtually no resemblance to the historical and biblical Christ. His is a demonic substitution that gives new relevance to the passage in I Timothy "In the last days some people will depart from the true faith by paying attention to lying spirits and doctrines of demons, through the pretensions of liars whose consciences are seared." (1 Timothy 4: 1-2)

Another superstar whose use of the cross is as obsessive as it is blasphemous is Madonna. Ex-porn star, Time magazine cover-girl, and, according to polls, one of the most admired and influential women in the world in the eyes of young people, she mixes the sacred with the profane with an intensity that gives new meaning to the word "sacrilege". In May of 1985, Madonna told Spin magazine that "Crucifixes are sexy because there's a naked man on them." (Spin, (May, 1985), p. 44) And still soft drink companies clamor for her endorsement. How far we have come from the public outrage that attended the comparatively benign statements of John Lennon two decades ago. Gradually we have been taken captive by seducing spirits until even the most shameless acts of blasphemy and desecration are socially acceptable.

Billy Idol crucifies his girl friend amidst a flurry of his incessant sexual posings. (From the video "Hot in the City") Artists impersonate a crucified Christ with a frequency that is astonishing. Crosses show up so often you would think that rock music was a Christian industry until one looks at their intent, message, and life-style.

Scripture provides a profound insight into this obsession with mocking the cross, an insight that can be objectively used to diagnose one's spiritual condition "The word of the cross is foolishness to those who are perishing." (1 Cor. 1:18a) In other words, mocking the cross is evidence that a person is spiritually dead. And it's the lord of death, Satan, who inspires this mockery through his incessant drive to pervert man's image of God and truth. Against this the Bible teaches, "But for those who are called to be saved, the cross is the power of God." (1 Cor. 1:18b)

Understanding this, we should each ask ourselves one of life's ultimate questions which is it for us, the power of God or an object of indifference or ridicule? If you're not sure, but are drawn to and enjoy these artists, that question has probably already been answered.

A second way that hell goes after the cross is through outright desecration associated with satanic religion and liturgy. The inversion of the cross for example, has been an essential element to satanic ritual for centuries. This T-shirt featuring an up-side-down cross and Christ and the word "Destroy" was designed by Johnny Rotten himself. Here Mick Jagger models it on stage during the Stones' 1981 world tour.

Desecration through destruction and the addition of demonic imagery and symbols is also well established within satanic religion. This symbol, found in the Satanic Bible, finds its way onto a Duran Duran album cover. Here we have what is known by witches and occultists as the Satanic Cross. The upside-down question mark purports to call into doubt the work accomplished by Jesus on the cross. Outside the dark underworld of satanic religion, it also serves as the group symbol for Blue Oyster Cult. The spiritual intent of this emblem is obvious from the Cult's use of it on stone totems, imagery from the book of Revelation, and this obvious parody of the Bible. To show you this is not a unique example of occultism within this group, listen to a song off their "Mirrors" album.

Not too satanic on the surface, but now listen to the high-pitched squeaky sound that occurred during the guitar lead. This time at a fraction of its regular speed. Again. One more time.

This desecration of the authority and character of God the Father brings us to our third satanic scripture. "I gaze into the glassy eye of your fearsome Jehovah...; I uplift a broad axe and split open his worm-eaten skull." (The Book of Satan, 1:10)

Transsexual rock artist Wayne County could very well have had this exact scripture in mind when he wrote "Storm the Gates of Heaven."

Both LaVey and County may want to reconsider this ambition. To gaze into the eyes of the glorified Christ would be bad enough. The apostle John likened them to flames of fire. (Revelation 1:14) The Father's, however, would be instantly fatal. (Exodus 33:20)

This blasphemy is intensified by Venom. On their "Welcome to Hell" album they proclaim "We are possessed by all that is evil, the death of you God we demand. We spit at the virgin worship and sit at lord Satan's left hand."

Taking a more seductive approach at blaspheming God is Depeche Mode. In a song that implies that faith in Christ is, at least in this life, pointless, the chorus attacks the love and the character of God.

This theme reaches its perverted climax in the song "Dear God" by XTC. Guess what the tree the lead singer strikes is supposed to represent?

The tree is obviously representative of the cross and it's the people in the tree who are the focus of the next satanic scripture "The angel of self-deceit is camped in the souls of the righteous. The eternal flame of power through joy dwelleth within the flesh of the satanist." (The Book of Satan, 5:13)

As the representative of Christ on earth, the church and things she stands for are abhorrent to satanic religion. Along this line, the group Scraping Foetus Off the Wheel sings: "And the only good Christian is a dead Christian."

Speaking of Christian death, the group by that name adds the church to their list of things to desecrate in the song "Stairs." You need to know that the city of God, Jerusalem, is the church in a spiritual sense.

The last two lines were written out and sung backwards. When you reverse the letters you get "There is no city of God. Damn the name of God."

This album is by Exodus. The name, of course, is taken from the Old Testament account of the people of God, the church in modern language, as they journeyed to the Promise Land. Here we see the church "bonded by blood" to a demonic entity that is the mirror image of itself. And guess which one of the two is in charge? Songs like "Deliver us to Evil" leave little doubt.

The group "Church" shows a church that is fallen, broken, and headless. The unappealing nature of the church in Christianity is also the subtle message of The Cure's song "The Holy Hour"

This disdain of penance, or sorrow for one's sin, is shouted from the housetops by the Eurythmics' Annie Lennox, along with a warning to avoid all contact with the one who might save your soul.

On the surface, well-publicized events within televised Christianity over the last two years might seem to warrant these criticisms. But think for a moment is it right to judge a group by the behavior of a small minority of its members? For every televangelist who has bit the dust, there are thousands of sincere, devout believers whose lives of self-sacrifice will never be noted except by the watchful eye of their Father in heaven. What about them? And anyway, the only hypocrisy that will be judged by God when you stand before Him will be your own. Don't cop out and try to hide behind someone else's sin. It doesn't work.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Hell's Bells - part 3

-The Dangers of Rock and Roll-

Part 3

In examining the next few satanic scriptures, I want us to focus on not only the philosophy they express, but the end results of believing that philosophy. You know life can sometimes be confusing, with all the different opinions and religious views that vie for our attention. It can be hard to know what is good and what is bad. As in the scripture we saw earlier, if Satan can disguise himself as an angel of light (2 Cor. 11:14), how can we tell whether something is of God or of the Devil.

Well, one way is to do what we have been doing to compare it to the Scriptures, the Word of God. And by this standard of judgment it's obvious that something has gone very wrong with much of contemporary rock.

Another very effective method, however, is to examine its fruit, the actions and attitudes it ultimately generates. Now Jesus said that we can discern false prophets and teachings from the good by the fruit they produce. (Matthew 7: 15-20) By way of an analogy, He spoke of trees sound ones bear good fruit and bad ones produce evil fruit.

Now sometimes when trees or plants are growing it's difficult to tell them apart. For example, on my right is a blueberry plant and on my left is something called "lantana". Right now there's not much to set one apart from the other. But when they mature, the fruit of one will be pleasant tasting and nourishing and the other poisonous. Their fruit will definitely set them apart.

In Christ's parable He said that the ultimate lot of this plant is to be cut down and burned. In an earlier verse, He mentioned both the source of this plant's problem as well as where the axe will fall when it is cast into the fire. "Even now the axe is laid to the root. Every tree that does not produce good fruit will be cut down and burned". (Matthew 3: 10)

If you stop and think about it, the root is invisible to us. It exists, in a sense, in another realm from our above-ground world, but it is this invisible root that determines what kind of tree and fruit will be produced.

This parable, of course, points to life and, more importantly, eternity and the judgement awaiting each of us. Scripture tells us that the fruits produced by the invisible root of God's Spirit are things like love, joy, peace, goodness and self-control. (Galatians 5: 22) Against these, the fruit produced by the root of Satan and man's fallen nature tend to the opposite anger and fear instead of love, anxiety instead of peace, lust instead of self-control. (Galatians 5: 19) Let's begin by examining rock for one of the most basic fruits of satanic religion. In John 10:10, Jesus said that among Satan's primary goals in the affairs of man is "to steal, kill, and destroy".

The intrinsic selfishness of man's heart coupled with the seeds of satanic philosophy will inevitably result in violence and death. "Are we not all predatory animals by instinct? If humans ceased wholly from preying upon each other, could they continue to exist? (The Book of Satan, 3:4)

Preying upon one another is a major theme running through the music album artwork stage shows videos and the lives associated with the rock music industry.

While the intent in most instances is to shock, grab one's attention, and increase album sales; evidence continues to mount that there are powers beyond the industry's control for whom this obsession with death is not a joke.

Many rock artists have found this out the hard way. From asphyxiating in their vomit, to dying of heart failure in the bathroom, their premature and often vulgar deaths point not only to the Prince of Death, but to the perverse way he treats his subjects.

And it's not just the artists who are being affected by this spirit of violence and death. The rock 'n' roll era has seen violent crime increase among young people by over 10,000%. Concert violence has become epidemic, culminating in a "Who" concert in Cincinnati where 11 people were trampled to death as crowds rushed the doors. Even the way many listeners relate to the music, shouting with fists punching the air, or crashing into one another in that paroxysm of aggression called "slam dancing", bear witness to the spirit of this world operating beneath the surface.

However, it is in the incredible arena of bizarre murders, ritualistic violence, and self-mutilation that the reality of satanic influence can be most clearly discerned. The last few decades have seen the appearance of some of the most twisted and violent acts imaginable. The primary things that link these senseless acts together is an obsession with rock music and a similarity to ancient satanic ritual.

Beginning with the most benign, the punk music revolution made self-mutilation a pop phenomenon. It became quite common to see young people stick safety pins through various parts of their body, or carve slogans into themselves with razor blades. Superficial bloodletting at concerts became a badge of the vacuousness, anarchy, and existential madness that was the clarion call of the movement. It was not uncommon to see artists like Sid Vicious or proto-punk Iggy Pop drag broken beer bottles or razor blades across their chests while on stage. Even heavy metal rocker Alice Cooper, in his typical Hollywood fashion, has gotten into the act.

What's interesting, as well as critically important to note here, is that these mindless acts of violence are not unique to this era. The scriptures recall a time when God's prophet, Elijah, challenged Satan's prophets to a contest in the supernatural. I Kings 18 relates what the devil worshippers did in order to get Satan to move on their behalf, "And so they leapt about and cried aloud and cut themselves according to their custom with swords and lances until the blood poured out upon them." (1 Kings 18: 28)

Now it's true these warlocks were consciously engaging in a demonic ritual while most, if not all, of modern punkers have no idea their behavior is virtually identical to this ancient form of satanism. But remember what we learned in Part I the spiritual realm is the higher reality. We are all profoundly affected by the Lord of whichever kingdom we are a part of, whether we are aware of it or not.

Moving on to even more serious acts of violence, self-mutilation has graduated in the last decade to murder and human sacrifice. Here are a few examples of a growing phenomenon that many law enforcement officials believe might already be epidemic:

*On April 12, 1985, a 14-year-old metal-head killed three people.

An Iron Maiden freak whose involvement with the occult led him to carve 666 into his chest, the boy claimed to have been under the influence of Eddie, Iron Maiden's mascot, when he committed the murders. (The Toronto Sun, November 1, 1985)

*The now infamous California mass murderer, Richard Ramirez, the "Night Stalker", was reportedly led into his obsession with the occult and ritual murder through groups like AC/DC. A school mate reported that it was their song "Night Prowler" that particularly seemed to affect Ramirez. On the record cover for Highway to Hell, the album in which "Night Prowler" appears, the singer of the song wears a pentagram around his neck. The most common of satanic symbols, it became Ramirez' calling card, appearing on the walls of his victim's homes and sometimes on the victim himself.

*1987 saw the capture of the serial murderer, occultist, and apparent cannibal Gary Heidnik. Time magazine noted that from his house in Philadelphia where the crimes were committed, heavy metal music blared day and night. (Time, April 6, 1987, p. 34)

Most people familiar with the case agreed no one of Tommy's age and background could have committed this perverted and violent of a crime without something to help him; yet neither alcohol nor drugs played a part. What then could it have been? The only real clues were found in Tommy's room and notebook. During the previous year he had become involved in the occult. And the vehicle for his satanic initiation heavy metal rock 'n' roll.

Again, this is, in the opinion of respected law enforcement officials, the tip of the iceberg. Satanic crime, both spontaneous and independent acts like Tommy's and deliberate and cult related violence like Heidnik's is on the increase. And invariably it marches to the beat of heavy metal rock 'n' roll, a genre, by the way, that is presently enjoying its greatest popularity in an almost 20 year history.

Now, I'm not saying that if you listen to heavy metal music the devil will make you kill your mom. These individuals all had other problems besides their addiction to rock 'n' roll. Remember though, that as an eternal spirit Satan's focus is on eternity. His primary goal is to take you to Hell with him. If Satan can get you to kill for him, great that's icing on the cake. The cake though is to keep you away from the one who can save you from Hell to make you think that following Jesus is stupid, wimpy, or irrelevant that real life is found in fun and doing whatever feels good. And what other art form is preaching this message with greater urgency and power than much of rock 'n' roll?

Some would say, "So what, it's all just in fun, nobody is supposed to take the message seriously." Well that sentiment completely ignores both the nature of man and the power of music. As Ken Wooden, investigative journalist and reporter with ABC's 20/20 has said, "Why do we spend billions on advertising? Because people answer the ads. This type of music is a form of advertising. And I've seen kids who have responded to the ads. I've seen them dead on marble slabs." (Richmond Times-Dispatch, June

Suicide

Another way people are answering the ads in rock music is through suicide. Now the second biggest killer of young people in the west, surveys have found that as many as one in seven teenagers have tried to kill themselves. Again, there are other factors contributing to this tragedy, but clearly rock 'n' roll has played a major part. (Music Metallica's "Fade to Black")

Suicide is perhaps the ultimate satanic deception because it must effectively short circuit a primary human instinct self-preservation. To accomplish this some basic truths have to be destroyed and replaced with lies.

The most foundational truth is that life has a transcendent purpose to know and experience God. We've already seen how rock has either ignored or ridiculed this truth. In place of it, the satanic lie is that life is fundamentally pointless, that at best our existence is given meaning by the pleasures we enjoy. One would be hard-pressed to find a secular rock artist who does not at least tip their hat to this demonic philosophy; most bow their knee and worship. (MTV's "Hedonism Weekend" with Bon Jovi)

It's worth noting here how the scriptures characterize the generation caught in the throes of end-time apostasy, "In the last days, men will be lovers of self, lovers of pleasure rather than lovers of God." (1 Tim. 3:2-4)

The next step in getting people to kill themselves is to remove human suffering from the context of transcendent meaning. The truth needing to be destroyed here is that suffering is either symptomatic of spiritual disease, thereby leading one to God, or is a temporary trial permitted by God in order to perfect one's character. The fact is, life is full of trials for everybody maturity and greatness come from triumphing over them. Against this, Satan's deception is that if life is found in pleasure then the absence of pleasure is to be avoided at all costs. If the pain becomes too great, killing oneself can be the logical way out.

Significantly, the soul of this present generation has been so bankrupt that the pain triggering much of the current epidemic of suicide is ultimately trivial: poor grades, a broken love affair, a disdain for reality. As Dr. Mark Rosenberg noted in his address to the American Society of Suicidology in 1988, "It was thought that the way to prevent suicide among teens was to treat depression. It's not the case with these kids. Rather than being clinically depressed, these young suicide victims are impulsive, acting out fantasies." (Rising to the Challenge, Vision Video, 1988 P.M.R.C.)

And where are the fantasies coming from? Enter again rock 'n' roll."

Is it just a coincidence that in many suicides around the country the victims have been obsessed with rock? And that often these very songs about death and suicide were the last thing they listened to before they took their lives? As the coroner's report read in the death of one John McCollum, "Decedent committed suicide by shooting self in head with .22-caliber pistol while listening to devil music." (Reader's Digest, July, 1988, p. 103)

Drugs

Another self-destructive and occult related activity that has been popularized by rock music is drug abuse. It is stating the obvious to say that drugs are everywhere in rock from the ravaged bodies of the stars to the lyrics of their songs. The Beastie Boys best selling album "Licensed to Ill", for example, contains over 90 references to drugs and alcohol abuse. (Rising to the Challenge, Vision Video, 1988 P.M.R.C., research by Robert DeMoss, Jr.)

What is not as well known, however, is drugs connection to the spiritual realm. Psychotropic or mind-altering substances are viewed by sorcerers and others involved in the occult as a gateway, or guide, into the spirit world. The Greek word in the scriptures for "sorcery" in fact, is "pharmakia", from whence we get our words "pharmacy" or "pharmaceuticals" in other words, drugs.

The reason God hates the misuse of drugs and connects it with the judgement of Hell is because their use is a form of sorcery. The high that is drugs primary attraction is unquestionably a spiritual experience, one that opens the user up to the spirit world.

This trend-setting song by the Beatles was originally entitled "The Void." Its purpose was to proclaim the gospel of enlightenment through drugs while simulating the sensory effects of LSD. The first line of the song was taken directly from the bible of the acid cult, Tim Leary's "The Psychedelic Experience."

The problem is the Holy Spirit will not respond on this level. Like the chaste woman of Proverbs who personifies wisdom and the revelation of divine truth, God will only appear to the one who seeks Him in righteousness. It is the harlot Satan who spreads himself before the individual who is high on drugs. And you can be sure that much of the proliferation of occultism within rock 'n' roll finds its genesis in precisely this way.

Ex-Beatle George Harrison explains the origins of his Krishna consciousness, "When I was younger, with the after-effects of the LSD that opened something up inside of me in 1966, a flood of other thoughts came into my head which led me to the yogis." (Rolling Stone, November 5, 1987)

Likewise, a rock magazine described the Cure's Robert Smith's creative process as follows: "He often comes up with his most macabre ideas for songs in the nightmares he experiences while sleeping off alcoholic binges. The entire album "The Head on the Door" was written under those conditions." (Starhits, October, 1988)

Over the years, the Grateful Dead have become almost synonymous with marijuana and LSD use. A national newspaper described the uncanny fascination they inspire in their devoted fans, "For many of the camp followers, the Dead are a religion and their lyrics a Bible. It is generally accepted that the Dead are tapped into some profound LSD inspired truth. Not surprisingly, some hallucinating Deadheads have weaved weird and elaborate theories about God and the Universe from strands of Grateful Dead lyrics." (The Washington Times, Concert 1986, Souvenir Edition)

It's not surprising because the Dead themselves have acknowledged this drug-induced transcendence. As Captain Trip's, Jerry Garcia, said in their biography "Playing in the Band", "I can't deny that there is a moment when I'm transformed, when all of a sudden God is speaking through my strings." (Playing in the Band, David Gans and Peter Simon)

As many rock artists like Garcia have entered middle age, they've had to break their addictions to drugs in order to survive. A few have recorded testimonials for RAD, Rock Against Drugs. A classic case of too little, too late, for most their warning cries sound hollow.

How can you be against something that your philosophy and lifestyle give rise to. For example, Bon Jovi has done a spot for RAD while maintaining their hedonistic message. And their powerful hit video "Wanted Dead or Alive" contains a not-so-subtle endorsement for the most abused drug of all, alcohol.

Ultimately, comedian and rock devotee Sam Kennison's criticism of Rock Against Drugs says it all, "It's like Christians against Christ, rock created drugs."

Sex

Perhaps the most inevitable and far reaching by-product, or fruit, of satanic philosophy is an obsession with sex. "Is not lust and carnal desire a more truthful term to describe love." (The Book of Satan, 3:5)

Prince's philosophy is by no means unique. Sex-related fantasies seems to be all anyone can see when surveying the music, artwork, and lifestyles of the rock music industry.

Popular music video director Marty Callner, whose pornography style landed him in the LA Times' "Hall of Shame", defended his use of erotic imagery by noting the nature of his subject matter "Sex is what rock 'n' roll is all about." (L.A. Times, January 24, 1988)

From the hip shaking of Elvis the Pelvis in the 60's to the perversity of the 80's, truly sex is what rock 'n' roll is about. Even the term rock 'n' roll, coined by Cleveland disk jockey Alan Freed, is a euphemism for sex in the back seat of a car. And the sex heralded by the rock industry is not the mature and unselfish kind mandated by God, but the satanic alternative impulsive, carnal, and ultimately destructive. As Dr. Alan Bloom said in The Closing of the American Mind, "Rock music has one appeal, a barbaric appeal, to sexual desire not love, but sexual desire undeveloped and untutored. It acknowledges the first emanations of children's emerging sensuality and addresses them seriously, eliciting them and legitimizing them,..." (The Closing of the American Mind, p. 73)

Dr. Bloom makes an important point here. Moral sanity is not anti-sex, but anti-exploitation. Contrary to popular opinion, God is not against sex it was His idea in the first place and he designed our bodies with the capacity to enjoy it. Scripture describes the act of making love as being central to the beginning of the marriage relationship. (Genesis 2:24, Matthew 19:5) Husbands and wives are further encouraged in the Bible to view their own bodies as belonging to their marriage partner in order that they might both give and receive comfort and pleasure. (1 Cor. 7:4) Sex is a vehicle for man's participation in one of life's greatest miracles, the creation of another human being. (Genesis 1:28) In short, sex is an enormously important, powerful, and beautiful act.

But like all things that contain intrinsic power, it has the potential to be destructive as well. And that's why God has so rigorously commanded that this very special act be reserved for a very special relationship, a life-long commitment between a man and a woman something we call marriage and family. (1 Cor. 6:13 - 7:9) Old fashioned? Maybe, but the more things change, the more they remain the same. No matter what the crowd says, purity and loyalty are still the bottom line, anything else leads to death.

Michael makes three contentions here about sex: 1. Morality is irrelevant, 2. Physical well-being is the primary consideration and 3. His song and video are not about casual sex.

Only one of the statements is true. With over 20 varieties of venereal disease lurking in the loins of some 30 million Americans, sex has become a hazardous undertaking, one that can be a matter of biological life or death. (Center for Disease Control, Atlanta) But to say it is no longer a matter of morality couldn't be more wrong. Moral principles are as real and as unchangeable as scientific ones, in fact, even more so. In the same way that gravity works regardless of public opinion, so God's standards of righteousness remain in place despite man's declarations to the contrary. No matter how much we hate and try to deny the idea, Jesus stated that there is a choice set before each of us. "He who falls on Me will be broken, but those on whom I fall will be utterly destroyed." (Luke 20:18) We can choose now to fall on Christ and let Him break our pride and arrogance, to trust Him instead of ourselves or someone else for our direction and purpose or we can continue along our own way and face the inevitable judgement that awaits all who reject the Messiah. And this eternal destruction is infinitely more tragic than the biological destruction that await somebody infected with AIDS, as horrible as that is. As Jesus said, "My friends, do not be afraid of those who kill the body, fear the one who has the authority to cast you into Hell." (Matthew 10:28, Luke 12:5)

The other lie is that this song is not about casual sex.

There is no love or life-long commitment here, just a "friendship" that is too shallow to extend beyond his own sexual impatience. With songs like this topping the charts, is it any wonder that we have a generation of young people who know little or nothing of true love and the virtues of self-control.

It scarcely needs mentioning that George Michael and songs like "I Want Your Sex" are just the tip of the iceberg. From 19-year-old chart topper Bobby Brown, who was arrested in February, 1989 in Georgia for simulating sex on stage with a member of the audience, to the brazenly pornographic style of mega-star Madonna, the vast majority of rock artists have become the moral equivalent of prostitutes in the temple of rock 'n' roll.

Some are subtle, using innuendo and sexual metaphor to appeal to the listener's carnal nature. Cindy Lauper's hit "She-Bop", for example, is nothing but a thinly veiled celebration of masturbation.

More and more, however, veiled illusions have given place to an explicitness that is almost unbelievable. Decency prevents us from playing some of the worst examples. As a sample, however, consider just one of several songs off this best-selling album by Van Halen.

Satanic sex is never content with what we might call "everyday perversions" things like masturbation and sexual activity between two unmarried people with some form of long term relationship. These are excellent first steps, gradually getting the participant used to being degraded and enslaved to lust. Once they are introduced to the fleeting pleasures of sin, an important spiritual law kicks in. "The deceptiveness of sin hardens our hearts." (Hebrews 3:13 paraphrase)

As our hearts become hard three things begin to happen, both individually and collectively: 1. We begin to justify our sin, 2. We become more blind and resistant to God's truth and salvation concerning our sin, and 3. We become more susceptible to the next stage of sin. This is perhaps Satan's most useful ploy, not only for the power it gives him over individual lives and the toll it takes on society, but for the demonic poignancy of it. How satisfying it must be for him to see the pinnacle of creation, people made in the image of God, performing acts not worthy of animals.

"Satanism condones any type of sexual activity. The prevalence of deviant behavior in our society would stagger the imagination of the sexually naive." (The Satanic Bible, (Avon Books, 1969), Anton LaVey, p. 67)

One doesn't have to be sexually naive to be staggered by the increasingly perverse love affair between rock and sex. Time and taste prevent an exhaustive expose, but briefly consider two primary symptoms of moral insanity sex married to its opposite violence and pain, and sex as religion.

One of the last sign posts on Hell's downward journey to sexual bondage and depravity is to mix violence with sex. Not only is sex removed from the sacred context of marriage and commitment, but it is further perverted by substituting pain for pleasure and death for life. Incredibly, this satanic theme has become increasingly common and popular in rock music.

In giving this song a positive review, People magazine called Strange Love: "a celebration of masochism.... Listen to this twice and you'll have a deeper understanding of masochists. Listen to it three times and you'll be one." (People, September 28, 1987)

One of the hottest groups of 1988 was Guns 'n' Roses. Their best-selling debut album features sexual violence on both the cover and in the music.

The platinum album "Shout at the Devil" by Motley Crue, featured this twisted lyric buried in their song "Too Young to Fall in Love".

Unfortunately, these are not isolated examples, as dozens of other groups sing about the pleasures of rape, pain and degradation. Is it any wonder that a recent poll found that a majority of 6-9th grade students felt that date rape was justifiable (re. Rhode Island Rape Crisis Center as noted in the "Rising to the Challenge" video), or that sexual crime among the young is on the increase? Even secular journals are beginning to connect these once unheard of events to the influence of rock 'n' roll. As scripture warned almost 2000 years ago, "Don't be deceived; God is not mocked, whatever you sow you will reap. If you sow to your carnal flesh, from that flesh you'll reap decay and destruction, but if you sow to the spirit, from the spirit you'll reap eternal life." (Galatians 6:7-8)

Scripture further encourages us to, "Set our thoughts on heaven instead of on the earth, putting to death earthly things like premarital sex, impurity, and lustful desires." (Col. 3:2&5)

Not content to simply degrade and pervert mankind, Hell seeks to substitute sex and lust for the things of heaven. And rock 'n' roll, possibly more than any other contemporary phenomenon, has helped realize the satanic ambition.

Bananarama's remake of the hit "Venus" and its attendant music video brought out some of the spiritual implications that were probably missed by most listeners when the song was first heard in 1969.

This theme is amplified by The Cramps on this album. Pornographic from beginning to end, the words to "Womaneeed" are too obscene to repeat here, but clearly marry biblical imagery concerning salvation to gutter sexuality.

Continuing with a song we looked at earlier

This theme is further developed in "Father Figure"

Michael's world-view gives no place to either scripture or the church. Sex and his worldly brand of relationship are all that is needed to find meaning in life.

Taking this theme even further is the homosexual group, The Frogs. Their album cover features a very young boy wearing a pink triangle, a symbol within the militant homosexual movement, and includes songs like "Gather Around for Saviour #2". The singer envisions a new world where children leave the church behind to follow a new Messiah him.

This blasphemy finds its axiomatic expression inside this album cover for another openly homosexual group, Frankie Goes to Hollywood. Pleasure is called the "Unique", the one thing that transcends everything else. Their artwork further develops this concept of sex as religion in this hideously perverted but sadly telling caricature of the biblical story of Noah and the flood. Do you see the animals walking two by two as in the days of Noah? Look at what they are crawling into. The ark, or the means of salvation for mankind, is a male sex organ.

How ironic this is given Jesus' admonition to the world concerning His coming in judgment on an unbelieving and perverted world. "My coming will be just like the days of Noah, when people were so caught up in physical pleasure that they had become blind to their sin and the destruction that was to be soon visited upon them." (Matthew 24: 37-39)

Against this, the Bible both warns and encourages us, "Do not be deceived, neither the immoral nor the sexually perverted will inherit the kingdom of God. Flee from sexual sin. Your body was not meant for immorality, but for service to the Lord." (1 Cor. 6:9, 18, 13)

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Hell's Bells - part 4

-The Dangers of Rock and Roll-

Part 4

Rebellion

Continuing with our examination of the by-products of rock 'n' roll, consider one of its greatest themes rebellion.

For Blackie Lawless of Wasp it goes even deeper. As he told the Washington Post, "Rock 'n' roll is an aggressive art form, pure hostility and aggression. I believe in that like a religion." (Washington Post, February 8, 1987, p. F2)

The spiritual significance here is brought out in this Old Testament passage, "For rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft." (1 Samuel 15: 23) Biblically, witchcraft is synonymous with satanism and rebellion is its root.

"For I stand forth to challenge the wisdom of the world; to interrogate the "laws" of man and of "God". He who saith 'thou shalt' to me is my mortal foe." (The Book of Satan, 1: 3&5)

The rebellion spoken of here is not the honest and vital revolt of good against evil and truth against lies, but rebellion steeped in evil anarchistic, hypocritical and ultimately destructive.

It's not an exaggeration to say that rebellion is more than just an occasional theme in rock it is its very heart and soul. As Rolling Stone Magazine proudly noted in its 20th anniversary television special Rock and rebellion have become so intertwined, in fact, that even the rock industry's voluntary attempts of toeing the line of human decency are fundamentally flawed. Take, for example, the many component parts that together made up Live Aid, rock's shot at world hunger.

Are we to believe that celebrating the joys of sex and sadomasochism is really going to help the world? Can we build with our left hand what our right hand seeks to destroy?

Practically speaking, several journals, including rock's own Spin Magazine, have reported that most of the aid ended up in the hands of Ethiopia's communist dictator, and that few starving people were ultimately saved. But stop and consider the bigger picture. Which is really the better solution to the world's problems: rock 'n' roll or Jesus, the Rock of Ages?

a one time donation to see Mick Jagger strip the skirt off of Tina Turner or a generation who has stripped away the devil's lies and pretensions and are willing to dedicate their lives to the service of God and a hurting world?

a crumb brushed from the lap of a multi-billion dollar industry or an army of young people who are forever giving to others the money and energy they once spent on the rock 'n' roll lifestyle?

Just as a bad tree cannot produce good fruit, so an industry rooted in rebellion against God and His word can never bring forth that which is truly good. As Jesus himself said "That which natural man does is of no real use, it is only the spirit who can give life. My words to you are spirit and life." (John 6: 63)

The Occult

Like an invisible cancer that inevitably leads to death, so the satanic seed in rock 'n' roll has culminated in a blatant obsession with the occult. Cryptic allusions to the devil in the music of blues artist Robert Johnson a generation ago have given place to an open worship of Satan and hell that comes complete with the symbols, liturgies, rituals and messianic personalities that attend any religious order. No longer the stuff of small underground cults, millions of young people have been caught in its evil sway.

Continuing with Dio's invocation -

Beginning the with symbols associated with satanic religion, there is none more foundational than the "pentagram", the five-sided star that is central to occult ritual. Next to the desecrated cross, there is also no other symbol more common to the rock music industry. Motley Crue, Slayer, Bebob Deluxe, Metal Fatigue, Venom, Ebony Records, Sam Kenison, Suicidal Tendencies, The Plasmatics, Blackie Lawless' original group Sister, and AC/DC are just a few examples where the satanic symbol is used.

Another symbol that is integral to satanic religion is the "Il Cornuto" a hand gesture that represents the devil himself. Like the pentagram, it too is virtually everywhere in rock music. Ozzy Osbourne, Meatloaf, Rick James, Cheap Trick, Motley Crue, Frankie Goes to Hollywood, Coven, The Beatles, Kiss, Todd Rundgren, and Dio are just a few examples where this sign for Satan is used.

On the back of his "Spanish Train" album, Chris deBerg has this amazing artwork. Not only is the devil shown giving his own sign, there is a sense of co-equality and reconciliation between him and the Lord Jesus, an incredibly blasphemous concept.

It is with the fans, however, where the Il Cornuto finds its greatest expression. No doubt the vast majority have little or no idea what they are communicating when they flash this sign. But this is true with most supernatural things. Being both invisible and transcendent, spiritual forces can exert great influence over a person without their being aware of it; especially when the have a "whatever feels good do it" attitude towards life. And that's why looking at our actions, or our fruit, is so important. They give us insight into the spiritual roots within us. Anyone who is given to using the devil's sign has good reason to, in the words of Jesus, "wonder what spirit is at work in them." (Luke 9: 55)

Our next satanic symbol, 666, is taken from the Bible. Revelation chapter 13 assigns that number to the "beast", the anti-Christ forces who war against God. (Rev. 13: 18) The "number of the beast" also serves as the title for this album by Iron Maiden. "Aphrodite's Child", featuring the popular composer Vangelis, is even more to the point with this album's name.

Along with the song with just heard by Anvil, RF-7 and Coven also have songs with "666" in the title. The "number of the beast" appears on album covers by Black Sabbath and the Plasmatics, the stage set of Motley Crue, and is etched into the vinyl of the best-selling album "Licensed to Ill" by the Beastie Boys.

Most rock fans will recognize this hieroglyphic, commonly pronounced "Sozo", as the unofficial name for Led Zeppelin's untitled fourth album and the personal symbol for Zeppelin's founder, Jimmy Page. What most people don't know is that by Page's own admission "Sozo" is a stylized 666. Not since Nero's Rome has the mark of the beast found such wide-spread expression.

In addition to symbols, occult ritual and philosophy also abound in contemporary rock music. Beginning with the most well-known, many groups within the heavy metal genre have popularized blatant, no-holds-barred satanism and witchcraft in their music, album covers, and stage shows. Take for example the song "Beyond the Gates" by the group Possessed

There are thousands of songs just like this being performed by hundreds of heavy metal bands around the world. Most are seldom heard outside of small cult followings a few have made it into the big time. Whether directly or indirectly, however, this type of music and the spiritual forces that attend it have made their mark on contemporary culture. What was once unthinkable, it now not only sung about and considered, it is at times even embraced and acted upon.

Heavy metal does not have a monopoly on blasphemy, however. The 80's have seen the emergence of a macabre brand of rock that combines elements of punk, New Wave, and even classical music. Including artists like The Cure, Bauhaus, Christian Death, Sisters of Mercy, Diamanda Galas, Nick Cave, The Lords of the New Church, and The Smiths, the occult elements within this new genre are even more disturbing than those in heavy metal because they are combined with an intelligence and poetic passion rarely found in the latter. For example, when Peter Murphy of Bauhaus, in an admitted take-off of the Satanic Mass, chants both forwards and backwards the Latin for "Father, Son and Holy Ghost", there is a certain feel, a sinister urgency you can cut with a knife.

As Propaganda Magazine described the recording of this song, "Peter summoned his last reserves for the final push. As if suddenly possessed by demons, the whole foul-smelling mess spouted from his mouth like so much vomit... (Later) the lingering evil spirits literally chased them right out of the dark studio, causing them to glance over their shoulders and laugh nervously as they spilled out into the street." (Propaganda Magazine, No. 11, Winter, 1989)

Diamanda Galas, whose voice was used to suggest the sounds of demonic possession in the movie "The Serpent and the Rainbow", closes out her "Litanies of Satan" album with these words, "To thee, O Satan, glory be, and praise. Grant that my soul, one day, beneath the Tree of Knowledge, may rest near Thee."

The press kit for her "Divine Punishment" album noted that a woman committed suicide after listening to it. (Forced Exposure Magazine, #15, Summer, 1989, p. 24) The entire performance is an eerie recitation of Old Testament scripture with one exception, Galas' "Sono L'Antichristo" ("I am the Anti-Christ").

Or consider England's "Thrill Kill Kult."

Amidst a 666, a crucified demon, and desecrated cross, Thrill Kill Kult invokes the sights and sounds of hell with a tangible urgency and a chilling effect. Like other artists within this genre and unlike the jack-booted flagrancy of heavy metal, the message is married to the most dangerous catalyst for satanic insurrection a sense of religious and poetic transcendence. In this the devil may lose an occasional human sacrifice, but he gains something that from his perspective is of much greater value a multitude who is willing to sacrifice hope in life's meaning and faith in God's love.

What is even more remarkable about this music is that while most of the groups readily acknowledge and even embrace its open spirituality, most do so with the insistence that it is ultimately Christian in its orientation. This is very significant because scripture makes it clear that the purest manifestation of the anti-Christ spirit always comes, not from without, but from within the context of Christianity.

Without going into too much detail, Satan's efforts in this regard have historically focused on propagating derivatives of an ancient and recurring heresy known as "Gnosticism". And it is this heresy that has found new expression in the work of these and many other rock artists. In this regard, the words in Jude's epistle are as relevant today as they were centuries ago "These in their dreamings defile their own bodies, reject authority, and revile the angelic hosts... things they do not even understand." (Jude 8 & 10a)

It's really no surprise that the anti-Christ spirit has become so manifest in rock. There is abundant evidence that rock 'n' roll's life blood has in some part been drawn from a musical form whose sole purpose it to summon forth evil spirits voodoo. An ancient and highly developed form of ritual, magic, and animism, voodoo originated in Africa and was brought to the Americas centuries ago via the slave trade. There it gradually evolved into jazz, rhythm and blues, and finally rock. That by itself does not make these musical forms demonic, but rock 'n' roll has dabbled in and at times even embraced the essence of voodoo in a manner unique among other contemporary musical styles.

Fleetwood Mac, for example, incorporated not only the rhythms into their live performance of their hit song "World Turning", they included voodoo ceremonial dress as well. Haitian voodoo was also used on the Stones' album "Goat's Head Soup". The icons, art and ritual body and face painting associated with the voodoo religion show up in the videos of Pretty Poison and Peter Dinklage. Voodoo is the theme of this song by Collin James and makes up the name of this popular New Wave group.

Jimi Hendrix's interest in spiritism produced not only the song "Voodoo Chile" but the following observation from one Kwasi Dzidzornu, a conga player who often played with Hendrix. Kwasi was from a village in Ghana, West Africa, where his father was a voodoo priest. "One of the first things (Kwasi) asked Jimi was where he got that voodoo rhythm from.... that many of the signature rhythms Jimi played on guitar were very often the same rhythms that (Kwasi's) father played in voodoo ceremonies. The way Jimi danced to the rhythms of his playing reminded him of the ceremonial dances to the rhythms his father played to Oxun, the god of thunder and lightening. The ceremony is called "Voodooshi". ('Scuse Me While I Kiss The Sky, David Henderson, p. 251)

Whether intentional or not, Hendrix's "voodoshi" must have worked its demonic magic. Two of his closest associates, Alan Douglas, road manager and producer, and Fayne Pridgon, long-time girlfriend, reveal a side of rock 'n' roll its fans seldom hear about. (Interviews taken from the soundtrack album from the film "Jimi Hendrix", Warner Brothers, 1973)

Like Hendrix, David Byrne of the Talking Heads is also fascinated with voodoo-related rhythms and has incorporated them into his music most notably his collaboration with Brian Eno, "My Life in the Bush of Ghosts", an album that includes a song about demonic possession, "The Jezebel Spirit". Byrne's admiration of African-based rhythms and religions prompted his "Alive from Off Center" documentary on the Candomble religion, a demonic hybrid of the Yoruba voodoo cult and Roman Catholicism.

In an interview concerning the documentary, Byrne noted, "If you go back into the history of American popular music, you're constantly finding hidden elements of Yoruba influence. The rhythms are there, the sensibility in the lyrics is there, too." (Rolling Stone, July 13th, 1989, p. 78)

A close relation of voodoo is the ancient cult of Pan. Half human and half goat, Pan remains one of the most enduring and compelling symbols for the anti-Christ. Instead of God incarnate in man, as with Jesus, we see man joined to animal one that is both a universal symbol for Satan as well as historically representative of the basest of animal and sexual passions. In the Rites of Pan, like voodoo, music and frequently drugs are used to entice spirits to possess the ritual's participants. And it's worth noting that possession by Pan, from which we get the word "panic", often results in an obsession with sex and a need for immediate gratification.

Not only do we see the sociological manifestations of this anti-Christ spirit everywhere in rock today, significantly we find some very direct allusions to Pan himself. Rush's "2112" album features the song "The Temples of Syrinx" a Greek word that relates to Pan. In 1987 Elton John commissioned an artist to design a family crest. Pan was the centerpiece of the design. The Stones' album "Tattoo You" features this feminized representation of a demon's leg. And arguably the most famous rock 'n' roll song of all time, Led Zeppelin's "Stairway to Heaven", makes a clear reference to not only the music of Pan and his pipes, but his ability to spiritually influence and guide those who fall under his spell. Lyricist and singer, Robert Plant, begins with the thought that "The piper will lead us to reason" and then sings

An interesting side-note. In the remote mountains of Morocco there's a group that still practices, in a literal sense, the Rites of Pan. "The Master Musicians of Joujouka", as they are called, inhabit a mystical world where music is the key that unlocks the supernatural. As rock artist and writer, Robert Palmer, described in his article on them for Rolling Stone Magazine, "When the music and energy were at their height, the tribesmen milled in ecstatic trances, their eyes rolled back in their heads, screaming like a great rending of the heavens.... Pan himself was there. Several times I witnessed the instant when the current began to surge in earnest and coursed through the quivering frame of a local shepherd... When the power came down, the shepherd suddenly wasn't there and Someone Else was looking out of eyes that abruptly began to glow like ruby lasers. One night he came and jerked me out of the crowd, and I ran with him. He leaped through a bonfire, and then I was in the bonfire, surrounded by flames but unharmed. Then I was spinning like a top, spinning into darkness. 'We have seen you through the music,' they (the Pan-worshippers) told me, 'Now you are one of us.'" Rolling Stone Magazine, March 23, 1989, p. 106)

Palmer is not the only one to become "one of them". Rock has uniquely bridged the gulf, both geographical and cultural, that separates the Joujoukan cult from the rest of the world. Among its other disciples are David Bowie, Robert Plant and Patti Smith. The Rolling Stones' founder Brian Jones spent considerable time in Joujouka recording and then later releasing an album of their music. The Stones' 1989 release "Steel Wheels" features samples of this Moroccan form of voodoo. Finally, it is perhaps no coincidence that on Patti Smith's most Joujoukan influenced album, "Radio Ethiopia", she writes in her liner notes what could double as the bottom line for either Pan or Satan in their musical war for the hearts and minds of men "rock n roll is royal warfare... the universe is our battleground...the fender - all guitars - our weapons...the technicians - great soldiers...the people - tender barbarians...the goal - the freedom to possess the key of the fifth battalion and release the fierce and stampeding angels of Abaddon (hell)."

To a great measure Smith's prophecy has come true. All around us evidence abounds that the fierce and stampeding angels of Abaddon have been released. True to the satanic form, Jesus is ignored or made fun of. The Christian standard of morality has been gutted, until even the majority of young people who profess faith in Christ believe in and practice pre-marital sex. And the new idols of this age, our entertainers, embrace the satanic while multitudes scream in adulation.

The early Stones, for example, bank-rolled an occult sect call "The Process" and provided a base of operations for their satanic evangelism. (Contact America radio broadcast, September 15, 1986) Later, Anita Pallenberg, an aspiring actress and accomplished witch, became the companion of first Jagger and then Keith Richards. In July of 1979, at Richards' Connecticut estate, an 18-year-old boy shot himself while lying in Pallenberg's bed. Investigating officers uncovered reports of weird rituals and sacrificed animals that led up to the suicide. (Rock and Roll Babylon, (Courage Books, 1982), Gary Herman, p. 125; The Rolling Stones The First Twenty Years, (Knopf, 1981), David Dalton, p. 148)

The Stones were further involved with a cult film maker and satanist Kenneth Anger. Jagger scored Anger's film "Invocation of My Demon Brother" and Pallenberg sponsored "Lucifer Rising", a movie that showed "the actual ceremonies to make Lucifer rise." Not coincidentally, the film starred rock singer Marianne Faithful, another ex-girlfriend of Mick Jagger.

The occult has also played a major part in the life and music of heavy metal super group Led Zeppelin. In 1974 they founded their own record company, Swan Song. Its first British release was the Pretty Thing's "Silk Torpedo." According to Zeppelin chronicler Steven Davis "The album was launched at a blasphemous Halloween party at the Chiselhurst caves. Naked women lined the recesses of the caves and reclined before altars in the style of a black mass. Strippers dressed as nuns doffed their black habits." (Hammer of the Gods, (William Morrow and Company, 1985), Stephen Davis, p.246)

Though shocking, this type of behavior should come as no surprise when we consider that the group's founder is one of the leading occultists of the rock generation. Jimmy Page's fascination with black magic is so intense, he owns and operates The Equinox, one of the largest occult bookstores in England. (Creem Magazine, November, 1979) And his devotion to this man is nothing short of religious. Aleister Crowley was one of the most infamous satanists of our modern age. During the first half of this century, he developed a system of magic that combined the elements of a rock idol's dream sex, drugs, ritual, and special knowledge that granted the practitioner a measure of power. Billed as the "Wickedest Man in the World", Crowley claimed the title "The Great Beast - 666". (The Aleister Crowley Scrapbook, (Samuel Weiser, Inc. 1988), Sandy Robertson) When Kenneth Anger, himself a Crowley enthusiast, approached Page about writing the music for Lucifer Rising, he found, in Steven Davis' words, "a priceless collection of Crowley artifacts books, first editions, manuscripts, hats, canes, paintings, even the robes in which Crowley had conducted rituals." (Hammer of the Gods, p. 168)

Most incredible of all, Page purchased Boleskine, Crowley's old home on the shores of the famous Loch Ness in Scotland. (Hammer of the Gods, p.123; Led Zep Special, (Modern Day Periodicals, Inc., 1980), p. 46) Later Page had the demonic power associated with the house accentuated by having it redecorated by Charles Pierce, a renown satanist. Within the next few years one of Boleskine's caretakers committed suicide, another went insane. (Hammer of the Gods, p. 291)

Crowley's enchantment extends well beyond Led Zeppelin. Graham Bond, a rock pioneer whose bands provided the first break for some of rock's biggest artists, actually thought he was Crowley's illegitimate son. One of his later bands was entitled "Aleister Crowley's Holy Magic" producing music that would in his words "help the listener contact the higher forces." For Bond it must have worked, he became mentally ill and later died amidst mysterious circumstances. (The Aleister Crowley Scrapbook, p. 117)

David Bowie's 1971 album "Hunky Dory" featured "Quicksand", a song about Crowley's cult that included the line "immersed in Crowley's uniform of imagery." By 1975 biographer Henry Edwards described Bowie as having done just that as he became obsessed with Crowlean rituals and mantras, stored his urine in the refrigerator ala "The Beast's" advice, and finally looked to witches and exorcism rites to deliver him from the evil spirits he felt controlled his life. (Stardust The David Bowie Story, (McGraw-Hill Book Co., 1986), Henry Edwards and Tony Zanetta, pp. 334, 335, 339)

The Stiff Kittens feature Crowley on an album cover, as did the Beatles on what was to become, many critics believe, the most significant album in rock music history, "Sergeant Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band." A glance at John Lennon's bookshelves reveal that Crowley's inclusion was not a token gesture from numerology to magic, Lennon was fascinated with the occult. (Lennon's interest in the occult and "New Age" style spiritism is well documented throughout both The Lives of John Lennon and The Beatles, Second Revised Edition, (McGraw-Hill, 1985), Hunter Davies)

On the back of this album, Jim Morrison and the Doors are huddled around a miniature bust of Crowley. This fascination with the occult began early for Morrison. He attributed much of the direction of his life to an incident that occurred when he was very young. Traveling with his family, he came upon an accident that had left several American Indians dead, scattered along the highway. Morrison describes what happened next:

The souls and the ghosts of those dead Indians, maybe one or two of them, were just running around freaking out and just leaped into my soul. And they're still there. (An American Prayer, Jim Morrison and the Doors, "Ghost Song")

Possession by these ghosts or spirits led to a life and art obsessed with death, occult imagery, and the rejection of God.

Cancel my subscription to the resurrection. Send my credentials to the house of detention. (Strange Days, The Doors, "When the Music's Over")

In 1970 Morrison married a witch in a ritual that involved satanic invocations and the drinking of blood. (No One Here Gets Out Alive, (Warner Books, 1980), Jerry Hopkins and Danny Sugerman, p. 327) A year later the self-professed "shaman" or witch doctor of rock 'n' roll was dead.

Ozzy Osbourne sings a song entitled "Mr. Crowley". Celtic Frost dedicates their album to "Mega Therion", the Great Magician, a name Crowley took to himself. And Daryl Hall also admits to a fascination for the infamous satanist. As he told Penthouse magazine in 1987, "Around 1974, I graduated into the occult, and spent a solid six or seven years immersed in the Kabala and the Chaldean, Celtic, and Druidic traditions,... I also became fascinated with Aleister Crowley, the nineteenth-century magician who shared these beliefs." (Penthouse Magazine, March, 1987, pp. 60, 62)

Three British rock groups also bear mentioning here Psychic TV is the musical voice for "Thee Temple Ov Psychick Youth", an occult sect with ties to Crowley and practically every other satanist of note. For example, the following dedication was made at the beginning of one live album, the eleventh in a series of twenty-three.

We'd like to dedicate this concert to Alex Sanders who died today the Full Moon of Beltane who was known as "The King of the Witches" and who was the man who made witchcraft and magic legal in Britain after a long struggle. So we'd like you to remember that. But the war goes on! (Live at the Circus, Psychic TV, "Beltane")

Coil also puts forth occult philosophy rooted in Crowleyana. This album embraces two themes near to the "Great Beast's" heart homosexuality and the worship of Pan. Probably the most devout Crowley cult of all is Current 93. The album and song "Crowleymass" ridicules Christ and His birthday and suggests an alternative, October 12 ("The Beast's Birthday!").

Their "Here Comes Anti-Christ" album contains bizarre and ritualistic music that defies any explanation other than that they are quite serious about their satanism. Etched into the vinyl is both the Latin and the English for "He comes! Soon you shall see!"

Crowley's heritage also lives on in the practice of necromancy - communication with the spirits of the dead. Iron Maiden's mascot "Eddie" is purportedly a lost soul who was brought back to life by the band's music. And at least two groups were actually given their names by demon spirits. Playing with the occult tool commonly known as a Ouija board, a device, that incredibly, many view as a harmless game, four young men in an Iowa hotel room watched as the board spelled out "C-H-E-A-P T-R-I-C-K". (Washington Times, Interview by Robyn Floria) The rest, as they say, is history. And Vincent Furnier became "Alice Cooper" in exactly the same way. (Circus Magazine, December 17, 1978, p. 23) Songs like "I Love the Dead" and "Cold Ethel", which include references to necrophelia, or sex with corpses, suggests that the spirit's influence extend well beyond just providing the name for Alice's group.

Finally, and perhaps most curious of all, Crowley like many sorcerers, expressed an interest in backwards phenomena. For example, in his most famous work, Magic in Theory and Practice, he encourages his disciple to "train himself to think backwards by external means, as set forth here following. (a) Let him learn to write backwards. (b) Let him learn to walk backwards. (c) Let him constantly watch, if convenient, films and listen to records reversed." (Magic in Theory and Practice, (Dover Publications, 1976), Aleister Crowley, p. 417)

Confirmation that backwards phenomena is characteristic of satanic religion comes from respected British criminologist, Henry Rhodes. In a book detailing the spiritual roots of modern crime, he describes the ritual surrounding a satanic mass. "The priests so times his mass that it shall end on the stroke of midnight, his server is a woman with whom he should have been intimate. Prayers are said backwards." (The Satanic Mass, Henry T.F. Rhodes, 1954, p.60)

In fact, backwards phenomena is quite common throughout the occult world and in the lives of those who have been affected by its power. Had they known this, the police officers who discovered the backwards writing in Tommy Sullivan's personal notebook would not have been surprised.

Earlier in this presentation, we noted within rock 'n' roll two examples of backwards recording commonly known as "Backmasking". Each has been of the same variety, where the artist or the engineer has simply reversed a vocal track and then mixed it in with the rest of the music. Now it's easy to pick out this type of backmasking when listening to a record forwards which is still, presumably, the preferred method of enjoying music. The backmasked section makes virtually no sense forwards and also has a distinctive atonal sound.

Now, as another example of this type of backmasking, listen to the beginning of "In League With Satan" from Venom's album, Welcome to Hell. First we'll listen to it forwards.

Biblically, theologically this backmasked message is really quite accurate that is precisely what Satan has planned for each one of us. It's only through Jesus, who defeated the devil by His death and resurrection, that we can escape this fate. But back to the point at hand, it's evident that Venom had this backmasking done intentionally and, therefore, it could be argued that there is no significance here beyond the fact that three guys like to get weird, probably just as a gimmick to sell records.

But now consider the second type of backmasking. With this variety the vocal track makes sense both ways. When you listen to the music forwards you hear one message. When you listen to it reversed, however, you hear something entirely different.

Now it's been suggested by some that when we listen to music in its normal forwards mode, our subconscious mind is able decipher the backwards message and mind-control results it becomes what is termed a "subliminal cue". Really, there isn't a shred of reputable evidence anywhere supporting that hypothesis, and anyway, so what if there is some subliminal suggestion going on here? As we've already seen, you don't need backmasking to pollute someone's mind and heart the regular frontwards music is more than enough to take care of that. The real question we need to ask here is not "Can a listener subconsciously hear a backmasked message?" but instead "How did it get there?" There are three possible explanations.

1. That it's intentional that like the first type of backmasking, the artists or engineers are intentionally hiding messages in the music. We must remember here, however, that the vocal track makes sense forwards as well as backwards. For it to be intentional, the vocalist would have to sing just the right lyrics and in just the right way and nobody's that smart, as a number of musicians and producers have testified.
2. That it's just an accident a quirk of musical fate. Well not only are the mathematical probabilities of this absurd, but the fact that virtually every example of this type of backmasking conveys a message that is intrinsically demonic even further disproves this hypothesis. Really, the only workable explanation is our third choice
3. That it is spiritual that outside intelligent forces with supernatural power are occasionally able to play an artist, much like we would play a musical instrument.

Biblically, this makes perfect sense as we see the principle found in 2 Timothy echoed again and again that virtually all unsaved people have been deceived and ensnared by Satan and are captives to his will. (2 Timothy 2: 26) The degree of captivity is determined by the extent to which an individual gives himself to sin and embraces the principles of Satan's kingdom rebellion, slavery to lust, occultism, all the things we see so clearly manifested in rock 'n' roll. In addition, let's remember that many of these artists, an incredible number in fact, have quite candidly admitted that they and their music are influenced by some outside spiritual force.

Like the subtle, practically invisible fingerprints left behind at the scene of a crime, the following aural phenomena point clearly to the one who came to steal, kill and destroy.

Our first example is from Electric Light Orchestra's "El Dorado" album. Here's a segment from the title song played forward:

Note that even forwards there's an element of anti-Christian thought here. Eternal life is definitely meant to be. We're all going to live forever the only question is where. Now, here's that same segment played backwards:

Again. One more time.

Our next example is by Queen from their song "Another One Bites the Dust" one of the most popular and enduring songs in rock history. Taking this same section and playing it backwards we hear:

Understanding what we learned in Part III, that drugs and sorcery are closely tied together, it's easy to see the satanic motivation behind the command "Start to smoke marijuana."

Next we have a song taken from Cheap Trick's popular album "Dream Police." The significance of the the song's title, "Gonna Raise Hell", becomes even more apparent when we reverse this segment:

Again. One more time.

Theologically, this is quite interesting because keys are symbolic of authority, particularly over the power of sin and its penalty, death and hell. Revelation 1:18 states that Jesus, who actually died in our place and went to hell, is now "the Living One, who was dead and is now alive forever and ever and holds the keys of death and of hell." Satan's claim to hold the keys in this song, as well as on this album cover by the group "Halloween", is very significant, not only because it's a lie and typical of his empty bravado, but because it points out how desperately he wants to retain ownership of people's lives.

There's also theological significance in our next example, the live version of the song "Anthem" by the group Rush. When we play this section reversed we hear:

Again. One more time.

One of the translations for "Lucifer", a Latin title commonly associated with Satan, is "The Shining One." And earlier in Part I, we looked at a scripture that tells us that disguising himself as "an angel of light" is what the devil is all about. (2 Cor. 11: 14)

Our last example is taken from Led Zeppelin's "Stairway to Heaven".

Once again there is enough poison in the song forwards to prove fatal. Yes, it's true that there are two paths you can go by. Jesus Himself said that there are two paths. One is a road traveled by the multitudes where the herd instinct prevails and where the desires of our flesh and the idols of the age lead the way. This path, Jesus said, leads to destruction. Then there's a road less traveled, a narrow path that takes us to a hill outside of Jerusalem and to a cross. And this is the way, God says, that leads to eternal life. (Matthew 7: 13 & 14)

The fatal lie in this lyric is that there is always time to change the road you're on. No doubt the man who played the drums in that song thought that until he found himself choking in his own vomit. And by then it was too late. Each of us have no guarantee that our next breath won't be our last. And after death, the scriptures tell us, comes judgement. (Hebrews 9: 27)

But there's not always time to change in another, even more fundamental sense. In John's gospel Jesus said, "No one can come to Me", in other words, be saved from sin and Hell, "unless the Father who sent Me draws him." (John 6: 44) What this means is that the idea to get right with God, to turn from your sin and embrace Jesus, isn't something you can work up on your own. For it to work, for it to be truly sincere, God has to draw you to reveal both your sin and the hope that is in Christ. Only then can you respond in a way that will change your life. If you reject that opportunity, you are, in fact, rejecting God and the chance to change the road your on a chance that you may never have again. That's why Joshua said "Choose this day whom you will serve" (Joshua 24: 15) and Paul declared "Today is the day of salvation." (2 Cor. 6: 2) What day were they speaking of? Well, whichever day God chooses to deal with you.

Now let's get very real with ourselves and with God. If right now you're sitting there, aware of the sin that has enslaved you and with a stirring in your heart that somehow you need to do something about it, then this is almost certainly your day. Maybe you're frightened, nervous, or uptight. That's all right God can take care of that. But you have to give Him a chance. Don't blow off what is the most precious gift that you'll ever be offered the gift of God's forgiveness, His love, and His life.

Back to "Stairway to Heaven", here's that same section reversed:

Again. One more time.

As we have seen throughout this presentation Satan is not sweet. He's a liar and the father of all lies (John 8: 44) and will use anything, including one of the most powerful tools of all music, to blind you to the reality of God's love and your desperate need for His saving power; to pervert your mind and heart and bring you into greater captivity to sin. His path clearly is sad, but his power can be broken. "For behold, He who was dead is now alive and holds the keys of death and Hell." (Revelation 1: 18)

Stay sensitive to God and don't go away. In the next and final section we'll share with you how your life can be changed and you can find the freedom and love that is in Jesus Christ.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

Original file name: Hell's Bells - part 4 - converted on Sunday, 27 October 1996, 18:13

This page was created using TextToHTML. TextToHTML is a free software for Macintosh and is (c) 1995,1996 by Kris Coppieters

Hell's Bells - part 5

-The Dangers of Rock and Roll-

Part 5

As we now approach the moment of truth, there are two common excuses that begin to roll around in people's minds kind of last ditch stabs at self-justification. One deals with the issue of intention and motivation.

"Hey, it's not my fault that some of the groups I listen to sing about bad things. I mean, hey, I'm only in it for a good time you know, blow off a little steam. I'm not going around worshipping the devil or anything."

We'll come back to this issue in a moment when we look at the bottom line of satanism and what it really means to follow the devil. But first let's deal with the other excuse, one that is particularly common with "religious" people those, who in the words of scripture, "love feeling good more than they love God holding to a form of religion, but denying the power of it." (2 Timothy 3: 4, 5 (paraphrase)) Ironically, it's people in this group that are often the most resistant to the saving power of God.

"I don't like the satanic stuff. I like the easy stuff, the neutral stuff like Whitney Houston or George Michael or Phil Collins. I like stuff like that."

First off, as we have seen, many of the artists who are considered neutral are not neutral at all when you look beneath the surface. Take, for example, one of the reigning queens of pop music, Whitney Houston.

Though probably one of the nicest individuals within the contemporary music scene, as an artist there is no question that she has endorsed, or at least permitted, a worldly brand of sex and sensuality to be used to sell her music. While no where near as brazen as Madonna, aren't poses like this or videos like "Saving All My Love for You", a blatant celebration of adultery, just another, more subtle side of the same coin?

And even more important, isn't the so-called neutral stuff, by the very reason of it's subtlety, potentially more destructive than the overt wickedness found in hard core rock 'n' roll? Surprised? Well, stop and consider the following fact of life. For something to be true, it has to be completely true. Inject into it even the smallest falsehood and that truth immediately becomes a lie a weapon in the hands of the one whom the scriptures call the "father of all lies". (John 8: 44) And while there is no doubt that Satan's greatest triumph in this arena is to see people swallow lies devoid of even the slightest trace of virtue, cons like "Sex, Drugs, and Rock 'n' Roll", the fact is that his most effective deceptions are those that carry a degree of truth. And that's why the middle of the road, in music as well in many other areas of life, can sometimes be the most dangerous place of all.

By way of an analogy, take strychnine, one of the most powerful poisons in the world. In its raw state it is unattractive and extraordinarily bitter. Left in a room with young children, it's unlikely that they would pay much attention to it and even more unlikely that they could stand to eat enough for it to be fatal.

So it is with some of the more extreme forms of rock music that directly glorifies death and Satan. Most people avoid it, although it must be noted that our society has become so desensitized and perverted that some are only too happy to take this bitter poison straight.

To the point at hand, however, if you were to take this same poison and sugar-coat it and add pretty colors to it and make it look, for example, like M & M's ,and then leave it with the children virtually everyone of them will eat the poison without hesitation.

If you were the devil, which method would you find the most reliable the bitter poison, or the sugar-coated candy?

As the great philosopher and writer C. S. Lewis noted in his classic The Screwtape Letters, "Indeed the safest road to Hell is a gradual one the gentle slope, soft underfoot, without sudden turnings, without milestones, without signposts." (The Screwtape Letters, (Time Incorporated, New York, 1961), C. S. Lewis, p. 39)

Using another analogy, the biblical picture of man without God is much like this poor fellow right here he's in critical condition, suffering from a sinful wicked heart that has separated him from God. Spiritually dead and unable to do even the least thing to help himself, when his heart stops beating, he'll be launched into an eternity without hope. This person is in desperate need of help.

Extreme forms of music, like heavy metal, glorify this fallen state. Perversion, despair, death, hell, Satan, and all the other horrors associated with sin are rubbed into the face of the listener. Incredibly, some subject themselves to this. Many others, however, opt for the safer stuff and head for the so-called "neutral" or "pop" music.

But what does the pop musician really have to offer his listener? Cries of "love", "peace", and "we are the world" don't mean much to a dying man. In fact, by ignoring his condition, or offering instead a false hope of salvation, this poor wretch's situation has only been made worse.

Of course, there is nothing wrong with singing about love unless it's the conditional, selfish love popularized by contemporary music. There is nothing wrong with singing about peace and caring for the world. These are all virtues taught and practiced by Jesus. There's nothing wrong with even singing about death and despair as long as it is done within the framework of truth and God's redemptive purposes. Understand that God is reality, His word is truth, and His son, the Lord Jesus Christ, is salvation from sin.

Heavy metal mocks this. Pop music ignores it. Which is ultimately worse?

As we saw in Part I, the primary reason for our existence is to know and experience God an act called worship. Understanding only too well fallen man's tendency to lose sight of eternal things and reduce reality to a head-long quest for emotional and physical satisfaction, God cautions us throughout the scriptures to seek first His kingdom and not let the world's system wear us down. "Above everything else, guard your heart (in other words what you listen to, watch, and do) for it is the source of life. Make level paths for your feet and take only ways that are firm. Do not swerve to the left or the right... Let your eyes look straight ahead." (Proverbs 4: 23-27)

Hundreds of years later, Jesus amplified this teaching when he said that our eyes should be single, completely focused on God. If they are not "...your whole body will be full of darkness... No one can serve two masters. You'll end up loving one and hating the other." (Matthew 6: 23)

The bottom line for us is that if we really love God, we'll find ourselves naturally offended by things that mock His character, ignore His love, or pervert His truth. If instead, we gravitate to and embrace these types of things, we don't really love God, we simply can't. "If anyone loves the fallen world's ways, the love of the Father is not in them. For everything that is in the world, the desires of sinful man, the lust of his eye, and the boastings about what he has and does comes not from the Father, but from the world. The world and its desires pass away, but the man who does the will of God lives forever." (1 John 2: 15-17)

Now, let's get back to the other key excuse people use to avoid the truth the issue of intention and motivation. Interestingly enough, rock's fans aren't the only ones who live behind a wall of denial in this area the artists themselves often like to play dumb.

Led Zeppelin's Jimmy Page denied any evil motivations behind his legendary involvement in the occult when he said, "I do not worship the devil, but magic does intrigue me." (Hit Parader Magazine, July, 1975, p.64)

Stone's guitarist Keith Richards told an interviewer, "There are black magicians who think we're acting as unknown agents of Lucifer." (Rolling Stone Magazine, August 19, 1971) In other words, if something is going on outside our control, it's not our fault.

All American boy Michael Jackson, whose phenomenally popular video "Thriller" is filled with occult imagery, including his transformation into a werewolf and necromancy, or contact with the dead, begins the video with the following disclaimer: "Due to my strong personal convictions I wish to stress that this film in no way endorses a belief in the occult."

And both Ozzy Osbourne and Dee Snider of Twisted Sister try to down-play the obvious elements of rebellion and the occult in their music by claiming that it's all in fun, and then professing to actually be closet Christians. (Ozzy professed to be a Christian during his interview on the Geraldo Rivera broadcast entitled "Exposing Satan's Underground". Dee's profession occurred during his testimony before Congress on the subject of obscenity in rock and roll.)

What do these denials mean? If all these people mean well or are just trying to have a good time, they and their fans can't be considered followers of Satan, can they? Well listen carefully because everything we've seen and heard so far has been leading up to what I am about to say. Part of the reason that many people have such a hard time with this "Satan worship" business is because they have a caricature of the devil and his religion in their minds. He's the horn-headed dude in the red pajamas, and following him, should he even exist, means sacrificing babies, drinking blood, or something else equally horrible or weird. In fact, nothing could be further from the truth.

As we have already seen, Satan is an invisible spirit and a master of disguise. His ability to pass himself off as an angel of light can fool the rebellious, or the spiritually ignorant, into thinking that black is white, truth a lie, and even that God Himself is the one telling them these things. And as for following the devil, many who openly do so can tell you that, at least for them, it's nothing like the movies portray it. And that's what's so frightening. For example, Anton LaVey, the high priest of one satanic church, explains the essence of satanism as follows:

And he must as a Satanist, knowing this, realizing what his human potential is, eventually, and here is one of the essential points of satanism, attain his own godhead in accordance with his own potential. Therefore, each man, each woman, is a god or goddess in satanism.

So in essence, satanism is simply each person acknowledging no one else, not even Satan, as a higher authority as our own god or goddess, each of us is free to do as we please. Theologically, this philosophy is reduced to a single axiom found in the fourth chapter of the book of Satan, "Say unto thine own heart, 'I am my own redeemer.'" (Book of Satan 4: 3)

We are all born with a sense that we are not complete and something is missing the rest of life becomes a quest for wholeness and fulfillment; in theological terms, "redemption". Whatever we look to for this, be it God, money, power, sex, or anything else, that person or thing becomes our redeemer by definition, our god. Satanism states that that god is us.

In a nutshell, Christianity declares that each of us bears the stain of sin and are, therefore, completely unable to save ourselves. We need a "Messiah", a supernatural redeemer. Every other religion in the world says, in one way or another, that we are not really that bad and that through our own efforts we can redeem ourselves. In this they share the bottom line of satanism and much of rock 'n' roll.

A pleasant number-one hit song becomes a startling presentation of satanic philosophy when viewed in the light of Truth. The religious imagery of Jacob's ladder, fallen angels, and running from salvation make it clear "Step by step, rung by rung", "We are our own redeemers."

Van Halen also denies the need for God's saving power in their hit song "Best of Both Worlds".

Contrary to Sammy Hagar's advice, Jesus said that if we are to have heaven on earth or anywhere else, "we must be born again." (John 3:3)

Another way this philosophy is expressed in satanic theology is in Aleister Crowley's most famous and enduring proverb "Do what thou wilt is the whole of the law."

Before we examine the implications of this law, it's quite extraordinary how it, like much of Crowley's life and philosophy, has taken hold in the world of rock 'n' roll. Led Zeppelin had "Do what thou wilt" inscribed into the vinyl on the initial pressing of their third album. Pharmacological guru of the rock 'n' roll generation, Timothy Leary, for whom John Lennon wrote the song "Come Together," had this to say on one television interview:

Well, I've been an admirer of Aleister Crowley; I think that I'm carrying on much of the work that he started over 100 years ago. And I think the 60's themselves you know Crowley said he was in favor of finding your own self and "Do what thou wilt shall be the whole of the law" under love. It was very powerful statement. I'm sorry he isn't around now to appreciate the glories that he started.

One of those glories involved rock musician Bobby Beausoleil. He took Jimmy Page's place composing the music for Kenneth Anger's film "Lucifer Rising" and also took "Do what thou wilt" very seriously. Ultimately it led him to Charles Manson and participation in one of history's most gruesome serial murders. Crowley's legacy had reached its full potential.

But that potential lives on in a more subtle way in the lives of countless millions who have "...been made spiritually blind by the god of this age." (2 Cor. 4: 4) This blinding deception has been focused on obscuring one of life's most elementary truths that ultimately there are two kingdoms and two types of people; those in God's kingdom who have been redeemed by God and those in Satan's who are trying to redeem themselves.

In the same way that the Kingdom of God holds to one supreme commandment, "You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, mind, soul and strength." (Deut. 6: 5, Mark 12: 30), so satanism can also be reduced to one essential law, "Do what thou wilt." Contrary to the deceptive stereotype, no black masses or wild sex rituals are necessary to be a follower of Satan simply deny the love and the authority of God by living your life the way you want to. You can even be religious, attend church regularly, tithe, perform good works. If it's a religion based upon your own terms, you are still comfortably fulfilling the dictates of Satan's most primary law, "Do what thou wilt."

How ironic that men like Crowley and LaVey should understand better than most people who attend church, the true root of sin and the essential duality that divides asunder the whole of mankind.

Each of us is ultimately given a choice upon which hangs the weight of eternity. We can go our own way and remain forever lost or we can reach out to the One who is "...the way, the truth, and the life." (John 14: 6)

To use an analogy, if what we believe is the music and what we do is the dance, we can, in the words of Billy Idol, "Dance with ourselves" remaining "...dead in our sins, following the ways of this world and its ruler (Satan), ...gratifying the cravings of our sinful nature, following its desires and its thoughts, ...being by nature children of wrath." (Ephesians 2: 1b, 2, 3) Or we can turn our ears to Heaven's music and allow God to teach us a new dance, a new way of living our lives.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

God's Law and Society, a newly released video, produced by Reel to Real Ministries, features 16 noted Christian leaders and scholars, each an expert in applying the Ten Commandments to American life!

God's Law and Society gives biblically sound teaching in a two-tape, four-hour series, divided into ten parts - a perfect format for group instruction as well as personal Bible study!

This provocative teaching video will help you form a comprehensive biblical worldview on God's Law. The ten short 20-minute programs feature answers to thought provoking questions, such as:

- * Are we under Law or under Grace?
- * How does the Old Testament Law apply today?
- * Can we legislate morality?
- * What about the separation of church and state?
- * Was America founded as a Christian nation?
- * What would a Christian America look like?

Speakers include: R.C. Sproul Jr., Randall Terry, George Grant, Howard Phillips, Kenneth L. Gentry, Gary DeMar, Jay Grimstead, R.J. Rushdoony, Andrew Sandlin, Stephen McDowell, Robert Schenk, Steve Schlissel, Phillip Vollman, Monte Wilson, Doug Wilson, and Jeff Ziegler.

Two tapes, ten parts, over four hours of instruction. Price: $39.95

To preview text files and RealPlayer videos from the God's Law and Society video:

The Second American Revolution

Two Ways to Order:

1. Place your credit card order:

Add to Shopping Cart

CCNow

our authorized online retailer

- Secure Online Shopping
- All Major Credit Cards

2. Print out and mail in the order form below:

Two tapes, ten parts, over four hours of instruction!
$39.95

Please rush me _____ (# of copies) God's Law and Society @
$39.95 each.

Subtotal: $ _____

Add for shipping and handling: $2.95

TOTAL ENCLOSED: (for 1 set: $42.90) $ _____

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____

STATE, ZIP _____

Checks payable to:

JC ROGERS PRODUCTIONS

P.O. Box 362173

Melbourne, FL 32936-2173

If I can assist you with more information, email me at:

jrogers@forerunner.com

Jay Rogers

Director, Media House International

FEEDBACK | SECOND AMERICAN REVOLUTION | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

The Beast of Revelation: Identified,

a newly released video, contains Dr. Kenneth L. Gentry's one-hour teaching on the book of Revelation from the 1999 Ligonier conference in Orlando, Florida. Another one-hour question and answer session follows as Dr. Gentry attempts to answer the question:

Who is the beast of Revelation?

Numerous candidates have been advanced throughout the years by noted Bible experts. These have included Pope Leo, Napoleon, Lenin, Stalin, Adolf Hitler, Mussolini, Henry Kissinger, Mikhail Gorbachev, and even Ronald Reagan. Theories and predictions about the Beast go on and on.

According to NEWSWEEK (11/1/99), 19 percent of all Americans and nearly half of all evangelical Christians "believe that the Antichrist is on the earth now." The popularity of this theorizing on the identity of the Beast is seen in the many books on the market which have sold tens of millions of copies. One title, Left Behind by Tim LaHaye, became the New York Times number one best seller in 1999.

The Beast of Revelation is the main character in many films which paint him as a diabolical world dictator who will bring about a New World Order, who will unite all world religions in order to worship him. According to some Bible prophecy experts, the Beast will control the destiny of every individual on the planet through hand-implanted computer chips with personal identification numbers. And finally, it is believed that the Beast will seal his own destruction by bringing the late great planet earth to the brink of Armageddon through a nuclear holocaust.

Now at last, a plausible candidate for the identity of the dreaded Beast has been identified. If you will consider Dr. Gentry's case with an open Bible and an open mind, this teaching is likely to revolutionize your understanding of the book of Revelation and even more importantly - to radically alter your entire Christian worldview as well!

145-minutes in four parts. Price: $19.95

Articles and reviews related to this video

Introduction: The Beast of Revelation - Identified

The Beast of Revelation Identified by Dr. Kenneth L. Gentry

BEAST FAQ Questions and Answers with Dr. Kenneth L. Gentry

On the "transitional verses" in Matthew 24 by Dr. Kenneth L. Gentry

When will these things be? A brief commentary on Matthew 24 by Jay Rogers

Postmillennialism and the Reformed Faith by Dr. Greg L. Bahnsen

Two Ways to Order:

1. Place your credit card order:

Add to Cart

2. Print out and mail in the order form below:

The Beast of Revelation: Identified $19.95

Please rush me _____ (# of copies) The Beast of Revelation: Identified @ $19.95 each.

Subtotal: $_____

Add for shipping and handling: $2.95

TOTAL ENCLOSED: (for 1 set: $22.90) $_____

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____

STATE, ZIP _____

Checks payable to:

JC ROGERS PRODUCTIONS

P.O. Box 362173

Melbourne, FL 32936-2173

If I can assist you with more information, email me at:

jrogers@forerunner.com

Jay Rogers

Director, Media House International

FEEDBACK | SECOND AMERICAN REVOLUTION | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Introduction: The Beast of Revelation - Identified

By Jay Rogers

"Here is wisdom: Let him who has understanding calculate the number of the beast. For it is the number of a man, and his number is six hundred and sixty-six" (Revelation 13:18).

Who is the Beast of Revelation?

According to the Apostle John in Revelation 13:18, the Beast is a reprobate villain of the most ultimate depravity. The Beast is the very incarnation of evil and the persecutor of God's people.

The Beast is believed by many Christians to be the same figure as the "Man of Sin" in 2 Thessalonians and the "Antichrist" mentioned in 1 John. And according to John, the Beast must be alive in the Last Days. It is no wonder that some of the most noted Bible experts in our day are trying to identify him.

Numerous candidates have been advanced throughout the years by noted Bible experts. These have included Pope Leo, Napoleon, Lenin, Stalin, Adolf Hitler, Mussolini, Henry Kissinger, Mikhail Gorbachev, and even Ronald Reagan. The theories and predictions about the Beast go on and on.

According to Newsweek magazine, 19 percent of all Americans and nearly half of all evangelical Christians "believe that the Antichrist is on the earth now."

The popularity of this theorizing on the identity of the Beast is seen in the many books on the market which have sold tens of millions of copies. One title, Left Behind by Tim LaHaye, became the New York Times number one Best Seller in 1999.

The Beast of Revelation is the main character in many films which paint him as a diabolical world dictator who will bring about a New World Order, who will unite all world religions in order to worship him. According to some Bible prophecy experts, the Beast will control the destiny of every individual on the planet through hand-implanted computer chips with personal identification numbers. And finally, it is believed that the Beast will seal his own destruction by bringing the late great planet earth to the brink of Armageddon through a nuclear holocaust.

But let me be frank with you. Many of the scenarios painted by Bible prophecy experts in "end-times" seminars, best-selling books, and feature films are conjecture at best. And much of what is being presented is pure fantasy. Many of these "end-times" theories are simply that theories having nothing to do with the plain meaning of the text of the book of Revelation.

The problem is that many Christians, having not seriously studied the Bible, don't know the difference between sensationalism and sound doctrine, between fiction and biblical theology. Many sincere Christians accept some wild theories about end-times prophecy as though this loose style of Bible interpretation has the same authority as the infallible Word of God itself.

As a young Christian, I too accepted many of the popular theories on the end-times without question, that is, until I began to become more serious in my study of the Bible.

As I began to look more carefully at the popular eschatology of our day a viewpoint (by the way) known as dispensational premillennialism many questions began to be raised in my mind questions that had no easy answers.

When I looked to the dispensationalist view of Bible prophecy to answer these questions, but I soon found that it created many more problems than those it solved.

The main point of conflict between the historic view of the church and the pop-eschatology of today centers around the question of good versus evil. Will Christ or the Anti-Christ prevail in history in the time prior to the Lord's return? The eschatological view of many Christians today puts much more emphasis on a coming Anti-Christ, than on the victory of Jesus Christ.

Most evangelical Christians do not know that this popular end-times theory today is actually a recent idea. The dispensational interpretation of the book of Revelation dates from the time the 1800s. It was formulated by J.N. Darby in 1830 and then made popular by William Miller and C.I. Scofield in the next 100 years. In the latter half of the the 20th century, the dispensational view of eschatology has been brought into the popular consciousness by authors such as Hal Lindsey and Tim LaHaye who have sold tens of millions of books on the topic.

It's odd, but most Christians today know less about their eschatology from a careful study of the Bible than they do from the conjecture of The Late Great Planet Earth, the Left Behind series, and the wild conjecture of films such as The Omen, The Seventh Sign, and even a more recent Arnold Schwarzenegger movie.

However, there is another view of Bible prophecy that has had many adherents in church history, but is too frequently ignored in our day. This historic view is being developed today by many well-known conservative Bible scholars, such as, R.C. Sproul, Dr. George Grant, Loraine Boettner, J. Marcellus Kik, R.J. Rushdoony, Ian Murray, Dr. Greg Bahnsen, and the speaker featured in this presentation, Dr. Kenneth L. Gentry.

Dr. Gentry is a pastor, Bible scholar, and author of many books on eschatology (the theology of the last days). Through his life's work in exegeting the scriptures, he has constructed a compelling case for calculating the number of the Beast.

Finally, after many years of confusion, the Beast of Revelation has been identified! Now this video is likely to create as many questions in your mind as those it answers. So we've included a question and answer session at the end of this one hour teaching you won't want to miss.

You might also want to dig deeper into this view of eschatology, so we've also included a reading list at the end of some good materials you can order through Reel to Real Ministries.

But right now, I encourage you to pay attention and carefully consider Dr. Gentry's case with an open Bible and an open mind. If you will do so, this teaching is likely to revolutionize your understanding of the book of Revelation and even more importantly to radically alter your entire Christian worldview as well.

We join Dr. Genry at the 1999 Ligonier conference in Orlando, Florida.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Rev. Kenneth L. Gentry, Jr., Th.D.

I frequently give weekend seminars on Revelation that are of five or six hours duration. A couple of years ago I was conducting a well-advertised seminar in a church outside of Atlanta, Georgia. On the first night of the conference the church was delighted to see several first-time visitors who had come to study Revelation. The visitors did not come back for any of the following sessions. I had greatly disappointed the eager attendees by locating Revelation's activity in the first century. The same thing happened a little later when I gave the seminar in Opelousas, Louisiana. For some reason, Christians delight in the prospect of hearing that the horrible judgments are fast approaching our own generation!

I think a credible and compelling case can be made for an ancient political figure as the Beast of Revelation. I believe the Beast was none other than Lucius Domitius Ahenobarbus. Perhaps you know him better by his adoptive name: Nero Claudius Caesar. Let us consider the case for such an identity.

The first step in identifying the Beast is to consider:

Audience Relevance

When interpreting any book of the Bible, it is important to ascertain the audience to which it was originally directed. The evangelical hermeneutic is known as the grammatical-historical method of interpretation. The concern of the evangelical interpreter is to understand the grammar of a passage in light of its historic context. Consequently, the recognition of an audience and its original situation is quite important. This is especially true when a specific message is given to them about their own situation. Such is the case in Revelation.

There are at least three audience factors in Revelation that emphasize the original recipients and their circumstances. These provide us the circumstantial evidence that will eventually lead us to the identity of the Beast. When these are combined with the matter of the expectation of Revelation (which I will deal with in a moment), the case for identifying the Beast can proceed easily on the basis of sound hermeneutical principle. Let us consider these three audience factors.

First, in Revelation we have clear evidence that John is writing to particular, historic, individual churches that existed in his day. Revelation 1:4 provides a common salutation: "John to the seven churches which are in Asia: Grace [be] unto you, and peace, from him which is, and which was, and which is to come." In verse 11 he specifically names the seven churches to whom he speaks: "What you see, write in a book and send it to the seven churches which are in Asia: to Ephesus, to Smyrna, to Pergamos, to Thyatira, to Sardis, to Philadelphia, and to Laodicea." We know these names to be those of historical cities containing literal churches existing in the first century.

In the entirety of chapters 2 and 3 these seven specific churches are addressed with individual exhortations and warnings. Interestingly, a number of the historical, geographical, and political allusions contained in the letters show that John did, in fact, have in view the specific churches addressed. Leon Morris, in his commentary on Revelation, states: "the letters are to real churches, all the more so since each of the messages has relevance to what we know of conditions in the city named."

Second, we learn that John wrote to those churches in order to be understood. The first sentence of John's prophecy has become the title of the entire work. And from that title we are clearly told that his work was to be a "revelation." The Greek word for "revelation" is apokalupsis, which means an "opening up, uncovering." John intended his book to be an opening up of divine truth for his original audience. He wrote to reveal, not to conceal truth.

Furthermore, in Revelation 1:3 we read: "Blessed [is] he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein." The members of the churches to whom Revelation was addressed are expected to read, understand, and keep the directives in Revelation. John's message (ultimately from Christ, Rev. 1:1) calls upon each church to give careful, spiritual attention to his words: "He that has an ear, let him hear" (Rev. 2:7, 11, 17, 29; 3:6, 13, 22). How could they understand and watch for events centuries distant?

Third, in Revelation John notes that he along with the seven churches have already entered "the tribulation" (Rev. 1:9a): "I John, who also am your brother, and companion in the tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, was in the isle that is called Patmos, for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ." John and the seven churches all are in "the tribulation" together, as he writes. In Revelation 2 and 3 there are allusions to greater problems currently brewing on the world seen. For example, John speaks of "the hour of trial which is about to come upon the whole world" (Rev. 3:10).

In addition, John's Revelation shows a deep concern with the expectant cry of the martyrs of the tribulation he and they were enduring. He speaks of a divine promise of their soon vindication. Revelation 6:9-11: "And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held: And they cried with aloud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? And white robes were given unto every one of them; and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellow servants also and their brethren, that should be killed as they [were], should be fulfilled."

Clearly John is writing to particular historical churches about their current grave circumstances. The original audience factor cannot be overlooked. This leads us to consider Revelation's:

Contemporary Expectation

It is terribly important that the interpreter of Revelation begin at the first verses of the book and let them lead him to the proper interpretive approach. The truth of the matter is: John specifically states that the prophecies of Revelation would begin coming to pass within a very short period of time. He dogmatically states that the events of Revelation were "shortly to take place" and that "the time is near." And as if to insure that we not miss the point (which many commentators have!) he emphasized this truth in a variety of ways. Let us briefly note his contemporary expectation.

First, we should note that he carefully varies his manner of expression, as if to avoid any potential confusion as to his meaning. A brief survey of the three leading terms he employs will be helpful in ascertaining his meaning.

The first of these terms to appear in Revelation is the Greek word tachos, translated "shortly." John is explaining the purpose of his writing in Revelation 1:1, which reads: "The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave Him to show to His bond-servants, the things which must shortly [tachos] take place; and He sent and communicated it by His angel to His bond-servant John." The Arndt-Gingrich Greek lexicon lists the following meanings under the tachos entry: "speed," "at once," "without delay," "soon," "in a short time," "shortly."

If you look up Revelation 1:1 in any modern translation you will find that the idea clearly exhibited is that of the very near occurrence of the events of Revelation. This term also occurs in Revelation 2:16; 3:11; and 22:6, 7, 12, 20. Even a cursory reading of these verses unavoidably leads to the conclusion that John expected these things to happen "shortly" or "soon."

Another term John uses is eggus, which means "near" (Rev. 1:3; 22:10). In Revelation 1:3 we read: "Blessed is he who reads and those who hear the words of the prophecy, and heeds the things which are written in it; for the time is near (eggus)." When used of spatial relationships it means: "near," "close to," "close by." This term literally means "at hand." According to Arndt-Gingrich, when used of temporal relationships it signifies: "near," "soon." Its import in our context is clearly that of temporal nearness. The events bracketed by these statements were expected, by the apostle John, to begin taking place at any moment. They were near!

The final term we will note is mello, which means "about to" (Rev. 1:19; 3:10). When found in both of the verb forms appearing in Revelation 1:19 and 3:10, this term means "be on the point of, be about to." A number of Bible translations confuse the matter when they translate the word properly in Revelation 3:10 but improperly in Revelation 1:19. According to Young's Literal Translation of the Bible, Revelation 1:19 reads: "Write the things that thou hast seen, and the things that are, and the things that are about to come (mello) after these things." The leading interlinear versions of the New Testament concur.

Second, John emphasizes his anticipation of the soon occurrence of his prophecy by strategic placement of these time references. He places his boldest time statements in both the introduction and conclusion to Revelation. It is remarkable that so many recent commentators have missed it literally coming and going! The statement of expectancy is found three times in the first chapter—twice in the first three verses:

Revelation 1:1, 3, 19.

The same idea is found four times in his concluding remarks: Revelation 22:6, 7, 12, 20. It is as if John carefully bracketed the entire work to avoid any confusion. It is important to note that these statements occur in the more historical and didactic sections of Revelation, before and after the major dramatic-symbolic visions. These didactic expectations set temporal parameters around the events in the dramatic visionary sections. These temporal parameters anchor Revelation's events in the first century.

Third, his temporal expectation receives frequent repetition. His expectation appears seven times in the opening and closing sections of Revelation, and at least three times in the letters to the Seven Churches (Rev. 2:16; 3:10, 11). According to the unambiguous statement of the text, the events were "about to come." John was telling the seven historical churches (Rev. 1:4, 11; 22:16) in his era to expect the events of his prophecy at any moment. He repeats the point time and again for emphasis. With the particularity of the audience emphasized in conjunction with his message of the imminent expectation of occurrence of the events, we are ready to point out the exegetical proof that Nero is the dreaded Beast of Revelation.

The Seven Heads of the Beast

Most commentators agree that the Beast imagery in Revelation shifts between the generic and the specific. This is important to grasp: sometimes the Beast represents a kingdom, sometimes a particular, individual leader of that kingdom.

At some places the one Beast has seven heads, which are seven kings collectively considered. In Revelation 13:1 John notes that he "saw a beast coming up out of the sea, having ten horns and seven heads". Revelation 17:10 specifically notes that the seven heads represent "seven kings." Thus, the Beast is generically portrayed as a kingdom.

But in the very same contexts the Beast is spoken of as an individual, as one of the heads, as a particular part of the generic whole. John urges his readers to "calculate the number of the beast, for the number is that of a man" (Rev. 13:18). In Revelation 17:11 the interpretive angel tells John and his readers "the beast which was and is not, is himself also an eighth, and is one of the seven." This feature is recognized by most commentators of various schools of interpretation, including even dispensationalists.

Let us now turn to consider this seven-headed Beast. In Revelation 17 a vision of the seven-headed Beast is recorded. Regarding this vision we read in verses 9 and 10: "Here is the mind which hath wisdom. The seven heads are seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth. And there are seven kings: five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space."

Most New Testament scholars recognize that the seven mountains represent the famous seven hills of Rome. The seven hills of Rome are mentioned time and again by both ancient pagan and Christian writers.

John wrote to be understood: "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein: for the time is at hand" (Rev. 1:3). In fact, he specifically points out here that the wise one will understand: "And here is the mind which hath wisdom. The seven heads are seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth" (17:9). The referent is beyond doubt: Rome is alluded to in this vision of the seven-headed Beast. The original recipients of Revelation lived under the rule of Rome, which was universally distinguished by its seven hills. How could the recipients, living in the seven historical churches of Asia Minor and under Roman imperial rule, understand John's vision as anything other than this geographical feature?

But the vision causes John to wonder in quiet confusion. There is a difficulty involved. And that difficulty is that the seven heads have a double reference. We learn further that the seven heads also have a political referent: "And there are seven kings: five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space" (Rev. 17:10).

It is surely no accident that Nero was the sixth emperor of Rome. Flavius Josephus, the Jewish contemporary of John, clearly points out that Julius Caesar was the first emperor of Rome and that he was followed in succession by Augustus, Tiberius, Caius, Claudius, and, sixthly, Nero (Antiquities, books 18 and 19). The matter is confirmed just a little later in the writings of Roman historians: Suetonius, Lives of the Twelve Caesars and Dio Cassius, Roman History 5.

The text of Revelation says that of the seven kings "five have fallen." These emperors are dead, when John writes. But the verse goes on to say "one is." That is, the sixth one is then reigning even as John wrote. That would be Nero Caesar, who assumed imperial power upon the death of the fifth emperor, Claudius, in October, A.D. 54. Nero remained emperor until his suicide in A.D. 68, a period of over thirteen years.

John continues: "The other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space." As the Roman Civil Wars broke out in rebellion against Nero, Nero committed suicide on June 8, A.D. 68. John informs us that the seventh king was "not yet come." That would be Galba, who assumed power upon Nero's death in June, A.D. 68. But he was only to continue a "short space." As a matter of historical fact, his reign lasted but six months -- until January 15, A.D. 69. He was one of the quick succession of emperors in the famous era called by historians: "the year of the four emperors."

Now some evangelical commentators, such as John Walvoord, would attempt to circumvent this political evidence by pointing out difficulties. His evidence is two-fold: (1) Our text is taken from a highly figurative vision. (2) It is introduced by a call for "the mind which has wisdom," which seems to indicate the difficulty of the interpretation.

This, however, is twisting the text to say what it does not say. It is true that upon seeing the symbolic vision itself, John was in fact perplexed and confused: he "wondered with great wonder" (Rev. 17:1, 7a). But in response to his confusion, an interpretive angel appears with the express promise that he would show John the proper understanding (Rev. 17:7): "Why do you wonder? I shall tell you the mystery."

Revelation 17:9 and 10 is the explication of the vision. It is not given to make the matter more difficult! The inherent difficulty requiring wisdom lay in the fact that the seven heads had a double referent: geographical and political. The angel functions here much like the angel in Revelation 7:13, 14 -- to interpret the prophetic vision. His presence to John was to clear up John's confusion, not to increase it.

Thus, we see that while John wrote, the sixth emperor was ruling from the Seven Hilled City. This is surely Nero, the sixth emperor of Rome. Galba, the short-lived seventh emperor, was looming in the near future. And there is more evidence.

The Beast Out of the Sea

Nero and Nero alone fits the bill as the specific or personal expression of the Beast. This vile character fulfills all the requirements of the principles derived from the very text of Revelation itself. Those principles are particularly abundant in Revelation 13. Notice:

First, in Revelation 13:18 the number of the Beast is the number of "a man" and that number is "666." Now the usefulness of this number lies in the fact that in ancient days alphabets served a two-fold purpose. Letters functioned, of course, as phonetic symbols. As such, they functioned just as our modern alphabet. But in ancient times letters also served as numerals, in that the Arabic numbering system was a later development of history.

A Hebrew spelling of Nero Caesar's name was Nrwn Qsr -- n, e, r, o, n; q, s, r. It has been documented by archaeological finds that a first century Hebrew spelling of Nero's name provides us with precisely the value of 666. Is it not remarkable that this most relevant emperor has a name that fits precisely the required sum? Is this sheer historical accident? But there is more.

Second, the textual variant. If you consult a Bible with marginal references you may notice something of interest regarding Revelation 13:18. Your reference may say something to the effect: "Some manuscripts read 616." The fact is that the number 666 in some ancient manuscripts of Scripture is actually changed to 616. But why? Was it changed accidentally, or on purpose?

The difference surely is no accident of sight made by an early copiest. The numbers 666 and 616 are not even similar in appearance in the original Greek--whether spelled out in words or written out as numerals. As textual scholars agree, it must be intentional.

A strong and most reasonable case may be made for the following probability. John, a Jew, used a Hebrew spelling of Nero's name in order to arrive at the figure 666. But when Revelation began circulating among those less acquainted with Hebrew, a well-meaning copiest who knew the meaning of 666 might have intended to make its deciphering easier by altering it to 616. It surely is no mere coincidence that 616 is the numerical value of "Nero Caesar," when spelled in Hebrew by transliterating it from its more widely familiar Latin spelling.

Such a conjecture would satisfactorily explain the rationale for the divergence: so that the non-Hebrew mind might more readily discern the identity of the Beast. Such a possibility offers are markable confirmation of the designation of Nero.

Third, the beastly image. In Revelation 13 the one behind the 666 riddle is specifically designated a "Beast." The Greek word for "beast" is often used of the wild, carnivorous animals employed in the cruel Roman arenas. Because of its natural association, the term is often quite aptly used figuratively of persons with "a'bestial' nature, beast, monster."

Not only is the word "Beast" employed by John in this passage, but he even symbolically represents this fearsome being with horrible, beastly imagery. This Beast is a compound of such feared and destructive carnivores such as the leopard, bear, and lion.

Now it is almost universally agreed that Nero was one who was possessed of a "bestial nature." Nero was even feared and hated by his own countrymen. His bestial cruelty is evidenced in the writings of the Roman historian Suetonius (A.D. 70-160), who speaks of Nero's "cruelty of disposition" evidencing itself at an early age. He documents Nero's evil and states: "neither discrimination or moderation [were employed] in putting to death whosoever he pleased on any pretext whatever." Suetonius notes that Nero "compelled four hundred senators and six hundred Roman knights, some of whom were well to do and of unblemished reputation, to fight in the arena." He enjoyed homosexual rape and torture. He ruthlessly killed his parents, brother, wife, aunt, and many others close to him and of high station in Rome.

Roman historian Tacitus (A.D. 56-117) spoke of Nero's "cruel nature" that "put to death so many innocent men." Roman naturalist Pliny the Elder (A.D. 23-79) described Nero as "the destroyer of the human race" and "the poison of the world." Roman satirist Juvenal (A.D. 60-140) speaks of "Nero's cruel and bloody tyranny." Elsewhere he calls Nero a "cruel tyrant."

Nero so affected the imagination that the pagan writer Apollinius of Tyana, a contemporary of Nero, specifically mentions that Nero was called a "beast": "In my travels, which have been wider than ever man yet accomplished, I have seen many, many wild beasts of Arabia and India; but this beast, that is commonly called a Tyrant, I know not how many heads it has, nor if it be crooked of claw, and armed with horrible fangs. . . . And of wild beasts you cannot say that they were ever known to eat their own mother, but Nero has gorged himself on this diet."

Fourth, the war with the saints. The Beast is said to "make war with the saints and to overcome them" (Rev. 13:7). In fact, he is said to conduct such blasphemous warfare for a specific period of time: 42 months (Rev. 13:5).

The Neronian persecution, which was initiated by Nero in A.D. 64, was the first ever Roman assault on Christianity. Two of his most famous victims are the apostles Peter and Paul.

As Church father Eusebius notes: "Nero was the first of the emperors who showed himself an enemy of the divine religion." Sulpicius Severus concurs: "He first attempted to abolish the name of Christian." In his Annals Roman historian Tacitus points to those who were persecuted as "those who . . . were vulgarly called Christians."

Roman historian Suetonius concurs, for in a list of the few "positive" contributions of Nero as emperor, he includes the fact that Nero persecuted Christians: "During his reign many abuses were severely punished and put down, and no fewer new laws were made: . . . Punishment was inflicted on the Christians, a class of men given to a new and mischievous superstition."

Noted church historian J. L. von Mosheim wrote of Nero's persecution: "Foremost in the rank of those emperors, on whom the church looks back with horror as her persecutors, stands Nero, a prince whose conduct towards the Christians admits of no palliation, but was to the last degree unprincipled and inhuman. The dreadful persecution which took place by order of this tyrant, commenced at Rome about the middle of November, in the year of our Lord 64. . . . This dreadful persecution ceased but with the death of Nero. The empire, it is well known, was not delivered from the tyranny of this monster until the year 68, when he put an end to his own life." (L. von Mosheim, Historical Commentaries, I:138,139).

Nero died on June 8, A.D. 68, 42 months later, but for a few days. It was only then that the Neronian persecution formally ended, as Rome's attention was turned to the eruption of its own civil war.

Fifth, the death of the Beast. Nero Caesar fits the entire bill for the personal manifestation of the Beast in Revelation. The Beast not only slays by the sword, but ultimately is to die of a sword wound: "He that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity: he that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword. Here is the patience and the faith of the saints" (Rev.13:10).

That Nero did in fact kill by the sword is well-attested fact. Paul, for example, is said to have died under Nero by decapitation by means of the sword. Tertullian credits "Nero's cruel sword" as providing the martyr's blood as seed for the church. He urges his Roman readers to "Consult your histories; you will there find that Nero was the first who assailed with the imperial sword the Christian sect."

Likewise, history records for us that Nero took his own life by sword. Roman historian Suetonius writes in Nero (ch. 49): "Then with the help of his secretary, Epaphroditus, he stabbed himself in the throat." The evidence is strong and well-grounded in historical fact: Nero Caesar was the personal expression of the Beast of Revelation. But one important question remains: what about the Beast's death-wound and his subsequent resurrection? Let us now consider John's revelation of:

The Beast Arising from the Dead

We read in Revelation 13:3 "And I saw one of his heads as it were wounded to death; and his deadly wound was healed: and all the world wondered after the beast." As I set forth the proper interpretation, it will be necessary to remember that John allows some shifting in his imagery of the Beast. The Beast is generically portrayed as a kingdom and specifically designated as one of the kings of that kingdom. We should note that it is one of the heads which received a death blow: "And I saw one of his heads as if it had been slain, and his fatal wound was healed" (Rev. 13:3). We saw earlier that Nero Caesar is the "head" which is in view here.

Understanding the matters we have discussed up until now takes us a long way toward resolving the interpretive issue before us. The mortal sword wound to one of the heads is a wound that should have been fatal to the Beast, generically considered. This explains why that after the wound was healed and the Beast continued alive "the whole earth was amazed and followed after the beast" (Rev. 13:3b). The seven-headed Beast seems indestructible, for the cry goes up: "Who is like the beast, and who is able to wage war with him?" (Rev. 13:4b).

Now how does all of this imagery have anything to do with Rome and Nero Caesar?

At this point we need to reflect upon a most significant series of historical events of the A.D. 60s. A perfectly reasonable and historical explanation of the revived Beast lies before the interpreter. Here is where so many faddish interpretations of Revelation go wrong. They forget the original audience relevance factor and, consequently, overlook the history of the era.

When Nero committed suicide on June 8, A.D. 68, two major inter-related historical situations presented themselves to the world. Both carried with them catastrophic consequences.

First, with the death of Nero, the Julio-Claudian line of emperors perished from the earth. In other words, the Roman Empire's founding family vanished from rule. The blood line that had given birth to, extended, stabilized, brought prosperity to, and had received worship from the Roman Empire was suddenly cut off forever. In superstitious, pagan fashion Suetonius notes that "many portents" foreshadowed the tragedy that was to be, i.e. that "the race of the Caesars ended with Nero." This was a grave and serious matter to the Roman Empire.

Second, catastrophe upon catastrophe followed the death of Nero and the extinction of the Julian line. Immediately, the Roman Empire was hurled into civil wars of horrible ferocity and dramatic proportions. In fact, the civil wars almost destroyed the empire, seriously threatening to reduce "eternal Rome" to rubble.

The peril Rome faced and the upheaval that shook the empire were well-known in that era. As Josephus notes of these Roman civil wars: "I have omitted to give an exact account of them, because they are well known by all, and they are described by a great number of Greek and Roman authors."

These civil wars would, to all appearance, strike the citizens, subjects, neighbors, and enemies of the vast empire--Christian and pagan alike--as being the very death throes of Rome, the Beast generically considered. Indeed, in Tacitus's estimation it very nearly was so: "This was the condition of the Roman state when Serius Galba, chosen consul for the second time, and his colleague Titus Vinius entered upon the year that was to be for Galba his last and for the state almost the end."

Before the world's startled eyes, the seven-headed Beast (Rome) was toppling to its death as its sixth head (Nero) was mortally wounded with the sword. As Suetonius viewed the long months immediately following Nero's death, the empire "for a longtime had been unsettled, and as it were, drifting, through the usurpation and violent death of three emperors."

But what eventually occurred at the end of these death throes? The rest of Suetonius's quotation begun above informs us that: "The empire, which for a long time had been unsettled and, as it were, drifting through the usurpation and violent death of three emperors, was at last taken in hand given stability by the Flavian family." Josephus sets forth this view of things when he writes: "So upon this confirmation of Vespasian's entire government, which was now settled, and upon the unexpected deliverance of the public affairs of the Romans from ruin, Vespasian turned his thoughts to what remained unsubdued in Judea." Thus, after a time of grievous civil wars, the Empire was revived by the ascending of Vespasian to the purple.

The verses in Revelation regarding the death and revivification of the Beast may properly be understood as prophesying the earth-shaking historical events of the late A.D.60s era. Rome died, as it were, and returned again to life. In light of John's original audience (Rev. 1:4,11), his call for their careful consideration (Rev. 1:3; 13:9), and his contemporary expectation (Rev. 1:1,3), we must wonder why commentators project themselves into the distant future seeking some other fulfillment of these events. All the evidence heretofore dovetails nicely with this revivification factor.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

BEAST FAQ

- OR -

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS ABOUT THE BEAST OF REVELATION

An outline of the interview answers in Real to Reel's interview with Dr. Kenneth L. Gentry (11/11/99) for the video:

The Beast of Revelation: IDENTIFIED

All Bible quotations are from the New American Standard Bible.
Loeb's Classical Library version is used for Josephus citations.

1. What is the THEME of Revelation? Isn't it the Second Coming of Christ according to Rev. 1:7?

The theme is the judgment of the Jews for crucifying their Messiah. Although 1:7 appears to speak of the Second Advent, it actually refers to AD 70. Note the following evidence.

(1) Immediately before 1:7 John specifically declares the events of Revelation are near, not thousands of years distant. He also concludes the book with the same expectation:

Rev. 1:1: "The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave Him to show His servants--things which must shortly take place. And He sent and signified it by His angel to His servant John,"

Rev. 1:3: "Blessed is he who reads and those who hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written in it; for the time is near."

Rev. 22:6: "Then he said to me, "These words are faithful and true." And the Lord God of the holy prophets sent His angel to show His servants the things which must shortly take place."

Rev. 22:10 "And he said to me, "Do not seal the words of the prophecy of this book, for the time is at hand."

(2) "Coming on the clouds" is an OT image for historical, divine judgment. For example:

Isaiah 19:1 "The oracle concerning Egypt. Behold, the Lord is riding on a swift cloud, and is about to come to Egypt; the idols of Egypt will tremble at His presence, and the heart of the Egyptians will melt within them."

(3) This "coming" is against those "who pierced him." The NT blames the crucifixion on the Jews:

Acts 2:22-23 "Men of Israel, listen to these words: Jesus the Nazarene, a man attested to you by God with miracles and wonders and signs which God performed through Him in your midst, just as you yourselves know-- [23] this Man, delivered up by the predetermined plan and foreknowledge of God, you nailed to a cross by the hands of godless men and put Him to death.

Acts 3:13-15 "The God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, the God of our fathers, has glorified His servant Jesus, the one whom you delivered up, and disowned in the presence of Pilate, when he had decided to release Him. [14] "But you disowned the Holy and Righteous One, and asked for a murderer to be granted to you, [15] but put to death the Prince of life, the one whom God raised from the dead, a fact to which we are witnesses.

Acts 5:30 "The God of our fathers raised up Jesus, whom you had put to death by hanging Him on a cross".

Acts 7:52 "Which one of the prophets did your fathers not persecute? And they killed those who had previously announced the coming of the Righteous One, whose betrayers and murderers you have now become;

Acts 10:39 "And we are witnesses of all the things He did both in the land of the Jews and in Jerusalem. And they also put Him to death by hanging Him on a cross.

1 Thes. 2:14-15 For you, brethren, became imitators of the churches of God in Christ Jesus that are in Judea, for you also endured the same sufferings at the hands of your own countrymen, even as they did from the Jews, [15] who both killed the Lord Jesus and the prophets, and drove us out. They are not pleasing to God, but hostile to all men.

(4) This "coming" is against "the tribes of the earth/land." The word GE means either "land" or "earth."

(5) The phrase "every eye shall see him," indicates the public nature of the judgment.

(6) Thus Revelation presents God on the throne (Rev 4) holding forth a divorce decree (Rev 5). God judges his wife for adultery (6-19), then takes a new bride, the church (21-22).

2. You make a interesting case for the Beast's number 666 equaling the Hebrew spelling of Caesar Nero, but hasn't the same the same been done for one of the Popes? Are there other evidences that John was referring to Nero specifically?

(1) Theoretically, the numerical value could fit many names. But the fit must be relevant.

(2) John specifically declares the events of revelation "must shortly take place" (1:1; 22:6) because "the time is at hand" (1:3; 22:10). The papacy arose hundreds of years later.

(3) John is writing to seven historical, first-century churches (1:4, 11; chs. 2 and 3) who are presently undergoing trials (1:9). One of the cries in Revelation is "how long" (6:10). The answer: "a little while longer" (6:11).

(4) The numerical value fits in both the textual form (666) and the important variant (616). One using a Hebrew spelling (in a very OT oriented book composed with an Hebraic grammar); the other using a Latin spelling (apparently to help non-Hebrew readers to understand it).

3. In Revelation 13 there are two Beasts -- one from the land and one from the sea. You said the beast from the sea was Rome? Who was the beast from the land?

(1) According to commentators of all stripes (dispensational, reformed, liberal), the first Beast must be understood both generically and specifically. That is, as the Roman imperial government and as the particular emperor on the throne, much like the "body of Christ" can be either generic (the Church) or specific (Jesus himself). So the first beast is fulfilled in Nero Caesar as he exercises his imperial powers.

(2) The second beast is a subordinate of the first: (a) He exercise the authority of the first beast in his presence, and makes men worship the first beast (13:12). (b) He only has two horns (v.10) rather than ten (v. 1), thus a more limited authority. (c) He arises from the "earth/land" (v11) and operates there; the first beast arises from the sea (v.1) and has authority over all nations (v.7).

(3) The identity of this beast is not as clear cut as the first beast. But it would seem that it refers to the imperial authority of Rome exercised in the Land, i.e., the Procurator. In light of the circumstances of Revelation and the time-frame, this would appear to be Gessius Florus who cruelly oppressed the Jews and goaded them to revolt against Rome. This causes the historical judgments of Revelation.

4. What about the Battle of Armageddon? Is it past or future?

Given the time-frame of Revelation ("soon"/ "near") and the focus on Israel's judgment in AD 70, the Battle of Armageddon (16:16) is an OT image applied to AD 70. This battle results in the collapse of "the great city" (16:19), which is earlier called "the place where their Lord was crucified" (11:8), i.e., Jerusalem.

5. What's the "Mark of the Beast"? Isn't it at all curious to you that for the first time in human history -- with microchips, retinal scanners, a growing one-world economy -- that the technology exists to make the "Mark of the Beast" a reality?

(1) It is no more a literal mark than the mark of the Lamb in the next few verses (14:1).

(2) Such a mark is a metaphor for dominion and control. In Rev 13 no one may buy or sell without the mark.

(3) The beast who imposes it has divine pretensions, forcing his worship on the world (13:4, 8). This speaks of emperor worship by Nero Caesar.

(4) This very OT oriented book is using the mark on the right hand and forehead as a negative reflection on God's requiring his Law on his people (Dt 6:8).

(5) Any present day mark goes against John's time-frame (near), relevance (persecuted churches), and theme (judgment of Israel).

6. In Revelation 11, the Gentiles are given the power to trample the city of Jerusalem under foot for 42 months. When does this occur?

(1) This refers to the siege of Jerusalem from Spring AD 67 to the fall of the Temple in Sept 70. Vespasian enters the Land in Spring 67, but Jerusalem does not fall until 70.

(2) It clearly refers to the Jewish temple which existed when John wrote, and which was the subject of Jesus' Olivet Discourse and many of his parables.

7. Who are the two witnesses who appear in Jerusalem during the 42 months?

(1) This is recognized on all hands to be one of the more difficult identifications in Revelation.

(2) Somehow these witnesses relate to Moses and Elijah in that imagery from their ministries appear in the passage (water to blood and drought, v6).

(3) They also related to Zechariah's prophecy of the gold lampstand and two olive trees in Zech 4:2-3, which speak of the rebuilding of the OT temple under Joshua (priest) and Zerubbabel (governor).

(4) In both allusions we have reference to the original founding of Israel as a nation and the re-establishment of it after the Babylonian exile.

(5) Thus, the two witnesses represent the founding of a new order for Israel upon the ruins of the old, earthly Israel. This is the church of Jesus Christ. Remember: Jesus said he will take the kingdom from Israel and give it to a nation bearing the fruit thereof. (Mt 21:43). Despite the persecution of Christianity it shall arise from apparent defeat.

8. How can you possibly suggest that Revelation was fulfilled in the first century? Where is one-third of mankind killed? Where are the 200,000,000 mounted troops? The stars falling from the sky and the moon as blood? Where was there a river of blood that reached up to horses' bridles? Don't you have to stand scripture on its head to present these thing as fulfilled?

(1) I would respond, first, with: How could anyone possibly project these events 2000 years into the future, when John strongly asserts their temporal proximity? And since the book deals with the trials of the first century church?

(2) We must remember, also, that Revelation is extremely symbolic and based on OT imagery:

(a) It was sent a "signified" (1:1).

(b) No one interprets all its images literally:

Creatures filled with eyes (Revelation 4:6)?

Locusts w/faces of men, teeth of lions, crowns of gold, and tails like scorpions (9:6)?

Lion-headed, scorpion-tailed horses belching fire and smoke (9:17)?

Fire breathing prophets (11:5)?

A seven-headed red dragon with ten horns and seven crowns who pulls stars down from heaven (12:3-4)?

A woman with eagles's wings standing on the moon (12:14)?

A serpent vomiting a river of water (12:15)?

The seven-headed beast compounded of four carnivores (13:2)? Frogs coming out of the mouth of a dragon (16:13)?

A prostitute riding the 7-headed beast while drunk on blood (17:6)?

Christ returning w/a sword in his mouth and on horse from heaven (19:15)?

A city: 1500 mile high cube floating down out of heaven (21:10, 16)?

(c) John gives clues on how to interpret some of the images.

1:20 stars = angels; lampstand are churches.

5:6 eyes are spirits.

5:8 bowls of incense = prayers.

12:9 dragon = Satan.

17:9-10 heads = mts.

17:12 horns = kings.

17:15 waters = peoples.

(3) But how do I understand these particular images mentioned?

(a) The one-third of men killed in Rev 9, is one-third of those in "the earth/land" (9:1,3), Israel. You really need to read Josephus, Wars of the Jews books 4-6, for a gruesome report of the devastation. Josephus records deaths of 1.1 million in Israel.

(b) The 200 million is a symbolic figure portraying the enormous opposition against Israel. Her doom is sure. The figure is no more literal than "the sand of the seashore" (Rev 20:8:). "Sand" is often used of large, but not exact numbers: The Canaanite army opposing Israel (Josh 11:4), the Midianite army (Jdgs 7:12), the Philistines (1 Sam 13:5).

(c) The stars falling and the moon as blood. These are common images from the OT signifying the collapse of governments under divine judgment. In Isa 13:10 this applies to Babylon (13:1, 17). In Isa 34:4 this applies to Edom (34:5). Even the BKC recognizes this. Stars are created to "govern" day and night, thus they serve as images of government (as in our own flag).

(d) The river of blood to horses bridles. This refers to the blood bath resulting from the Jewish War.

Wars 3:10:9: [B]ut as many of these were repulsed when they were getting ashore as were killed by the darts upon the lake; and the Romans leaped out of their vessels, and destroyed a great many more upon the land: one might then see the lake all bloody, and full of dead bodies, for not one of them escaped. And a terrible stink, and a very sad sight there was on the following days over that country; for as for the shores, they were full of shipwrecks, and of dead bodies all swelled.

Wars 4:7:6: Now this destruction that fell upon the Jews, as it was not inferior to any of the rest in itself, so did it still appear greater than it really was; and this, because not only the whole of the country through which they had fled was filled with slaughter, and Jordan could not be passed over, by reason of the dead bodies that were in it, but because the lake Asphaltitis was also full of dead bodies, that were carried down into it by the river.

9. Who is the "Great City" in Revelation?

The "Great City" is called a harlot and named Babylon (17:5). Given the time-frame and theme of Revelation, this Great City must be Jerusalem:

- (1) The FIRST mention is in 11:8, where "the great city" is the place where Jesus was crucified. She is "great" due to her covenantal status in biblical history (cf. Lam 1:1; Jer 22:8).
 - (2) The OT backdrop to the prostitute designation is Jer 3. There God calls Israel an adulterous prostitute and threatens her divorce (just as in Revelation). Jeremiah mentions Israel has the "forehead" of a prostitute (Jer 3:3), just as John mentions the forehead of the harlot in Revelation is (17:5).
 - (3) Revelation's harlot is filled with the blood of the saints (Rev. 16:6; 17:6; 18:21, 24): "And in her was found the blood of prophets and saints, and of all who were slain on the earth" (Rev. 18:24). This perfectly parallels Jesus' statement about Israel:
- "Therefore, indeed, I send you prophets, wise men, and scribes: some of them you will kill and crucify, and some of them you will scourge in your synagogues and persecute from city to city, that on you may come all the righteous blood shed on the earth, from the blood of righteous Abel to the blood of Zechariah, son of Berechiah, whom you murdered between the temple and the altar" (Matt. 23:34-35).
- (4) The prostitute's array reflects the Jewish priestly colors of scarlet, purple, and gold (Exo. 28; Rev 17). Her inscription on her forehead reminds us of the high priest's tiara on his head (Exo 28:36-38).
 - (5) The NT contrasts the "Jerusalem below" with the "Jerusalem above" (Gal 4:24ff; Heb 12:18ff), just as John does: when the "great city" collapses she is replaced by the "new Jerusalem from heaven" (Rev 21). The new Jerusalem is apparently replacing the old.
 - (6) John parallels the Babylonian Harlot and the Heavenly Jerusalem to show that one is the negative image of the other: they must be related as old to new:

Revelation 17:1: "And there came one of the seven angels which had the seven vials, and talked with me, saying unto me, 'Come hither; I will shew unto thee the judgment of the great whore that sits upon many waters.'"

Revelation 21:9: "And there came unto me one of the seven angels which had the seven vials full of the seven last plagues, and talked with me, saying, 'Come hither, I will shew thee the bride, the Lamb's wife.'"

Revelation 17:3: "So he carried me away in the spirit into the wilderness and I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet colored beast."

Revelation 21:10: "And he carried me away in the spirit to a great and high mountain, and showed me that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God."

10. Does history record the merchants of the world mourning after Jerusalem was sacked, because no one buys their cargo? (Rev. 18)

Those who mourn are the "merchants of the earth," i.e., the merchants of the Land.

11. Your position seems to write off the importance of the re-emergence of Israel as a nation. Even worse, by identifying it as the Whore of Babylon, as the ones who crucified the Lord, doesn't your position lend itself to an anti-Israel and even an anti-Semitic position?

(1) Israel as a nation.

(a) Yes, it does write of the significance of Israel's nationhood - as far as biblical prophecy goes. This may be an interesting political event of great joy to Jewish people, but it is without prophetic significance.

(b) Those who deem it prophetically significant also expect a future return to an OT like sacrificial system, which the NT dogmatically declares fulfilled in Christ's sacrifice - never to return (Heb. 8:13).

(2) Anti-Semitism.

(a) Anti-semitism is a moral charge that speaks of the persecution and suppression of Jews. The preterist view deals only with the historical interpretation of events from 2000 years ago. No evangelical preterist would call for persecuting the Jews. In fact, my postmillennial eschatology expects that they will one day be converted to Christ, praise God.

(b) The popular dispensational view is different in that it looks to a future, soon-coming judgment of the Jews wherein 2/3 of them will be destroyed. I would think the preterist view more hopeful for the Jews than the dispensational one!

(c) Evangelicals need to be careful with this charge of anti-Semitism. The major sociological analyses of anti-Semitism actually declare that Christianity per se is anti-Semitic because it claims that only those who believe in Jesus will enter heaven.

In fact, the leading analyses of anti-Semitism blames the NT writers themselves for anti-Semitism: John Dominic Crossan, Who Killed Jesus? Exposing the Roots of Anti-Semitism in the Gospel Story of the Death of Jesus (1995) and Dan Cohn-Sherbock, The Crucified Jew: Twenty Centuries of Christian Anti-Semitism (1992, esp. p. 12). qv.

12. Your view of Revelation -- that it was to be a warning and an encouragement to the early Church that was about to face the wrath of Nero and the Roman armies -- would make little or no sense unless the church at that time understood it as such. Is there any evidence that they did?

(1) Ironically this question exposes the error of the futurist viewpoint. It recognizes the need of Revelation's relevance to its first century audience, which preterism fits perfectly.

(2) This type of question could answered in the negative with no harm done to the preterist view. For we learn from the Gospels that the disciples constantly misunderstood Jesus' own teaching and were even surprised that he died and even more so that he was resurrected. Even within Revelation Jesus chastises the churches for not having "ears to hear what the Spirit says to the churches." He chastens them for their dullness of hearing and for their falling away from their first love. Spiritual dullness does not negate the validity of divine revelation. The Jews as a whole missed the entire coming of the Messiah, even though the Old Testament clearly prophesied it. Subjective apprehension does not determine objective reality.

(3) Revelation's warning about Rome and the coming Jewish War are not just matters found only in this book. We find these issues in the Olivet Discourse (Mt 24), the parables of Jesus (Mt 20-23), and various warnings of impending judgment elsewhere in the NT (2 Thessalonians; Hebrews; James; 1 Peter). The question could be legitimately be asked whether Christians understood those references too. Grammatical exegesis leads us to the proper interpretation, not historical understanding by the early Christians.

(4) Unfortunately, due to the chaos produced by the events of the destruction of Jerusalem we have very few records of Christianity in the era of the Jewish War and just after. So we really have no documents from that time period which inform us as to what they believed. We do know, however, from later sources that the early Christians understood the coming judgment upon Israel and Jerusalem. Eusebius particularly mentions their escaping as the Jewish War broke out. And we have some later, though ancient, comments on Revelation indicating knowledge that its events refer to the Jewish War (the Syriac versions of Revelation mention it was written under Nero; Andreas and Arethas of Capadocia, etc.)

(5) The purpose of Revelation includes more than immediate warning to escape Jerusalem, but also presents other important matters:

(a) It explains the collapse of Jerusalem, which was the headquarters of the Church (Acts 8; 15).

(b) It demonstrates God's concern for his people: he will both vindicate them and protect them through trials and tribulations. Thus, his enemies are warned and his people encouraged.

13. If John's revelation was written after the fall of Jerusalem, your entire argument seems to me to fall to pieces. What do you do with the famous passage by Irenaeus, the great Church father who was alive when some of John's disciples were alive, who dates John's exile to the isle of Patmos during the reign of Domitian, over 20 years after the fall of Jerusalem.

Irenaeus' statement is: "We will not, however, incur the risk of pronouncing positively as to the name of Antichrist; for if it were necessary that his name should be distinctly revealed in this present time, it would have been announced by him who beheld the apocalyptic vision. For that was seen no very long time since, but almost in our day, towards the end of Domitian's reign." Irenaeus was writing about A.D. 180.

(1) The "was not seen" is grammatically ambiguous: it could mean either: John was seen alive at that time, or: John saw the Revelation at that time. The context suggest John was seen. After all, what difference would it make when Revelation was received by John? The point is: John was alive and people could have asked him about the identity of the Antichrist. John could have distinctly revealed the identity in question in Revelation itself - regardless of when it was written.

(2) Elsewhere Irenaeus deals with the problem that some mss have "666" and others "616": "Now since this is so, and since this number is found in all the good and ancient copies." How could he call copies of Revelation "ancient" if the original was written "almost in our day"?

(3) Irenaeus claims on the same sort of evidence (references by those who knew John" that Jesus ministered for fifteen years until after the age of 50: "the age of 30 years is the first of a young man's mind, and that it reaches even to the fortieth year, everyone will allow: but after the fortieth and fiftieth year, it begins to verge towards elder age: which our Lord was of when He taught, as the Gospel and all the Elders witness." So even if we interpret Irenaeus to mean John wrote Revelation toward the end of Domitian's reign, the fact it Irenaeus made mistakes.

14. You've made some very interesting and persuasive points. Could it be that the book of Revelation works on a number of different levels? That it was, on one level, speaking to the first century church about some things that were about to happen -- but that it could be just as precisely speaking to us today about things that are about to take place? Is there such a thing as a "dual fulfillment" of the prophecies in Revelation?

No, for at least two deadly reasons:

(1) The book itself claims the events are "near." Who are we to say, "Yes, but"? An angel commands Daniel to "seal up" his prophecy for later times (Dan. 12:4), but commands John to "not seal the words of the prophecy of this book, for the time is at hand" (Rev. 22:10) If you adopt a dual-fulfillment view, you are doing so on the basis of theological desperation, not exegetical conclusions.

(2) Are we to believe that all of the details of Revelation occur twice? Two six sealed scrolls? Two beasts? Two groups of 144,000? Two "two witnesses"? Two Armageddons? Two Millenniums? On and on we could go.

15. What about the binding of Satan? (Rev. 20) Are you going to try and tell us that Satan has been bound?

Yes, Satan was bound in the first century, as Scripture teaches:

- (1) Jesus teaches this: "But if I cast out demons by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God has come upon you. Or how can anyone enter the strong man's house and carry off his property, unless he first binds the strong man? And then he will plunder his house" (Matt. 12:28-29).
- (2) Christ binds Satan for a well-defined purpose: "to keep him from deceiving the nations anymore" (Rev. 20:3b). In the Old Testament only Israel knows the true God (Ps. 147:19-20; Amos 3:2; Luke 4:6; Acts 14:16; 17:30). But Christ's incarnation changes this as the gospel begins flowing to all nations (e.g., Isa. 2:2-3; 11:10; Matt. 28:19; Luke 2:32; 24:47; Acts 1:8; 13:47).
- 3) The NT speaks of the restriction of Satan under various images: He falls from heaven (Lk10:18); he is cast out (Jn 12:31); he was crushed under our feet (Ro16:20); he was disarmed (Col 2:15); he was rendered powerless (Hb2:14); he works were destroyed (1 Jn 3:8).

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

On the "transitional verses" in Matthew 24

By Kenneth L. Gentry, Jr., Th.D.

I have had several inquiries seeking a fuller explanatory justification for my argument that Christ's attention turns from A.D. 70 to the future Second Advent in the transition verses, Matthew 24:34-36. I would like to offer a treatment of the matter.

The "Problem" with the Transition Text

It is frequently noted that the "coming of Christ" is mentioned before and after the transition text of Matthew 24:34-36. It is further noted that these references are virtually identical. For instance Matthew 24:27 reads:

"For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." Compare this with post-transitional Matthew 24:37: "But as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." How are we justified in taking two identical statements in the space of a unified discourse and applying them to events separated by thousands (and I suspect, tens of thousands) of years?

Linguistic Sense and Historical Referent

Now, is it hermeneutically possible for identical terms or phrases to be applied to different events? As a matter of fact, it is not only possible, but quite common in human language and biblical revelation. For astute students of philosophy and theology it is not uncommon for there to be inter-contextual differences between identical terms regarding sense and referent. Let me explain what I mean.

The fundamental linguistic sense of 'coming' has to do with a visitation of divine judgment upon man. This is the very essence of the notion of "the coming of the Son of Man," for instance. But the particular historical referent of a 'coming' may be either the A.D. 70 coming, or the Second Advent coming to punctuate the end of history - or some other divine judgment visitation.

Beyond the introduction of this matter relative to the philosophy of language, it is important to realize that A.D. 70 is not unrelated to the Second Advent. As the ending of the era of sacrificial rituals and Israel-exalting redemptive history, A.D. 70 is a pre-consummational type of the Second Advent's history ending, consummational conclusion. Hence, the similarity of language and the mixing of ideas is justified on the basis of the relationship of type (A.D. 70) to antitype (Second Advent) [This phenomenon of type/anti-type is very common in Davidic/Messianic passages. In such references, what is said of the historical King David often applies to the Messianic King Jesus.]

Examples of this sort of 'problem' abound in Scripture.

(1) The same sort of inter-contextual shift occurs in Revelation 20:46, where two resurrectional coming-to-life occurrences are spoken of: one is spiritual, the other physical. John himself, the writer of Revelation, gives us warrant for making such an interpretive maneuver; see John 5:25-29 [He Shall Have Dominion: A Postmillennial Eschatology (Tyler, TX: Institute for Christian Economics, 1992), 415-417.]

(2) Paul frequently shifts his meaning of "law" in Romans 3-8 between the Old Testament revelation as such, the Pharisaic idea of "law as meritorious principle," and "Law as God's revealed non-meritorious standard of righteousness" [See: John Murray, The Epistle to the Romans (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1959), 1:105ff; 2:49ff.]

(3) When you compare John 2:13-17 with Matthew 21:12-13 you will find the references to the cleansing of the Temple almost identical. But, of course, they are separated by about three and one-half years.

More relevantly, various mentions of 'the day of the Lord' are referred to in Scripture. The general sense in all places is 'divine visitation in judgment'; the specific referent might be upon Babylon (cp. Isa. 13:1 with 1:6,9), Egypt (cp. Jer. 46:8, with 46:10), Israel (cp. Joel 1:2 with 1:1 5; cp. Zeph. 1:1,2,4 with 1:7), or on the world at large (2 Pet. 3:10). For a discussion of the 2 Peter 3 passage, see my He Shall Have Dominion, 301-305.

The Transition Text Revisited

Now let me turn to the reasons why I hold there is a contextual shift here in Matthew 24:34-36, which reads: "Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled. Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away. But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only."

First, the Greek phrase PERI DE ("now concerning") in Matthew 24:36 is used by Matthew as an indicator of a change of subject. Along with all the other data below, this is strongly suggestive of the change I am suggesting.

Second, by all appearance Matthew 24:34 seems to function as a concluding statement, having specific reference to the preceding events. If all of Matthew 24 were for the first century, why would not the Lord hold off on the concluding statement until the end of His discourse? The following events (Matt. 24:36-51) relate to some other event that was not to occur in 'this generation.'" Thus, all events before verse 34 are to occur to 'this generation."

Third, there seems to be an intended contrast between that which is near (in verse 34) and that which is far (in verse 36): this generation vs. that day. It would seem more appropriate for Christ to have spoken of 'this day' rather than 'that day' if He had meant to refer to the time of 'this generation.'

Fourth, along these same lines, we should notice the pretransition emphasis on plural 'days' in contrast to the focus on the singular 'day' afterwards. 'This generation' involves many 'days' for the full accomplishment of the protracted (Matt. 24:22) Great Tribulation. Indeed, were the Great Tribulation on one particular day, its horror would be greatly reduced. By the very nature of the case 'that day' of the future Second Advent will come in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye (cp. I Cor. 15:52). The Second Advent does not span days, whereas the Great Tribulation does.

In Matthew 24:19, 22, and 29 the Lord makes reference to the plural 'days' that are fraught with judgment and terror. These involve times consumed by war and famine (vv. 6-7), which take time. He does, of course, mention that these people should pray that their flight not be on a singular 'sabbath' (Matt. 24:20). But this has reference to taking flight on any sabbath, not a particular one. The Great Tribulation era will cover a number of sabbath days as it develops.

It is true that Christ does speak of the future era of the Second Advent as being like the "days [plural] of Noah" (Matt. 24:37, 38). But it is clear that His focus is on "that" singular day, when Christ ("the Lord") comes to punctuate the end of history (vv. 36, 50) and to bring final judgment upon men (v. 51).

Fifth, before verse 34 there are signs to the A.D. 70 coming; after it there are no signs. The time of Jerusalem's destruction is a sign-filled era that called for attentive watching through sign reading. There will be false Christs (v. 5), wars and rumors of wars (v. 6-7), famines and earthquakes (v. 7b), persecution and betrayal (vv. 9-12), and false prophets (v. 11). His hearers will be witness to the abomination of desolation (v. 15) and urged to flee from the area when they see it (vv. 16-21). There will be great signs and wonders (v. 24), of which He informs them, since He knows what is to come and when (v. 25). Thus, when all these things begin occurring, they serve as signs of the impending nearness of Christ's judgment coming on Jerusalem (vv. 32-33). The time of its approach may be known.

After verse 34 such signs and objectively verifiable events vanish from the discourse. His statements become more generic: the days will be like the "days of Noah" (vv. 37-39) in which people were eating and drinking and marrying, until the judgment falls on particular individuals (vv. 40-41) on that particular 'day' (v. 42). This in effect speaks of signlessness: mundane social concourse continues unawares. Thus, the Son of Man does not give concrete signs of that future, Second Advent coming. There appears in the discourse at this juncture generic encouragements to labor because of the lack of signs.

Sixth, even Christ Himself claims He does not know the time of the Second Advent (v. 36). Whereas in the early section He clearly knows the time of the events leading to the destruction of the Temple in A.D. 70 (vv. 29-30). He tells His disciples that certain signs may come, but He knows full well that "the end is not yet" (v. 6). He dogmatically asserts that these things will happen to "this generation" (v. 34). Thus, He can positively assert 'behold, I have told you in advance' (v. 25).

Seventh, in the early section of Matthew 24, the time frame is clearly specified: He asserts the nearness of events: "this generation" (v. 34). In the following section (and into chapter 25, which is not separated from chapter 24 in the original) the reference is to a long delay: 'But and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming' (Matt. 24:48) 'While the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept' (Matt. 25:5). "After a long time the lord of those servants cometh, and reckoneth with them" (Matt. 25:19). The designation "far" is certainly a relative concept. However, when used in a context and in apposition to "this generation" designates, its relativity is in strong contrast.

Eighth, in the early section of Matthew 24 the setting is chaotic, with wars, quakes, and famines. Who can read the first portion of Matthew 24 without a sense of turmoil and dread? Whereas, in the latter section the scene is tranquil, with men carrying on their normal daily affairs as if nothing is going to happen. This is a strong indicator of a major change of scenery. The difference is between the war-torn Great Tribulation and the unexpected appearance of Christ to end history.

A few adherents to the change of subject matter include F. T. France, Matthew (Tyndale Commentaries), R. V. G. Tasker, The Gospel According to Matthew (Tyndale), J. M. Kik, An Eschatology of Victory (P&R), and J. A. Alexander, Matthew.

For those interested I have the following orthodox preterist study tapes available. Order from me: Ken Gentry, 46 Main St., Conestee, SC 29636:

"The Divorce of Israel: Introduction and Survey of Revelation." 22
Tapes: $85.00. Syllabus (optional): $15.00

Set #30. "Major Bible Prophecies" (5 tapes: $23). 1993 Sacramento Conference. (1) The Millennium (Rev. 20). (2) Daniel's 70 Weeks (Dan. 9). (3) The Man of Sin (2 Thess. 2). (4) Heaven (John 14). (5) Unfulfilled Prophecies (contra hyper-preterism).

Set #63. "Savannah Prophecy Conference" (7 tapes: $28) Introduction to postmillennialism and preterism. (1) Postmillennialism: OT Evidence. (2) Postmillennialism: NT Evidence. (3) Overview of Revelation (same as #36). (4) Great Tribulation: 1st Century Proof. (5) Great Tribulation: 1st Century Defense. (6) The Man of Sin. (7) Open Forum: Q&A.

Set #11. "Postmillennialism and Preterism" (4 tapes: $20). Lectures. 1992 Sacramento Eschatology Conference. (1) Postmillennialism: Wishful Thinking or Certain Hope? (2) The Identity of the Beast of Revelation. (3) The Resurrection of the Dead. (4) The Great Tribulation is Past.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

When will these things be?

A brief commentary on Matthew 24, 25

By Jay Rogers

Eschatology is the study of the last things (from the Greek: eskatos or "last things"). The last things, according to the Bible, are the fulfillment of the Great Commission, the Second Coming of the Lord Jesus Christ, the Resurrection of the Living and the Dead, and the Final Judgment.

According to Acts 1:6-8, Jesus Christ gave some last words to His disciples specifically forbidding them to inquire into the study of the end times. They asked Him: "Lord, will you at this time restore the kingdom to Jerusalem?" Jesus rebuked them saying: "It is not for you to know the times or seasons which the Father has put in His own authority." Instead, Christ commanded to be concerned with fulfilling the Great Commission: "But you shall receive power when the Holy Spirit has come upon you; and you shall be witnesses to Me in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and Samaria, and to the ends of the earth."

It is important to remember that eschatology is the study of last things not the end times. In our day, Christians seem more fascinated than ever with this forbidden study "end times." Rather than focusing helping to fulfill the Great Commission, one of the God-ordained "last things," they concentrate instead on interpreting the daily news in light of Scripture.

Earthquakes, wars and rumors of wars, famines in Africa, pestilence in various places, the spread of false religions, signs in the heavens, growing tensions in the Middle East. All these things point to the time when the world has entered the end times. Right?

Wrong!

"See that you are not troubled; for all these things must come to pass, but the end is not yet. For nation will rise against nation and kingdom against kingdom. And there will be famines, pestilences, and earthquakes in various places. All these things are the beginning of sorrows" (Mat. 24:6-8).

Many Christians in our day look in the daily news for an increase of earthquakes, wars, famines, pestilence, false religions, signs in the heavens and tensions in the Middle East over the nation of Israel. They interpret Christ's admonition to the disciples to mean exactly the opposite of what it literally says.

The fact that "all these things" are occurring in our day has nothing to do with Matthew 24. They have nothing to do with the end times, In fact, when Jesus said, "all these things must come to pass" he was speaking specifically of events in the first century.

"The disciples" Jesus is speaking to here may have been more than only the Twelve. Some of these lived past the year 70 when the Jewish Temple was destroyed. The Jewish historian Josephus in his book, Wars of the Jews, has some fascinating records of providentially ordained earthquakes, natural calamities and wars which occurred around the time of the siege of Jerusalem (67-70).

Jesus implies in this Matthew 24, that at least some of His disciples would live to see "these things" (v. 6). For example, He says, "You will hear ..." (v. 6); "Then they will deliver you up ..." (v. 9); "Therefore when you see ..." (v. 15).

The Three Questions

In Matthew 24:3, the disciples were asking three questions of Jesus:

- 1. When will these things be? ("These things" refer to the destruction of Jerusalem and Herod's Temple)
- 2. What will be the sign of your coming?
- 3. And the end of the age?

At the time of Christ's coming, messianic expectations were at a fever pitch. Many first century Jews understood that Daniel 9 pointed to their century as the time for the coming of the Messiah. But most, including some of Jesus' disciples, expected a political revolutionary and a king like David, who would defeat the Roman Empire and restore the kingdom of Israel from Jerusalem. Jesus' disciples understood that their Lord must first be crucified and rise from the dead. His triumphal entry into Jerusalem was for the purpose of His suffering and death, not for setting up an earthly kingdom.

"And Jesus went out, and departed from the temple: and his disciples came to him for to shew him the buildings of the temple. And Jesus said unto them, See ye not all these things? verily I say unto you, There shall not be left here one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down" (Mat. 24:1,2).

When Jesus spoke of the Temple's destruction, this must have startled His disciples. How did the destruction of the Temple relate to the mission of Christ? Was this somehow related to the prophesied coming of Christ as a King over the nations and to the end of the world?

The disciples believed that they were asking one question, but Jesus treats all three separately and mainly in order in Matthew 24. The Jews of that day (especially the Essenes and the Pharisees) held to a premillennial eschatology (later condemned by the Church as the heresy of chialism) which explained that the Messiah would soon come to set up an earthly kingdom; He would destroy the Temple; and rule the nations with a rod of iron from Jerusalem. Jesus' disciples erroneously believed that Jesus was referring to His coming to rule in Jerusalem when He referred to the destruction of the Temple in Matthew 24:2.

In the rest of Matthew 24, Jesus answers their three questions in order.

1. "When will these things be?"

Jesus tells His disciples point blank (how is it that we miss it today?) that there will be an increase of sorrows in the world just before the destruction of Jerusalem. He calls these events "great tribulation."

"For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be" (Mat. 24:21).

The tribulation is defined as something soon to come, "this generation shall not pass away" (v. 34). Also, history will continue for some time after the great tribulation: "For then there will be great tribulation, such as has not been since the beginning of the world until this time, no, nor shall ever be" (v. 21). He also tells us that the tribulation will be cut short for the sake of the elect (v. 22). So according to Jesus, history is going to continue for some time after this.

Some today may doubt that the tribulation of 64-70 AD was the greatest tribulation in history, but if you were a Jew living in Jerusalem in those days, you would beg to differ. Josephus' history sheds some interesting light on this fact. In any case, we have to interpret the text faithfully as objective truth.

Thus, we see that this "great tribulation" does not come at the end of the kingdom age, but shortly after the beginning (64-70 AD).

2. "The sign of His coming"

In verses 30 and 31, Jesus refers to the "sign of His coming" which I interpret as the gathering of the elect from the nations after the time of the destruction of the Temple.

"And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other" (Mat. 24:30,31).

He says in vv. 29-31 that immediately after the tribulation of those days, the powers of heaven will be shaken, the Son of Man will appear in heaven, and there will be a time when the Gospel will go out to all nations (as it has been doing for 2000 years). Compare this with Matthew 28:18-20 and the other "Great Commission" passages. There is a great similarity of language.

Futurists believe that verses 30 and 31 refer specifically to the Second Coming. But what is being explained is "the sign of His coming." Compare the language here with Acts 2:16-21. Peter says, "this is that which is spoken of by the prophet Joel." Peter uses language very similar to Jesus in Mat. 28:29-31. The highly figurative language used here denotes Christ's rule from heaven over the nations.

Thus the "sign of His coming" is the Church being enlarged by Gentile believers and used of God to disciple the nations.

3. "The end of the age"

Continuing on in verses 35 through 51, and also through Chapter 25, Jesus answers the disciples question about "the end of the age." Some preterists believe that this refers to the "end of the Jewish age" which occurred with the destruction of the Temple or the coming of a new Kingdom Age which began after Christ's resurrection. But I believe the "end of the age" here does not refer to the end of the Jewish age, as some preterists teach. I see these verses as a "transitional text" in which Jesus finally gets to answer the question the disciples intended. "When will be the Second Coming of the Messiah?"

On the other hand, the dispensational premillennialists teach that this verse refers to our generation that this generation is the last one; that we are very close to the Second Coming of Christ; and that we are literally in the "last days" of history. They also believe that there is ample proof of this. This view of eschatology points to Israel becoming a nation-state again in 1948 and uses the parable of the fig tree in Matthew 24:32-34 as the proof text.

"Now learn a parable of the fig tree; When his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh. So likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors" (Mat. 24:32,33).

The dispensationalists interpreted "the fig tree" to be the nation-state of Israel which reemerged in 1948. They linked the restoration of Israel to the following statement of Jesus:

"Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled" (Mat. 24:34).

They said that "this generation" was the forty year period after that time or 1948 to 1988. Although many looked for Christ's return in one generation after the restoration of Israel, these "prophecy experts" were disappointed when their time-table turned out to be wrong, such Edgar Whisenant and his 88 Reasons Why the Rapture Will Be in 1988.

Let's face it, too many Christians are more attracted to sensationalism, than sound doctrine. Whisenant was asked on a radio show by listener in the fall of 1988 who wanted to know: "What are you going to do if your prediction is wrong?" What he did was to adjust his base date and republish the book under a new title: 89 Reasons Why the Rapture Will Be in 1989. It seems that the prophets of doom are really more concerned with the profits of doom!

But beyond the fact that Jesus didn't return in 1988, a generation after the restoration of Israel, any interpretation of Matthew 24:32-34 as an "end-times" event is weak for a couple of reasons. First, as it is claimed, Israel is not always represented by a fig tree in Scripture. Most often, Israel is represented by an olive tree. Second, when we compare Luke 21:29, (the parallel passage) we see that Jesus in the same parable, includes not only the "fig tree," but also "all the trees." Clearly this passage is a parable and not an allegory. An allegory uses a "this stands for this" symbolism. A parable merely illustrates a point. The fig tree isn't meant to stand for anything, not Israel, not any country, not any thing. "When you see these things happening know that the end (the destruction of Jerusalem) is near." Note that this event already occurred in 70 AD, less than one generation from the time of Christ's prediction (about 30 to 31 AD). Thus the destruction of Jerusalem occurred exactly one generation from Jesus' prophecy. It is not a future event.

Up until this point, Jesus is speaking of first century events, but then the focus of the Olivet Discourse shifts towards the literal end of the world:

"Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away. But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only" (Mat. 24:35,36).

The word in Greek for "age" used in Matthew 24:3, aeon, is also frequently used to mean "world." I believe Jesus is here finally answering his disciples main concern over the end of the world, or eschatology, the "last things," (i.e., the Second Coming, the Resurrection, and the final judgment).

Christ's narrative throughout this passage (Matthew 24:35 through chapter 25) describes how He will progressively remove unrighteous people out of the world slowly at first and more rapidly as we see the kingdom advance in the world.

Matthew 24:35 through the end of chapter 25 do not refer to "all the evil things we see happening today," but to judgment progressively falling on the wicked to remove them from the world as the kingdom of God advances.

Also compare these passages with Matthew 24:14: "And this gospel of the kingdom will be preached in all the world as a witness to all the nations, and then the end will come."

The sign of the end of the world is not a great tribulation; that had already occurred by 70 AD. This is implicit in the text of Matthew 24:6-28 and 24:32-34. The "sign of the end of the world" is the victory of the Church in preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom of God, not defeat and tribulation.

Thus a sound interpretation of Matthew 24 includes elements of Preterism (events happening before 70 AD pertaining to the disciples' first question: vv. 4-28); Historicism (the gospel advancing in the world as a sign of Christ's coming v. 31); pertaining to the disciples' second question, and both Idealism and Futurism to interpret Jesus' answer to the disciples' third question (vv. 36-51 to the end of chapter 25).

Today's futurists make the same mistake as the disciples by assuming that they were just asking one question, when these events are unrelated from a historical viewpoint.

At this point, you might be asking: "So what does this chapter have to do with the Great Tribulation and the timing of the rapture?"

Nothing!

In fact, Jesus speaks of taking His disciples out of the world not once in this passage nor in the parallel passages of Mark 13 or Luke 21. In fact, the only time Jesus speaks of taking his disciples out of the world is in John 17:15,16: "I do not pray that You should take them out of the world, but that You should keep them from the evil one."

Are we living in the "end-times"?

When Christians speak of the "end-times," most often they are referring to any passage in the Bible which refers to the "last days." But not all references to the "last days" speak of the end of history. There are at least two other senses of the term used in the New Testament.

1. Sometimes the "last days" refers to the time after the appearance of Christ in public ministry (30 AD.) and before the destruction of Jerusalem (70 AD.) i.e., "the last days of Israel as a nation-state."

2. The "last days" may also refer to the entire time after Christ's ministry and before the end of history. We were in the "last days" during the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:11) and we are still in the "last days" now.

Rather than get caught up in the hype, we ought to be cautious of a false so-called knowledge of end-times events apart from sound interpretation of Scripture. We ought to be busy advancing the Kingdom of God by fulfilling the Great Commission, rather than getting caught up in "Last Days" hype. Whether we are close to the Second Coming or not, we ought to be obedient to God's commandment to preach the Gospel to every creature.

Who knows when Christ will return? Scripture tells us, "the Father alone." We may see a great harvest as we obey Jesus Christ's last command to the Church. We may even see the return of Christ in our lifetime. But maybe we will not.

We ought to be concerned with Revival and world evangelization because it is the commandment of the Lord, not because a famous Christian leader has promoted his evangelistic campaign as a "significant end-times move of God." It is self-centered and elitist to believe that our generation alone possesses this "blessed hope." It is better to show we love God by obeying His commandments rather than to gear our lives towards a mad rush to the end of time.

Churches and ministries that build as though they want to be around for the next century will likely last longer than those who are expecting Christ to return very soon. In fact, hurry and hype are the bane of the Church. "Last Days Fever" is setting many Christians up for a collapse. Ministries that build on a false hope may expend their energy and collapse in the dust long before they are able to soar on the winds of true Revival.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Postmillennialism and the Reformed Faith

[The following is a synopsis of the evangelical postmillennial position by the late Dr. Greg L. Bahnsen.]

There is enough misunderstanding of evangelical, Bible-believing postmillennialism abroad today that it would be worthwhile to make note of the kind of constitutive doctrinal convictions which have been set forth by its representatives.

1. Evangelical postmillennialists {referred to as EPs from here on} champion the inspiration, infallibility, and sole doctrinal authority of the Bible.
2. EPs believe that fallen man is totally unable to do any saving good, cannot atone for his sins, and can become a member of the kingdom of God only through the redemptive work of the Savior and the regenerating work of the Holy Spirit.
3. EPs teach the glorious, personal return of Jesus Christ at the end of history to judge the world.
4. EPs insist that at his first advent Jesus, the Son of God, came as the Messianic or Mediatorial King and established His saving Kingdom among men on earth. Citing Philippians 2, Acts 2, Ephesians 1, Hebrews 1, and a host of other Biblical texts, William Symington wrote these Words in his study, Messiah the Prince, or, The Mediatorial Dominion of Jesus Christ: "Christ's appointment [to the kingly office] was still farther intimated by his actual investiture with regal power at and after his resurrection . . . Christ's appointment gives him rightful claim to the implicit and conscientious obedience of every moral creature This appointment affords ample security for the overthrow of all Christ's enemies, and the ultimate establishment of his kingdom in the world." David Brown could hardly be clearer: "Christ's proper kingdom is already in being; commencing formally on His ascension to the right hand of God, and continuing unchanged, both in character and form, till the final judgment."
5. EPs are painfully aware that those who belong to Christ -- the church -- are appointed to suffering in this world, and will inevitably undergo persecution and affliction, in following their Savior and King. Listen again to Symington: "The members of the church have many enemies. The devil, the world, and the flesh, are in league against them. They wrestle not only against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of darkness of this world, against spiritual wickednesses in high places. They are required to assume the character, equipments, and attitude of soldiers..... Satan, the chief and leader of these enemies, exasperated at his overthrow, makes a desperate effort to regain his lost dominion over them; and although he cannot succeed, he does much to annoy such as have been rescued from his grasp." Charles Hodge commented upon 2 Corinthians 4 that Paul there "compares himself to a combatant, first hardly pressed, then hemmed in, then pursued, then actually cast down. This was not an occasional experience, but his life was like that of Christ, an uninterrupted succession of indignities and suffering.... We constantly illustrate in our person the sufferings of Christ. We are treated as he was treated; neglected, defamed, despised, maltreated...."

6. EPs believe that the gospel is to be preached to all nations by the church prior to the second advent of Christ, eventually bringing worldwide conversion, and that this is the church's calling from God. Charles Hodge taught: "The first great event which is to precede the second coming of Christ, is the universal proclamation of the Gospel.... The conversion of the Gentile world is the work assigned the Church under the present dispensation." B. B. Warfield argued that "precisely what the risen Lord, who has been made head over all things for his church, is doing through these years that stretch between his first and second comings, is conquering the world to himself; and the world is to be nothing less than a converted world.... All conflict, then, will be over, the conquest of the world will be complete, before Jesus returns to earth."

7. EPism maintains that the victorious advance of Christ's kingdom in the world will take place in terms of the present, peaceful and Spiritual power of the gospel rather than through a radically different principle of operation, namely Christ's physical presence on earth using violence to subdue opposition. A. A. Hodge put it this way: "The Scriptures, both Old and New Testament, clearly reveal that the gospel is to exercise an influence over all branches of the human family, immeasurably more extensive and more thoroughly transforming than any it has ever realized in time past. This end is to be gradually attained through the spiritual presence of Christ in the ordinary dispensation of Providence, and ministrations of the church." Charles Hodge insisted that "There is no intimation in the New Testament that the work of converting the world is to be effected by any other means than those now in use.... It is to dishonour [sic, sl] the Gospel, and the power of the Holy Spirit, to suppose that they are inadequate to the accomplishment of this work."

8. EPism believes that with the power of the Holy Spirit working through the church's preaching of the gospel, in gradual stages of growth, the preponderance of men and nations will submit to Christ at some time in the future. B. B. Warfield drew this generalization: "the nature of the whole dispensation in which we are living, and which stretches from the First to the Second Advent, [is] a period of advancing conquest on the part of Christ.... The prophecy [of Romans 11] promises the universal Christianization of the world." Elsewhere he wrote: "If you wish, as you lift your eyes to the far horizon of the future, to see looming on the edge of time the glory of a saved world, you can find warrant for so great a vision only in the high principles that it is God and God alone who saves men, that all their salvation is from him, and that in his own good time and way he will bring the world in its entirety to the feet of him whom he has not hesitated to present to our adoring love not merely as Savior of our souls, but as the Savior of the world.... The redemption of the world is similarly a process. It, too, has stages; it, too, advances only gradually to its completion...."

9. EPists do not hold that each and every individual on earth will someday be saved, but that at some future time the vast majority will; in Christ's wheat field there will always be found some tares, up until the final harvest in judgement. Charles Hodge taught that "it is not to be inferred from this [Biblical promise of Gentile and Jewish conversion] that either all the heathen or all the Jews are to become true Christians. In many cases the conversion may be merely nominal. There will probably enough remain unchanged in heart to be the germ of that persecuting power which shall bring about those days of tribulation which the Bible seems to teach are to immediately precede the coming of the Lord."

10. EPism teaches that there will be a final apostasy or falling away just prior to the return of Christ in judgment on the world. Interpreting Revelation 20, A. A. Hodge wrote: "Christ has in reserve for his church a period of universal expansion and of pre-eminent spiritual prosperity, when the spirit and character of the "noble army of martyrs" shall be reproduced again in the great body of God's people in an unprecedented triumph of their cause, and in the overthrow of that of their enemies, receive judgment over their foes and reign in the earth; while the party of Satan, 'the rest of the dead,' shall not flourish again until the thousand years be ended, when it shall prevail again for a little season." Charles Hodge held that "The great truth set forth in these prophecies is, that there was future ... a great apostasy in the Church; that this apostasy would be Anti-christian (or Antichrist), ally itself with the world and become a great persecuting power... [which will] be over taken with a final destruction when the Lord comes."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Russia & C.I.S.

A History of The Downfall of Communism and the Beginning of Freedom for the Gospel in the former USSR

These articles are arranged in chronological order by year.
Dates designate original appearance of article in The Forerunner.

 Be sure to check out Predvestnik - the Russian language Forerunner!

Report from Russia's Churches January 1988

Mikhail Gorbachev - TIME Magazine's Man of the Year January 1988

Perestroika: New Thinking for Our Country and the World January 1988

Delegation to Soviet Government: "Release Christian dissident prisoners" April 1988

President Reagan's Speech May 1988

Soviet Christians May 1988

Billy Graham in the USSR June 1988

New Testament in Soviet Magazine November 1988

Doors Open to Bibles and Christian Literature in Soviet Union December 1988

Soviet Television News Crew Visits Evangelical Church December 1988

Toymaker in USSR December 1988

Russian Quotes from Two Centuries December 1988

Foreign Radio Without Interference Allowed in USSR January 1989

Communist Youth Drop in Membership January 1989

Landmark Year for Bible Deliveries to USSR January 1989

USSR to make Christian Coin January 1989

"Seven Years of Prayer" the Key to Opening up the Soviet Union April 1989

Free Elections in Soviet Union April 1989

Russian Radio April 1989

Christian Students To Study in U.S.S.R. May 1989

Christian Book Popular in USSR May 1989

Wall Street Journal Says Gorbachev May Be A Christian June 1989

Fast-Paced Changes in USSR June 1989

Soviet Book on Child-Rearing June 1989

The Coming Transformation of the USSR September 1989

Soviet Atheism is Facing a Crisis October 1989

Ukraine Launches Autonomy Movement October 1989

Latin American Evangelist Luis Palau Preaches in Soviet Union November 1989

Soviets Receive Thousands of Christian Books at Moscow International Book Fair November 1989

The Downfall of Communism March 1990

Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn's Warning to the West March 1990

Is the Soviet Union Gog and Magog? March 1990

Soviet Union Proposes Drastic Measures Toward Perestroika August 1990

Chuck Colson's Prison Fellowship in USSR September 1990

Sweeping Changes Are in Store for the USSR October 1990

Prison Fellowship Invited to the Soviet Union November 1990

Historic Soviet Congress December 1990

Christian Youth International Begins December 1990

Youth Explosion Soviet Union: A Report on the beginnings of Christian Youth International March 1991

Mikhail Gorbachev: The True Meaning of the Soviet Flag April 1991

Mikhail Gorbachev - A Modern Cyrus? April 1991

Christian Youth International July 1991 Conference August 1991

America Tries to Make Sense of Soviet Politics August 1991

An Analysis of the Soviet Awakening August 1991

A Look at Mikhail Gorbachev: Can Perestroika Produce Democratic Freedom? August 1991

Predvestnik: The Voice of a New Generation August 1991

A Providential History of Russia August 1991

Mikhail Gorbachev quote September 1991

The One-Way Mirror September 1991

Reforms Suggested for Soviet Schools September 1991

White House Predicts Revival of Christianity in Russia September 1991

Nikita Khrushchev quote October 1991

Russian Forerunner almost shut down by coup attempt October 1991

Big changes in store for Ukraine October 1991

The Moscow Revolution: "I was there." December 1991

More on Russian Forerunner December 1991

Alexander Solzhenitsyn's Triumphant Return December 1991

Moscow CYI conference and Kiev outreach held in March 1992 April 1992

Yeltsin - A Christian? April 1992

Letters to Predvestnik April 1992

A Special Report From Ukraine April 1992

Christian Youth International May 1992

Communism on trial in Moscow August 1992

Report from Ukraine: Predvestnik's 4th press run October 1992

Trends: Rubles to Dollars - What is your money worth in the former USSR? December 1992

Reaching the Former Soviet Union with the Printed Word December 1992

What is Christian Youth International? December 1992

Subscriptions to Russian Forerunner 1992

NJ church to support Russian Forerunner 1992

Russian language Forerunner available in U.S. 1992

End of ministry in former USSR? September 1993

Events of September 1993 in the Russian Federation October 1993

Failure of Russian Legislators: A Special Report February 1994

Cult group disbands after leader predicts end of world in Kiev February 1994

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Back to the Forerunner!

Report from Russia's Churches

1/88

James Stark, an Orthodox Christian of Russian descent who speaks fluent Russian, visited churches in several cities in the Soviet Union recently. He talked with a large cross-section of the Orthodox Christian community on how they viewed the present situation in their country, and reported his findings in Frontier magazine in late 1987.

Despite 70 years of cultural destruction and religious repression, many Russian Christians are still proud of their churches, he said. It is not hard to notice the colorful church architecture against the drab cityscape. "Many of these churches were locked or abandoned, but where I found an open church the people were so excited to show me the beauty of their church. It is difficult to describe their joy at seeing a church come alive again," he explained.

Stark said he met with Christians that had just been released from camps and prisons, as well as a number of unofficial Christian activists. "They and others believe their release is due solely to campaigns on their behalf and to economic pressures which have forced [Soviet leader Mikhail] Gorbachev to seek improved relations with the West," Stark continued.

"Everyone is positive about Gorbachev's leadership and policy direction, but there is an edge of realism to their newfound joy. They attribute the release of some prisoners of conscience, the opening of a few churches, and some positive articles in the newspaper to pressure upon the Soviet government.

"Some Christian activists believe their work is more urgent now than ever before. Real change, they believe, will only be achieved through pressure applied to all levels of government. There are so many people still inside prison and psychiatric hospitals because of their faith. The government needs to allow the church to engage in charitable work, to organize religious education, and to open churches wherever they are wanted."

The Russian Christians believe they have a role to play in their nation, Stark said. "They believe the nation can only advance as it come to grips with its past. Only through repentance can they come to terms with the millions of victims [of communism] and the destruction of the past seventy years. Many believe the Church is the one body that can lead the way in this process."

When asked how a Western Christian could best help, many people in the USSR questioned by Stark replied "come to Russia, come and worship with us". In such a repressive environment, Stark emphasized that Western Christians should never underestimate the value of moral support given by simply coming - as British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher did in Zagorsk - and lighting a candle for the church.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(870f5d5e9c0d57485634be3ecf52f3ca_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(4fe57c3593bf1b21d272ae7ac8dfaf77_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Mikhail Gorbachev - TIME Magazine's Man of the Year

1/88

Man of the Year. The title seems to ring with dignity, courage, and nobility of purpose ... the most outstanding man of 1987. One who has not only done great things for mankind, but also for God and country. A man consumed with a passion for justice, truth, and integrity. One who has sacrificed his own welfare to help the unfortunate, the poor, and the oppressed. That is what enters my mind when I hear someone mention, "The Man of The Year."

According to Time magazine, that man is Mikhail Gorbachev, the Secretary General of the Soviet Union. He has certainly been in the news this year. Acclaimed as the leader of a new generation of Soviets, he is certainly a man with a noble appearance, a striking countenance, and a sincere smile - and he is, of course, a great spokesman for peace. His concern for mankind must be applauded as he travels and negotiates to rid Europe of nuclear missiles. I would also agree that Mr. Gorbachev is the most skilled leader that the USSR has had in a long time - possibly even the best ever. But that should be expected from someone so highly honored.

As Man of the Year, I would also expect that he would have a great concern for the oppressed people of the world, such as those in Afghanistan. I would expect him to be motivating the huge Soviet agricultural machine into high productivity to help feed the starving people of the world such as those in Ethiopia.

As Man of the Year you might expect him to set a courageous example for peace by being the first to dismantle and destroy his nation's missiles - which poise ready to destroy Europe and the rest of the globe. Another appropriate move might be to humbly confess his own shortcomings as well as his nation's past crimes, such as the murder of the innocent passengers aboard Korean Air Lines Flight 007.

You might expect the Man of the Year to be doing everything within his means to bring an end to the grueling war and terrorism plaguing the Mideastern nations of Iraq, Iran, Lebanon, and others. You would also expect him to have a listening ear to those in his nation who would like to leave the Soviet Union.

It seems strange to me that in all the coverage I saw of the Soviet leader in 1987, I failed to notice any mention of his concern for the Ethiopians or the actual destruction of Soviet missiles. Did I miss it? Have they started the dismantling? The grain must have been delivered on a day when I missed the news. Or maybe it's that my expectations for the Man of the Year are just a little too high. Surely the editors of Time knew what they were doing when they selected Mr. Gorbachev. To receive the honor of Man of the Year, he must be doing something right.

Now here is a thought: forgive me if I'm offending anyone for suggesting it, but could it be that the thing Gorbachev is doing so well is acting? I know! He rented all the videos of President Reagan's movies, and then took an acting class at the University of Moscow. But if that is the case, Time gave him the wrong award. He should have received an Oscar.

Now, I don't mean any disrespect by that. In fact, our own president seems to think he is really different and that we are beginning to see significant change in the Soviet Union. Yet common sense tells me to be a little more skeptical on this issue. We have signed treaties with the Soviet Union before, and to my knowledge they have all been broken. Mr. Gorbachev appears to be more sincere than past Soviet leaders, but we can base that assumption only on his own words.

What is truth to a Communist? Traditionally, it is whatever advances the cause of Communism. One of their foundational doctrines is that of the dialectic. Stating it loosely, "It is alright to take two steps backward, if later it will enable you to move three steps up." The ultimate goal remains the same, and Gorbachev himself stated it eloquently in a speech made just this past November:

"We can see today that humanity is not really condemned to always live the way it did before October, 1917. Socialism has evolved into a powerful, growing, and developing reality. It is the October Revolution and socialism that show humankind the road to the future ... In October, 1917, we parted with the Old World, rejecting it once and for all. We are moving towards a new world, the world of communism. We shall never turn off that road."

Based on those words, I could award him with the title of Communist of the Year. Judging his grip on the majority of the media, I could also award him with Diplomat of the Year. But I'm not quite sure about the title that Time gave him. If you agree with me, please write the editors of Time and let them know how you feel.

"Shelter From The Storm" by PowerSource

GAINESVILLE, FL (FR) - A Christian song about child abuse became one of the top 10 hits on secular radio stations throughout the U.S. during the last few weeks of 1987 and prompted several child abusers to seek rehabilitation.

A woman told a Fort Worth radio station that the song forced her to think of how she'd beaten her child. "I realized that the cycle of abuse was continuing with this generation. ... The cycle stops with this letter," she wrote.

The song is from the album "Shelter From The Storm" by PowerSource, a Bedford, Texas-based evangelical youth chorus featuring nine-year-old soloist Sharon Batts.

The song begins, "Dear Mr. Jesus, I don't understand why they took her Mom and Dad away. I know that they don't mean to hit with wild and angry hands. Tell them just how big they are, I pray." Dear Mr. Jesus, they say that she may die. Oh, I hope the doctors stop the pain. I know that you could save her and take her up to the sky so she would never have to hurt again."

The record cracked Billboard magazine's Hot 100 singles chart at 63. It was considered a fast-rising song, according to Thomas Noonan, the magazine's director of charts. "This falls into a different category," Noonan said. "It's a topical record that happened to hit on a sensitive area at a sensitive time. This kind of phenomenon is exciting to our business."

The nine-year-old vocalist Sharon Batts appeared with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers National Football league team at a benefit for child abuse crisis centers in the Tampa area in December. She said she is pleased when she hears stories of people who have been touched by the song. "It makes me feel good because I know that those people haven't had help," she said.

About 100,000 copies of the single have been ordered, although only 15,000 copies have been sold. Sharon's mother, Jan Batts, is the group's creative director. "It has just grown so fast," she said. "It's difficult to say it's under control."

The Gospel Workshop for Children Inc., a non-profit, non-denominational group, started PowerSource five years ago to produce records and videos for troubled children who have no one to help them. The group commissioned songwriter Richard Klender to write "Dear Mr. Jesus" at the suggestion of a board member who had been abused as a child.

In some cities, record stores and radio stations are joining to sell the album and are giving the profits to local child abuse crisis centers. Proceeds from orders made directly to PowerVision will be used to offset distribution costs which the tiny record label has accrued, Batts said.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Perestroika: New Thinking for Our Country and the World

By Leilani Corpus

1/88

What is new about "Perestroika?" The 254-page internationally distributed book is the first widely publicized "manifesto" that a Soviet leader has ever written. Although it contains hard-line communist ideas dressed in Western jargon, and is riddled with justification for past historical acts, the book is actually an admission that something is vitally missing from the hearts of the Russian people.

Conservatives have labeled it as a public relations effort to subtly seduce the Western world to lower its guard. Liberals have touted Perestroika as a mandate for disarmament and cooperation between two extremely different value systems while under the death threat of nuclear war.

General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev insists it is a union of democratic principles and socialism and not a response to a poor domestic economy or wholesale abandonment of basic communist tenets. While both conservatives and liberals may be somewhat true in their assessments, Gorbachev asserts that Perestroika is a blueprint for the Soviet Union to emerge from economic backwardness into global industrial competitiveness.

Although somewhat boring and staccato in his litany of programs and "new" socialist ideas to arouse the Soviet workforce into a higher level of creativity and innovation, Gorbachev seems unusually preoccupied with the need for spiritual values. "Today our main job is to lift the individual spiritually, respecting his inner world and giving him moral strength," writes Gorbachev.

Instead of pitching a new socialist program in the beginning, he spends two chapters looking at the problems of low morale, disillusionment, cynicism and fear among his people. "Decay began in public morals; the great feeling of solidarity with each other that was forged during the heroic time of the Revolution, the first five-year plans, the Great Patriotic War and postwar rehabilitation was weakening; alcoholism, drug addiction and crime were growing; and the penetration of the stereotypes of mass culture alien to us, which bred vulgarity and low tastes and brought about ideological barrenness, increased."¹

Cronyism and a corrupt bureaucracy are primarily responsible for these problems, according to Gorbachev. "Officialdom, red tape, patronizing attitudes and careerism are incompatible with this ideal (socialism)."² Gorbachev sees moral purity, high ideological standards, and values as fostering the ideal socialistic utopian society.³

Why is a staunch atheist so engrossed with the propagation of ethereal spiritual values and the elimination of Party depravity? Is it memories of his boyhood spent under Stalin's regime when the peasants were forcibly collectivized and the ensuing Nazi invasion? Or his Stavropol Krai days when he was serving in minor offices and discussed problems with his constituency on his "walkabouts?"

Gorbachev's sermonizing is either a sham to deceive his people or the result of good intentions. His peasant background and reputation of integrity suggest the latter.

Nursed and weaned in the mist of bloodshed and war, Gorbachev's Perestroika and his newly-adopted policy of glasnost ("openness") demonstrate a desire to reject the Stalinist days of forced collectivization and terror. Perestroika is not only a manifesto of Gorbachev's Leninist ideas and pet programs that will inject a new dose of motivation into the national consciousness, but a hopeful effort to restore trust between the people and their government.

He sees the beginning of this trend in a national drive to inculcate the people with values. "We must look at ourselves in terms of whether we live and act according to our conscience,"⁴ Gorbachev writes.

This seems a rather unusual statement for the head of the Supreme Soviet. Gorbachev is two steps ahead of most American political leaders in tracing the roots of Russia's problems to the valueless vacuum in the hearts of his people. While America's political leaders are denying the influence and importance of their Christian heritage and values upon society, and crowning the new god of secular humanism, Gorbachev is groping for a spiritual basis for his people.

Flawed Solutions

Perestroika is an effort to inspire Russia towards values and high standards. History has proven that the success of any civilization is contingent upon its ethical base. Mr. Gorbachev is correct in addressing the true issue of spiritual values and its correlation with an industrious and creative people. Rome's fall began with the hedonism of its people, and the French revolution began with the abuse of power of its leaders. Stalin is a testimony throughout Perestroika of a wicked leader who violated the trust of his people and led his nation into its present backwardness.

Yet Gorbachev's solutions are flawed because of the sore lack of an ethical framework to guide his programs. More programs, incentives, and good intentions on the part of leaders are not sufficient to reform the Soviet system.

A prominent Russian dissident found the answer to Gorbachev's problem after studying the history of Russia's Revolution for over 50 years. The author of one of the most controversial and comprehensive accounts of the Revolution, The Gulag Archipelago, and many other works, Alexandr Solzhenitsyn found that the bloodshed and terror of his nation began when men abandoned God:

"... if I were asked today to formulate as concisely as possible the main cause of the ruinous revolution that swallowed some 60 million of our people, I could not put it more accurately than to repeat: 'Men have forgotten God."

Mr. Gorbachev, along with all of his top party officials in the Kremlin, would do well to read more of Mr. Solzhenitsyn's banished volumes. If he is serious about encouraging freedom and openness in the Soviet Union, then he had best start with the most fundamental issue: religious liberty.

The yearning Gorbachev senses in his people is not simply the desire for an updated brand of socialism. Their need for values will not be met through party propaganda or Marxist indoctrination. The Russian people need the God of the Bible. Solzhenitsyn once wrote, "To the ill-considered hopes of the last two centuries we can propose only a determined quest for the warm hand of God, which we have so rashly and self-confidently spurned. Only in this way can our eyes be opened to the errors of this unfortunate 20th century and our hands be directed to setting them right."

Let's hope that Mr. Gorbachev's policy of glasnost will truly be what it implies: an opening of the Soviet Union's doors to Christianity.

1 Mikhail Gorbachev, Perestroika: New Thinking for Our Country and The World, (New York: Harper & Row Publishers, 1987), p. 21. 2 Ibid., p. 22. 3 Ibid., p. 55. 4 Ibid.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Delegation to Soviet Government: "Release Christian dissident prisoners"

4/88

DE BURGHT, Holland - A direct request was made to Soviet authorities for the release of Soviet Christians imprisoned for their faith at the first international consultation of "Human Rights and International Cooperation" in January, attended by unofficial representatives of thirteen countries, including the Soviet Union and the United States. Delegates included former First Lady Rosalyn Carter, a number of congressmen, and various religious leaders.

The Soviet delegation agreed to examine a list of 250 known religious prisoners convicted under laws of "religious activity" presented by U.S. Congressmen Frank Wolf (R-VA) and Chris Smith (R-NJ). The list was accepted by Soviet delegate Yuri Smirnov, a member of the Council on Religious Affairs and the U.S.S.R. Council of Ministers, but Western delegates were reminded that the Soviets hold a different view on the religious prisoners issue. "Many prisoners on your list are criminals who are also religious people trying to find a defense on religious grounds," said Fedor Burlatsky, chairman of the recently formed Soviet Commission on Humanitarian Problems and Human Rights and expert advisor to Mikhail Gorbachev during the Geneva, Reykjavik, and Washington summits.

Though the three-day meeting was cordial and non-confrontive, Western delegates continued to press the Soviets for action regarding religious prisoners. In the final hours of the De Burght consultation, Western delegates proposed that the final communique on the conference include a statement indicating the West's desire to see a complete amnesty for religious prisoners on the occasion of the millennial celebration. The motion was followed by heated debate on both sides and was finally withdrawn by the U.S. delegates upon assurance by the Soviet delegation that the issue would be discussed in Moscow immediately following their return and a report on the status of each prisoner would be released soon.

The cause of religious prisoners in the Soviet Union and the basic right to worship without government control or intervention were major issues of concern to the delegates present at the consultation.

Although the dialogue between the East and West was intended to find areas of mutual understanding on a broad range of human rights-related issues, including terrorism, unemployment, and environmental problems, it was the issue of religious freedom as a basis for all human rights that clearly divided the West from the East, according to an Open Doors News Service report.

Former First Lady Rosalyn Carter, a member of the U.S. delegation and keynote speaker, said, "[Religious freedom] is an elementary right which no government can violate." This elicited a charged response from Fedor Burlatsky, a Soviet advisor, who cited "civil and political rights" without which "each individual cannot hope for improved working conditions and [there can be] no betterment of human economic standards." He accused the American government of focusing too much on individual rights related to social problems and said, "Americans will not take up the burden for millions of unemployed individuals."

Burlatsky's failure to make any mention of religious rights in his speech was cited by several Western delegates, including Lutheran clergyman Richard Neuhaus, who commented that without the presence of religious rights a government cannot expect to have long-term survival. "We must not speak of every human problem as a human rights problem," he said, quoting excerpts from Carter's speech. "The problems of homelessness are not human rights problems."

At a press conference following the conclusion of the De Burght consultation, Andrei Grachev, section leader of the Central Committee of the Communist Party in the Soviet Union, said, "Rather than declaring an amnesty for 18 or 200 individuals," the intention of the Soviet authorities was that in the future "no innocent person, in the East or West, would be persecuted for his beliefs, including religious beliefs."

Burlatsky said in his final remarks to journalists that the conference was a "manifestation of the triumph of the spirit of constructiveness, the spirit of searching for mutually acceptable solutions and the spirit of concessions, ... We listened attentively to expressions ... on the problem of human rights addressed to the Soviet Union on the part of Western countries and the United States." He described the conference as a commission which consisted of "enthusiasts who would like to work ... for the deepening of glasnost in the Soviet Union and for consistent implementation of human rights in the Soviet Union."

Members of the Western delegation expressed more restraint in their evaluation on the conference. Congressman Chris Smith said he was encouraged by the "one-on-one contact with key players" of the Soviet delegation over the three-day period. "I believe we had moments of real dialogue [with the Soviets]; it wasn't just an exercise in rhetoric. Expectations are that something good will come out of it."

The De Burght consultation, organized by Dutch businessman, Ernst van Eeghen, and Landrum Bolling, president of the Ecumenical Institute in Jerusalem, was also sponsored by several European evangelical mission groups, including Open Doors International and Christian Solidarity, which are noted for their work on behalf of Christians in the Soviet Union and other restricted countries.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(73002692dd5e7a64e60946be3158e719_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(d5d7044e5caf6907399af2dced8d6ff8_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

President Reagan's Speech

Moscow State University, USSR
May 31, 1988

Editor's Remarks: The following speech, perhaps destined to be President Reagan's most famous address, was given before an audience of students at Moscow State University on May 31, 1988. It embodies the sum of Reagan's vision: that tyranny will one day be vanquished as Christian liberty advances across the globe. It was probably the first time that many of these Soviet students had ever been exposed to this idea. The speech has been edited because of length.

Before I left Washington, I received many heartfelt letters and telegrams asking me to carry here a simple message - perhaps, but also some of the most important business of this summit - it is a message of peace and goodwill and hope for a growing friendship and closeness between our two peoples.

First I want to take a little time to talk to you much as I would to any group of university students in the United States. I want to talk not just of the realities of today, but of the possibilities of tomorrow.

You know, one of the first contacts between your country and mine took place between Russian and American explorers. The Americans were members of Cook's last voyage on an expedition searching for an Arctic passage; on the island of Unalaska, they came upon the Russians, who took them in, and together, with the native inhabitants, held a prayer service on the ice.

The explorers of the modern era are the entrepreneurs, men with vision, with the courage to take risks and faith enough to brave the unknown. These entrepreneurs and their small enterprises are responsible for almost all the economic growth in the United States. They are the prime movers of the technological revolution. In fact, one of the largest personal computer firms in the United states was started by two college students, no older than you, in the garage behind their home.

Some people, even in my own country, look at the riot of experiment that is the free market and see only waste. What of all the entrepreneurs that fail? Well, many do, particularly the successful ones. Often several times. And if you ask them the secret of their success, they'll tell you, it's all that they learned in their struggles along the way - yes, it's what they learned from failing. Like an athlete in competition, or a scholar in pursuit of the truth, experience is the greatest teacher.

We are seeing the power of economic freedom spreading around the world - places such as the Republic of Korea, Singapore, and Taiwan have vaulted into the technological era, barely pausing in the industrial age along the way. Low-tax agricultural policies in the sub-continent mean that in some years India is now a net exporter of food. Perhaps most exciting are the winds of change that are blowing over the People's republic of China, where one-quarter of the world's population is now getting its first taste of economic freedom.

At the same time, the growth of democracy has become one of the most powerful political movements of our age. In Latin America in the 1970's, only a third of the population lived under democratic government. Today over 90 percent does. In the Philippines, in the Republic of Korea, free, contested, democratic elections are the order of the day. Throughout the world, free markets are the model for growth. Democracy is the standard by which governments are measured.

We Americans make no secret of our belief in freedom. In fact, it's something of a national pastime. Every four years the American people choose a new president, and 1988 is one of those years. At one point there were 13 major candidates running in the two major parties, not to mention all the others, including the Socialist and Libertarian candidates - all trying to get my job.

About 1,000 local television stations, 8,500 radio stations, and 1,700 daily newspapers, each one an independent, private enterprise, fiercely independent of the government, report on the candidates, grill them in interviews, and bring them together for debates. In the end, the people vote - they decide who will be the next president.

But freedom doesn't begin or end with elections. Go to any American town, to take just an example, and you'll see dozens of synagogues and mosques - and you'll see families of every conceivable nationality, worshipping together.

Go into any schoolroom, and there you will see children being taught the Declaration of Independence, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights - among them life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness - that no government can justly deny - the guarantees in their Constitution for freedom of speech, freedom of assembly, and freedom of religion.

Go into any courtroom and there will preside an independent judge, beholden to no government power. There every defendant has the right to a trial by a jury of his peers, usually 12 men and women - common citizens, they are the ones, the only ones, who weigh the evidence and decide on guilt or innocence. In that court, the accused is innocent until proven guilty, and the word of a policeman, or any official, has no greater legal standing than the word of the accused.

Go to any university campus, and there you'll find an open, sometimes heated discussion of the problems in American society and what can be done to correct them. Turn on the television, and you'll see the legislature conducting the business of government right there before the camera, debating and voting on the legislation that will become the law of the land. March in any demonstrations, and there are many of them - the people's right of assembly is guaranteed in the Constitution and protected by the police.

But freedom is more even than this: Freedom is the right to question, and change the established way of doing things. It is the continuing revolution of the marketplace. It is the understanding that allows us to recognize shortcomings and seek solutions. It is the right to put forth an idea, scoffed at by the experts, and watch it catch fire among the people. It is the right to stick - to dream - to follow your dream, or stick to your conscience, even if you're the only one in a sea of doubters.

Freedom is the recognition that no single person, no single authority of government has a monopoly on the truth, but that every individual life is infinitely precious, that every one of us put on this world has been put there for a reason and has something to offer.

America is a nation made up of hundreds of nationalities. Our ties to you are more than ones of good feeling; they're ties of kinship. In America, you'll find Russians, Armenians, Ukrainians, peoples from Eastern Europe and Central Asia. They come from every part of this vast continent, from every continent, to live in harmony, seeking a place where each cultural heritage is respected, each is valued for its diverse strengths and beauties and the richness it brings to our lives.

Recently, a few individuals and families have been allowed to visit relatives in the West. We can only hope that it won't be long before all are allowed to do so, and Ukrainian-Americans, Baltic-Americans, Armenian-Americans, can freely visit their homelands, just as this Irish-American visits his.

Freedom, it has been said, makes people selfish and materialistic, but Americans are one of the most religious peoples on Earth. Because they know that liberty, just as life itself, is not earned, but a gift from God, they seek to share that gift with the world. "Reason and experience," said George Washington, in his farewell address, "both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle. And it is substantially true, that virtue or morality is a necessary spring of popular government."

Democracy is less a system of government than it is a system to keep government limited, unintrusive: A system of constraints on power to keep politics and government secondary to the important things in life, the true sources of value found only in family and faith.

I have often said, nations do not distrust each other because they are armed; they are armed because they distrust each other. If this globe is to live in peace and prosper, if it is to embrace all the possibilities of the technological revolution, then nations must renounce, once and for all, the right to an expansionist foreign policy. Peace between nations must be an enduring goal - not a tactical stage in a continuing conflict.

I've been told that there's a popular song in your country - perhaps you know it - whose evocative refrain asks the question, "Do the Russians want a war?" In answer it says, "Go ask that silence lingering in the air, above the birch and poplar there; beneath those trees the soldiers lie. Go ask my mother, ask my wife; then you will have to ask no more, 'Do the Russians want a war?'"

But what of your one-time allies? What of those who embraced you on the Elbe? What if we were to ask the watery graves of the Pacific, or the European battlefields where America's fallen were buried far from home? What if we were to ask their mothers, sisters, and sons, do Americans want war? Ask us, too, and you'll find the same answer, the same longing in every heart. People do not make wars, governments do - and no mother would ever willingly sacrifice her sons for territorial gain, for economic advantage, for ideology. A people free to choose will always choose peace.

Americans seek always to make friends of old antagonists. After a colonial revolution with Britain we have cemented for all ages the ties of kinship between our nations. After a terrible civil war between North and South, we healed our wounds and found true unity as a nation. We fought two world wars in my lifetime against Germany and one with Japan, but now the Federal Republic of Germany and Japan are two of our closest allies and friends.

Some people point to the trade disputes between us as a sign of strain, but they're the frictions of all families, and the family of free nations is a big and vital and sometimes boisterous one. I can tell you that nothing would please my heart more than in my lifetime to see American and Soviet diplomats grappling with the problem of trade disputes between America and a growing, exuberant, exporting Soviet Union that had opened up to economic freedom and growth.

Is this just a dream? Perhaps. But it is a dream that is our responsibility to have come true.

Your generation is living in one of the most exciting, hopeful times in Soviet history. It is a time when the first breath of freedom stirs the air and the heart beats to the accelerated rhythm of hope, when the accumulated spiritual energies of a long silence yearn to break free.

We do not know what the conclusion of this journey will be, but we're hopeful that the promise of reform will be fulfilled. In this Moscow spring, this May 1988, we may be allowed that hope - that freedom, like the fresh green sapling planted over Tolstoi's grave, will blossom forth at least in the rich fertile soil of your people and culture. We may be allowed to hope that the marvelous sound of a new openness will keep rising through, ringing through, leading to a new world of reconciliation, friendship, and peace.

Thank you all very much and da blagoslovit vas gospod! God bless you.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Soviet Christians

5/88

In the midst of the pomp and fanfare of the 1000th birthday of Christianity in Russia, the younger generation in the Soviet Union is apparently showing a growing interest in spiritual matters. "There has been a religious revival among young people," said Deputy Chief Father Vladimir of the Russian Orthodoxy's main monastic center.

Young Russians are increasingly interested in joining the clergy, according to Time magazine, and they are attending church in unprecedented numbers. For example, at a monastery that re-opened as a church after a period of government control, two-fifths of the congregation is in their 20's and 30's.

This growing interest in Christianity among the youth during the state-sanctioned celebration may stem from boredom, disillusionment, and cynicism - which the Soviet government is acknowledging as a problem.

Jon Utley, associate editor of The Times of Americas magazine and commentator on Voice of America, said that Soviet youth are a major government concern. Utley recently went on a tour sponsored by the World Media Association with 50 journalists, academic leaders, and activists.

"From talking to young people, we could well understand why Soviet youth are a major preoccupation of the government. There were almost no diversions. Our members (when alone) were often approached by youths for black market transactions."

Utley attended a press conference by the Foreign Ministry. During the briefing, Communist state officials distributed a release which stated: "Young people are uncompromising in their search for truth. One can't overlook the fact that many young people during the years of stagnation reconciled themselves to the hopelessness of attempts to attain truth and change ..."

"(T)hey saw in society elements that were totally incompatible with what they knew about the nature of socialism. The example of some officials ... was morally destructive." Specifics on these officials were not revealed.

Utley also attended a meeting in Leningrad with students of the Soviet American Friendship Society. "In one discussion about human rights, a student said that Russia should withdraw from Afghanistan and was promptly answered and dressed down for 10 minutes by an older member," he said in a report on his visit in Human Events.

Besides growing interest among youth, the official Russian Orthodox Church is becoming more vocal in the Soviet press and television on matters involving the country's moral and cultural climate. "Glasnost and religious freedom are intimately correlated," Vsevolod Marinov told The Forerunner. Marinov is the director of the Soviet Bureau of Opinion based in Moscow. "Religious people have much more of a voice in the mass media which wasn't the case before."

Marinov is also a member of the Peace Committee, a delegation of Soviet citizens that recently visited the U.S. Pravda Cultural Editor Nikolai Potopov agreed, saying, "Religious people are more and more active in sharing their opinions with non-religious people on peace-related problems. Confiscated church buildings are being returned to churches."

To commemorate the birth of Christianity, the Soviet government gave permission to the United Bible Society in Stuttgart, West Germany, for the importation of 100,000 Ukrainian language Bibles. But many church leaders both inside and outside the country say that Gorbachev's reconstructionist policies are cosmetic, and are calling for more radical changes to be made in Soviet dealings with the Church. Father Gleb Yakunin, an ex-prisoner who initiated the Russian Orthodox human rights movement in 1965, said, "The general atmosphere has changed a lot, but when it comes to actual church life, it's like it was 30 years ago."

Communist officials have said there may be signs of a new policy toward state control of churches. In the communist Central Committee Publication, an article stated, "The time has finally come to put an end to a suspicious and unfavorable attitude toward believers and their ideals of care for people, love and moral self-improvement. We should take into account the unprecedented historical fact that the church has managed to find its place in socialist society without detriment to its faith."

Yuri Smirnov, spokesman for the Council for Religious Affairs, told Time, "The church could be a help in changing people's attitudes toward work. There are too many divorces. There are many other social problems, like drug abuse. There are three to eight suicides among young people in Moscow every week. Why not use the power of the Church, since millions of people are under its influence?"

This is most definitely a far cry from the rhetoric of past Soviet regimes, which predicted total eradication of faith and Christianity by this date. As millions of nationals celebrate the arrival of the Christian gospel in the Soviet Union, and as young people return to the churches in record numbers, it will most likely open the doors for even more lively discussion in the Kremlin about the future of the USSR.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Billy Graham in the USSR

by Edward E. Plowman

ROANOKE, VA (NIRR) - Americans following developments surrounding the millennial observances of the Russian Orthodox Church, including eyebrow-raising changes in church-and-state relationships, may have been short-changed by the press.

Many of the foreign reporters were exhausted from coverage of the Reagan-Gorbachev summit. Their editors back home seemed to want little more than an advance background story on the church, with maybe a refusenik-oriented glance at the overall religious scene, plus tid-bits on the doings of the Vatican delegation in town for the Orthodox celebrations. As a result, some key stories were not published, and some were never even covered.

One of the under-covered events was the visit of evangelist Billy Graham, June 8-17. Among other things, he:

- * Addressed audiences of top Russian Orthodox Church clergy, religious leaders from around the world, ranking government figures, and others at the main Orthodox jubilee observances at the Bolshoi theater in Moscow and the Shevchenko theater in Kiev - the first time in over 50 years major religious events were permitted to be held off church premises;

- * Preached to overflow crowds at Baptist and Orthodox churches in both cities, including St. Vladimir Cathedral in Kiev, where a throng estimated by church officials at between 12,000 and 15,000 heard him - his largest audience in the Soviet Union so far, and apparently the first time large loudspeakers were allowed outdoors for religious purposes since communists came to power;

- * Met privately with key Soviet officials to discuss, among other topics, changes in church-and-state relationships as a result of the new government policies of perestroika (restructuring) and glasnost (openness), and he heard candid acknowledgments that the state was "wrong" in some past dealings with the church.

The celebrations, which brought together perhaps the largest array of heads of religious bodies ever, received heavy coverage by Soviet television and the press, another first for Soviet churches. Almost every night for more than a week Soviet TV aired major documentaries or movies on the church. Graham himself was interviewed by Soviet journalists.

The evangelist is fairly well-known in the Soviet Union: the "Hour of Decision" is broadcast across the land by short-wave radio, his books are circulating among Christians, and he has preached there before.

A guest of honor of the Orthodox Church, Graham told reporters he was pleased by the changes he found since his visits in 1982 and 1984, and he expressed hope that progress will continue in church and state relationships. Some new policies, including the lifting of import restrictions on Bibles and other Christian literature, were among reforms he suggested in letters and private meetings with officials in his earlier visits. He also said he is still pressing for greater opportunities for Soviet Baptists, including the right to build and operate a seminary.

In Moscow, Graham joined other religious leaders for a rare meeting in the Kremlin where Andrei Gromyko fielded questions, some of them confrontational, on religious freedom. The evangelist conferred informally with many church leaders from around the world, exchanged pleasantries with Raisa Gorbachev and met pastors of unregistered churches and Orthodox activist, Gleb Yakunin.

Graham also met privately with key Gorbachev advisers, Anatoliy Dobrynin and Boris Ponamarev, but declined to disclose details of their talks.

Additionally, he preached at a Saturday night service at the picturesque Kolomenskoya Russian Orthodox "Church of the Czars" in a semi-rural setting on the banks of the Moscow River at the city's southern edge. Awaiting his arrival, crowds lined both sides of a dirt road leading to the church. A number of children and young people were among those squeezed into the sanctuary - another new development for many Orthodox churches. The evangelist exhorted his listeners to "open your heart in a new way to Christ" and to be faithful witnesses at work and school.

On Sunday, he made a surprise visit to the city's main Baptist church. "You are entering a new period of history for the nation," he told the capacity congregation. "In past years, you faced many difficulties, but your faith has become strong," he observed, adding: "You could help lead a revival throughout the world."

The high point for Graham personally was his three-day visit to Kiev, a beautiful city of 3 million perched on verdant bluffs overlooking the Dnieper River - the place where Prince Vladimir in the year 988 baptized the people of Rus, which later became Russia, into Christianity. Here, the evangelist was hosted by Metropolitan Filaret of Kiev, the top Orthodox churchman in the Ukraine.

"As Prince Vladimir changed and turned from idols, you must change and turn to Christ," the evangelist told the thousands jammed into St. Vladimir Cathedral and thousands more under rainy skies outside. Metropolitan Filaret, resplendent in a red-and-gold robe and miter, stood at his side throughout the sermon, symbolizing the church's approval of the evangelist's message. Mobile military generators, manned by Soviet soldiers, provided power for the television lights and sound system, which could be heard for more than a block.

The scene was repeated to a lesser degree the next evening. Graham met with a group of Ukrainian Baptist, Pentecostal, and independent pastors, then went to the Yamskaya Street Baptist Church, where a crowd of thousands greeted him. (Just two or three years ago, such a crowd would not have been permitted to assemble.) A number said they had traveled hundreds of miles to see and hear him. Most had to listen to his sermon on loud speakers outside. When he concluded his sermon, some raised their hands in response to his appeal to follow Christ. A teen-age girl in the front row fell to her knees and wept.

Also in Kiev, Graham met with regional political leaders and attended an outdoor dedication service at the Monastery of the Caves, a highly revered site recently returned to the church by the government. The service, which climaxed Orthodox celebrations in Kiev, attracted tens of thousands.

At the very beginning of his 10-day visit, the evangelist traveled from Moscow to the nearby city of Zagorsk to witness the final day of deliberations of an important Orthodox council meeting. While there, he met with Patriarch Pimen, who is suffering from diabetes and other afflictions, and assured the venerable leader of his prayers.

Graham also met in Zagorsk with Konstantin Kharchev, head of the Council for Religious Affairs, the powerful government body that regulates churches in the U.S.S.R. In a conversation characterized by warmth and candor, the government official noted that Graham is well known in the Soviet Union, then briefed the evangelist on many of the changes affecting the church. At one point, Kharchev said the government is trying to correct mistakes made earlier. "Thousands of churches were closed in the past," he said, "but the believers remained." He said 150 churches (about 60 of them Orthodox) have been opened within the past few months.

In a press statement issued upon his departure from Moscow, Graham noted a need for "new and stronger bridges of friendship and understanding" between the U.S. and the Soviet Union. He suggested churches can make a crucial contribution by promoting stronger contacts between believers in the two countries.

Such contacts were already begun by thousands of American Sunday-school children and members of church youth groups who made and sent congratulatory cards to the Russian church on the occasion of its thousandth year. Some were on display at Graham's hotel in Kiev. One child's colorfully decorated card declared simply, "Happy birthday, Christians!" Another from South Carolina said, "Thanks for being Christians for so long. Keep up the good faith. I love you."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(6059a5aa8b4ca7bb793408023d6c6e42_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(c50c8b7b2cc2cf9ff925edec0ee94c0d_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

New Testament in Soviet Magazine

11/88

AMSTERDAM, Holland (NNI) - A member of the USSR Academy of Sciences has stated that Soviet magazine V Mire Knig (The World of Books), plans to serialize the New Testament to meet the growing demand for previously banned literature and perhaps to increase circulation. During a recent visit to Israel, Soviet scholar Sergei Averintsev said he has been asked by the magazine to write the footnotes which will accompany the New Testament.

The monthly magazine is published by the USSR State Committee for Publishing Houses, Printing Plants, and the Book Trade and is known primarily as a trade journal. Consequently, V Mire Knig's circulation is limited to 40,000, which is relatively low in comparison to the total Soviet population of some 285 million.

According to expert observers, other Soviet magazines such as Novyi Mir, Ogonek, and Znamya, have successfully increased their circulations by publishing controversial articles. For example, Novyi Mir published previously prohibited authors, Ogonek printed opposition to Stalinism, and Znamya carried open discussions on topics formerly considered taboo in the Soviet Union.

Nevertheless, observers consider the planned serialization of the New Testament to be a possible official response to calls by Soviet academicians to publish the Bible in the USSR. In a recent issue of Ogonek, Dmitrii Likhachev called for the publication of the Bible on grounds that atheistic education cannot be trustworthy if atheists do not know what they are fighting against.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Doors Open to Bibles and Christian Literature in Soviet Union:

A Special Report
12/88

MOSCOW, USSR (NIRR) - What began as a trickle when Mikhail Gorbachev took power in 1985, has become a torrent this year. Russian-language Bibles have disappeared from shops and warehouses in the West; virtually all have been shipped to the Soviet Union, and a huge backlog of unfilled orders is piling up. There is plenty of unused capacity at plants that print Bibles, but demand is running far ahead of funding. Michael Bordeaux of Keston College says, "The church was caught unprepared for this window of opportunity."

Already, more Bibles and other literature have gone to the U.S.S.R. this year than in all the years from the late 1920s through 1987. A "system" is involved in legal shipments: requests for literature by Soviet church groups, after approval by authorities, are channeled to Bible societies and missions. An organization may bear all or part of the costs of production and shipping. Because of this overlap among groups, it is difficult to track totals (two or three groups may list the same request or shipment in their respective records). The United Bible Societies office serves as a clearinghouse for most orders and, through its member societies, picks up much of the tab.

Records indicate additional requests pending shipment next year to Soviet Churches. Open Doors International has a request for one million Testaments from the Russian Orthodox Church; shipments were to begin this fall, with completion within a year. International Bible Translations in Sweden, in cooperation with other groups, has been providing small supplies of Bibles in Soviet minority languages.

Slavic Gospel Association (SGA) in Wheaton, Illinois, the largest publisher of Christian books in Russian, has sent the Baptist union 160,000 volumes by C.S. Lewis, Billy Graham, Josh McDowell, Warren Wiersbe, and others, along with 60,000 study Bibles. An additional 100,000 books and Bibles are in the pipeline. SGA has translated and printed 20 titles so far.

Unofficial shipments of Bibles and literature are being supplied by other mission and emigrant groups (such as the Georgi Vins ministry serving primarily unregistered Baptists), but leaders decline to disclose figures. The Bibles are supplied at no charge to the official church groups, which in turn usually sell them to individuals, partly to help support church work, partly to deter black marketeering. Prices can be high in comparison to weekly wages, but will come down as supplies increase.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(73002692dd5e7a64e60946be3158e719_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(d5d7044e5caf6907399af2dced8d6ff8_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Soviet Television News Crew Visits Evangelical Church

12/88

EDINA, MN (EP) - It was an unlikely scene - a leading Soviet network journalist sitting in the front row of an evangelical church in Minnesota, listening intently to the service. Her camera crew roamed the aisles taping the service - worshipping, singing, and even praying - for later viewing in the Soviet Union.

It was a sign of Perestroika's heady winds of freedom, which are presenting unique opportunities for the Gospel.

Leading Soviet journalist Svetlana Staradomskya recently spent two weeks in the St. Paul/Minneapolis area filming scenes of American life to use in her Soviet news broadcasts, which have an estimated national audience of twenty million people.

Staradomskya and her film crew travelled to a public school, a shopping mall, a nursing home and even a professional football game, but it was the two hours spent among believers at Grace Church in Edina, that proved to be the emotional high point of her trip. "Svetlana said that she felt an outpouring of love from Americans all during her stay here, but none more graciously shown than the love of the people of Grace Church," said Diana Pierce, an anchorwoman for the local NBC affiliate, KARE-TV.

It was Pierce who invited Staradomskya to attend a service at Pierce's church. "I wanted to invite her to come to a church service in the United States, and I thought it would be really nice if she could join me at Grace." After a second invitation, Staradomskya agreed to attend. According to Pierce, Staradomskya was intrigued by the modern facilities and by the congregation's concentration of young, professional people - a sharp contrast with the old and largely empty church structures in the Soviet Union.

Following the service, Pierce introduced her to the church's senior pastor, Dr. John Eagen. "God bless you," said Eagen. "God bless you back," was Staradomskya's surprising reply. When asked by Eagen if she really meant that, Staradomskya said in her heavy accent, "Under Perestroika, we are much freer to talk about God."

Eagen remembers her curiosity about the "differentness of this place." When she expressed uncertainty about the reason for that difference, Eagen replied, "I know what you are experiencing, Svetlana. It is the Spirit of Jesus Christ."

The worship service in the large, non-denominational evangelical church proved so captivating to Staradomskya that she sought permission to return with a film crew the following Sunday. The Church not only agreed to the filming but also called Pierce and Staradomskya up to the platform where Eagen presented the Russian journalist with an American Bible. Inscribed in the Bible was the wish that she would "come to know the wonderful freedom of Christ's love and the tremendous peace that results from an intimate relationship with Him."

In brief remarks to the congregation, Staradomskya said, "It is a privilege for me to just be here with you and tell you that now I think this is what lives in our hearts and our souls: that Soviet people really want to make as many bridges with you as possible, to get more close ties in every sphere of life - economic, political - and perhaps one day will come when we get together in such a solemn place as your church to pray together for our cooperation, our love, our understanding."

Following the service, people of the church gathered around Staradomskya, welcoming her to the United States and to Grace Church. Tears welled in Staradomskya's eyes as several people greeted her in her own language. One individual pressed a Russian Bible into her hand, while another presented her with a copy of Josh McDowell's classic apologetic book, Evidence that Demands a Verdict.

Speaking with people and hugging their children, Staradomskya became almost overwhelmed with emotion. Perhaps finding old words inadequate for new feelings, she simply stated, "I feel so full of human love."

"Svetlana was very touched and truly overwhelmed by the love shown to her," said Pierce.

Eagen's message on the morning of the Soviet filming - planned four months earlier with no knowledge of what was to occur - was entitled "Revolutionary Living for Revolutionary Times" from Acts 2. It contained a strong presentation of the gospel. October 23, was also "Friend Day" at the church. Soon after arriving, Staradomskya pointed to a large banner in the foyer that said "Welcome Visitors" and exclaimed to Pierce that it was nice to be welcomed in such a manner. It was an error that Pierce did not have the heart to correct.

In parting comments before returning to the Soviet Union, Staradomskya mentioned to Diana Pierce that of all her reports, it was her report of her visit to the church that she would treasure the most.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Toymaker in USSR

12/88

TULSA, OK (FR) - For the first time in history, a professional theatre company from the U.S. composed entirely of Christian artists performed in the Soviet Union. Members of the traveling company, known as Impact Productions, performed 18 times before a combined audience of 75,000. Tom Newman, director of the company's musical production, "The Toymaker's Dream," said the response was overwhelming.

Before the tour, Newman said he gave a presentation to leaders of the Young Communist Party, the Moscow Music Society, and the Peace Committee. "The guys went crazy and started signing up for dates. I stopped them ... and said I wanted to make sure they knew what I was coming for," said Newman. He explained to them in clear terms that the message of Jesus Christ was the theme of the musical. "'The toymaker represents God,' I told them, 'and the toys represent the different people of the world. It's important that Americans and Soviets get together, because the same God, Jesus Christ, loves us all.'"

The Peace Committee official reacted to Newman's remarks at that point. He responded, "I understand what the story is about, and the people will understand. But don't ever say that in this country again. I will not let you do this presentation in its full entirety if you mention that." Newman explained that the official was simply reacting against hearing the name, "Jesus."

But the group still had an open door to perform at the annual International Peace Day in the Young Communist Peace Palace in Moscow. "It was an extreme sacrifice for people to come since tickets were sold for a full-day's wage - six rubles. Tickets for the Bolshoi Ballet are only two rubles," Newman said. "We sold out our first night and the next day we came to rehearse at 3:30 and people were standing in lines." Pravda, the official state-run newspaper, published a front page story on the performances.

The Soviet government covered all hotel and transportation costs for the Impact team. "We were treated like royalty," said Newman. In Leningrad they performed in the same 10,000 seat arena where rock star Billy Joel had been in concert. At their last performance, Newman said he decided to "stick his neck out" and share the gospel: "I told them, 'I would like to have more freedom to share. So many people misunderstand our mission. We come in the name of peace and love, but 2,000 years ago a man came to tell us how much He loved us. And He was crucified for our sins. We love you, but more importantly, God loves you.'"

"The people went crazy," related Newman. "They stomped their feet and shouted, 'Yes!'" Newman said that the audience showed unexpected eagerness to hear about the Christian message. In addition to this encouraging incident, 25 Afghan generals came backstage in tears and asked the Impact team to come to Afghanistan. The group was also invited back into the Soviet Union for a three-month tour, as well as Cuba, Bulgaria, and other Eastern-bloc countries. "We can't wait to go back," he said.

Besides performing, the group also met with other Christian believers. "The Christians would hide behind a building and run up to us with tears running down their cheeks, pointing to their hearts signifying that we had reached them." Politburo officials had mixed reactions to the performances, however. Newman said that the policy of glasnost, or openness, is partly responsible for their open door to perform.

Impact Productions is an outreach ministry of Victory Christian Center in Tulsa, Oklahoma.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Russian Quotes from Two Centuries

"In the Soviet Union, everything is against God, against religion, against Christianity. Everything is for Communism. But Communism doesn't work. So this contradiction makes you think, makes you question things."

- Natalie Polovchak

"The New American," November 21, 1988

"In the middle of thinking about the fame that my works were bringing me I would say to myself, 'Very well, you will be more famous than Gogol, Pushkin, Shakespeare, Moliere, more famous than all the other authors in the world - so what?' And I would find absolutely no reply."

- Leo Tolstoy

"Confessions," November 1879

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Foreign Radio Without Interference Allowed in USSR

1/89

BONN, West Germany (FR) - Soviet officials in Moscow are now allowing foreign radio programming to enter the homes of the people in the USSR without interference, according to a recent report by the Associated Press. Radio Liberty officials are rejoicing and adjusting their programming for newly-cleared airwaves after the end of 35 years of Kremlin-ordered broadcast jamming.

"This is a great challenge for us," said S. Enders Wimbush, director of the U.S.-owned network based in Munich which broadcasts news and commentary from the West. "It's caused tremendous excitement around here, because they (radio employees) see an opportunity they've long waited for."

News of the policy change was broadcast to listeners in the Soviet Union. "This was very much in our news. We gave it good play," said Robert Redlich, spokesman for Radio Liberty and its sister station Radio Free Europe (RFE), which beams its signal to Eastern European countries.

President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's policy of "glasnost," or openness, seems to be responsible for the end of Soviet jamming of Radio Liberty airwaves. The Soviets ceased jamming of the U.S. operated Voice of America service more than a year ago, and some East European countries stopped blocking Radio Free Europe broadcasts. However, Czechoslovakia and Bulgaria continue to interrupt RFE service.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Communist Youth Drop in Membership

1/89

AMSTERDAM, Holland (NNI) - The Soviet Union's official communist youth movement, Komsomol, reported a loss of two million members in the first eight months of 1988, registering the highest percentage of attrition in a three-year downward trend.

According to a report in the organizational newspaper, Komsomolskaya Pravda, the youth organization has been unable to tackle the problems and issues young people are confronted with "on the street" and they are turning instead to religious institutions as well as drugs, street gangs and neo-Nazi groups.

In 1985, Komsomol reported a membership of 42 million young people between the ages of 14 and 27. In 1986, 1.5 million members left the organization and in 1987 Komsomol lost an additional membership of 2.5 million. Soviet experts attribute the current trend to a lack of interest in ideological platforms espoused by Komsomol, which the youth say they no longer believe in anyway.

Though forbidden to conduct youth work, Soviet churches report a measurable increase in church attendance by young people, many of whom are former Komsomol members disillusioned with communism.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Landmark Year for Bible Deliveries to USSR

1/89

AMSTERDAM, Holland (NNI) - Since Christianity was first introduced to the Ukrainian people one thousand years ago, never have so many Bibles and New Testaments entered the Soviet Union as a whole as they have in 1988. Although the Bible is still not freely available in Soviet bookstores, there has been a marked change in attitudes toward Bible distribution both within the communist leadership and the Russian Orthodox hierarchy.

According to estimates by Soviet scholars the changes in import and postal regulations passed in 1988, which have allowed for the import of mail, could realistically bring an end to the severe Bible shortages reported by Baptists and Evangelical Christians.

If both these groups continue to receive Bibles and New Testaments at the 1988 rate of several hundred thousand copies per year, it is estimated that within five years every adult Baptist and Evangelical Christian believer could feasibly have his or her own copy of the Bible.

No less meaningful is the historical aspect of the Russian Orthodox Church's millennial year. Not only did Russian Orthodox believers celebrate one thousand years of Christianity in 1988, but in this year the church printed or imported more Bibles than it has in any other twelve-month period. Government authorities granted permission to print 100,000 Bibles, import 150,000 copies of the Lopukhin Bible from Scandinavian donors, and to import a gift of one million New Testaments from a group of Western Christians headed up by Brother Andrew, president of the Dutch ministry Open Doors.

Another important development in 1988 was the significant drop in the number of known Christian prisoners, from 166 at the end of 1987 to 70 in December of 1988. Even more outstanding was the fact that the Union of Unregistered Baptists, for years the target of harsh religious persecution, reported that in December 1988 only eight members still remained in prison - down from 55 in 1987.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

USSR to make Christian Coin

1/89

MOSCOW, USSR (EP) - In yet another display of "glasnost," or "openness," the Soviet Union will begin distribution of a gold coin commemorating the millennium since Christianity reached Russia and became the religion of the state.

The commemorative coin is "physical evidence" of glasnost, said Luis Vigdor, executive vice president of MTB Banking Corporation, a New York dealer that will serve as the coin's only U.S. distributor. "It's bizarre for the Soviets to come out with a coin celebrating religion," he told the Wall Street Journal.

The one-ounce coin depicts Vladimir I, who introduced Christianity in Rus in 988, holding a large cross. The coin will be issued in various metals, including palladium, gold, silver, and platinum. The palladium issue will cost about $220. The gold coins will not be available in the U.S. because imports of Russian gold coins, along with the South African krugrand, were banned by the U.S. in 1985.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

"Seven Years of Prayer" the Key to Opening up the Soviet Union

4/89

Recent changes within the Soviet Union have surprised most political observers, but those who have had close contact with Christians inside the nation say the elections and new emphasis on a free market, along with increasing religious freedom, are not surprising. "What happens now in the Soviet Union is not the result of politics or a leader," said Brother Hamm, a well-known Russian evangelist. "Such great changes in such a short time are absolutely the result of many, many prayers of Christians worldwide."

In 1984, Open Doors Ministries launched "Seven Years of Prayer for the Soviet Union," with teams committed to praying around-the-clock. "We had people from our regional offices from all over the world praying daily for the Soviet Union," said Chris Woehr, news editor for News Network International (NNI), which is affiliated with Open Doors. According to officials with NNI's Holland office, over 1000 are participating in the international prayer link.

When the "Seven Years of Prayer" began, its emphasis was on asking God to open up the Soviet Union to Christianity. Soon after, the term glasnost, which means "openness," began to surface in international news whenever reports were released from the USSR.

"We haven't been surprised at the changes behind the Iron Curtain because of our prayer," Woehr added. In February 1984, Open Doors published a list of 307 Christians imprisoned for their faith in the USSR. Since the publication of that list, the number has been reduced to 21. Vladimir Poresk, who was one of the first prayer targets, was released in 1986. In 1987 a prayer campaign was launched for the release of Alexander Ogorodnikov, and he was freed later that year.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Free Elections in Soviet Union

4/89

A flicker of reform coursed through the Soviet Union in late March during its first popular election since the Bolshevik Revolution, sweeping in a new era in the history of democracy. Twenty percent of the Communist Party's top leadership was defeated in the election, and Soviet officials had to face the embarrassing reality that the Party's choice isn't necessarily the people's choice. This was especially demonstrated by the humiliating downfall of those officials running in unopposed races; they had been defeated by "cross-out" campaigns conducted by their constituency.

After the change of the old guard, Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev told a group of editors that the Soviet people had chosen the candidates they felt were the strongest supporters of radical reform. Gorbachev told the gathering that the elections provided the first lessons of democracy, and that "the days when Soviet leaders were elected by no one and responsible to no one" were over, according to Vitaly Korotich, editor of the liberal weekly magazine Ogonyok.

"He made no direct mention of any single candidate or race," Korotich told the Washington Post. "He said that we needed democracy, and that pluralism gives people the possibility to go their own way. The people supported candidates who wanted to do something and work for change." Gorbachev told Korotich that "when we dreamed about building a democratic society, it meant that there would be winners and losers in elections - that is natural - but that when it was over we all have to work together."

Gorbachev responded to the defeat of some of his key party officials by saying, "The party will have to draw the necessary conclusions." He added that he may purge more conservative officials from the party's senior ranks because they have "lost the people's faith." Yuri Solovyov, first secretary of the Leningrad regional party committee and a candidate for the ruling Politburo, was the most surprising defeat. He ran in an unopposed contest in his home district. However, he failed to win a majority of the votes cast because 60 percent of the voters crossed his name off their ballots.

Popular Discontent

Many regional first secretaries, who are powerful political barons in the party structure, were also defeated in grass-roots campaigns which mobilized long-simmering popular discontent into an unprecedented protest vote. The Soviet people defied the party machine and broke decades of enforced discipline. The party's power wasn't seriously at stake; however, several senior party leaders who won elections found their authority had diminished significantly because of heavy votes against them.

In one case, an army general, Boris Snetkov, commander of Soviet forces in East Germany, was defeated by a young upstart lieutenant colonel who campaigned for abolishing the draft and radical reform of the armed services. In the Baltic Republics, voters were confident that the seats would go to candidates who are demanding greater autonomy from Moscow, and in some cases, outright secession from the Soviet Union.

"We had no idea of the depth of the popular discontent," a senior Soviet journalist told the Los Angeles Times. "There is real anger among the people, and it is focused on the party and precisely on the party's leaders." Poet Yevgeny Yevtushenko said the elections were comparable to Neil Armstrong's moon landing nearly 20 years ago: "One little step for democracy," said Yevtushenko, "one giant step for the Soviet people."

Combined with the defeat of at least 37 key Communist party and government leaders was the comeback of deposed party chief Boris Yeltsin, who was campaigning against a candidate backed by the Moscow party machine, Yegor Ligachev. Ligachev had fallen out of Gorbachev's favor after engineering the publication of a neo-Stalinist counter-reform manifesto, and giving a speech on foreign policy that reflected the ideas of disgraced former general secretary Leonid Brezhnev.

Yeltsin defeated Ligachev after campaigning on unorthodox ideas such as eradication of certain party privileges and greater political pluralism. When appointed as deputy minister in 1985, Yeltsin told Time, "About a day later, somebody turns up offering me privileged access and other products. I didn't let him take more than two steps inside my office. I said to him, 'You're not to blame. I understand why you were sent to me, but I have principles. I am against such things. Don't ever come here again.'"

Yeltsin was appointed by Mikhail Gorbachev to the Soviet Politburo in December 1985. His first task was to clean up the corrupt Moscow Party Committee where he fired hundreds of bureaucrats and criticized the city for its food shortages and incompetence. He was ousted in November, 1987, after a bitter public debate with Yegor Ligachev, his opponent. His political comeback and campaign is the first ever in modern Soviet history.

"My candidacy was proposed by several hundred organizations in 50 different constituencies around the Soviet Union," said Yeltsin. However, Yeltsin focused his campaign on the Moscow voting bloc. Considered an unacceptable candidate in 1987 by this bloc, his comeback signalled the influence of Gorbachev's ideas of glasnost on the Moscow populace. Yeltsin said he agreed with Gorbachev's ideas, but on matters of "political tactics" differed "slightly from the official leadership."

Voters reportedly selected candidates who called for more radical change over those content with the current pace. The candidates were not only hand-picked Communist Party functionaries, workers, and directors, but also writers, market-oriented economists, a dissident historian, Baltic nationalists, and representatives of several unofficial political movements. When asked how she voted, one woman told a Soviet television crew, "Against what we have now."

The Beginnings of Democratic Representation?

Voters were electing representatives to Gorbachev's newly-formed Congress of Peoples Deputies, which replaced a legislature wholly subservient to the Communist Party. The Congress of People's Deputies will elect an upper chamber, named the Supreme Soviet, similar to its former rubber-stamp parliament; however, it is meant to function as a real legislature with a session for up to eight months a year. The Supreme Soviet will be responsible for initiating, debating, and passing national laws.

Although the new congress and the standing legislature is still subservient to the Communist Party on major policy decisions, voters elected independent-minded deputies who will make open discussion of ideas very likely. However, all of the winning independent candidates who were not recommended by the Communist Party apparatus - in most cases - are party members who avow unswerving loyalty to Gorbachev.

While voters showed clear dissatisfaction with party functionaries by not re-electing them, those who lost elections did not lose their jobs. They simply were not elected to the national congress of deputies, from which members of the Supreme Soviet will be elected. Additionally, 750 of the most favored officials, including Gorbachev, were appointed earlier in the new legislature. The elections were for the remaining 1,500 seats.

This election was the first nationwide competitive election since 1917 when Lenin's Bolshevik party was ousted by the Socialist revolutionaries. Lenin ousted the rival party from the government the following July, and began the one-party state that exists to this day. The historic election of 1989 was considered a success by Gorbachev. Last summer he warned a special party conference that "the party's authority will be put to a serious test" by the elections envisioned in his reforms, and declared that the party leaders had to be made "more effectively answerable to the working people" if the country's strategy of political, economic, and social changes were to succeed.

Voters sent a mandate of hearty approval for Gorbachev's policies as well as speedy implementation. Their selection of independent-minded candidates who campaigned on issues such as housing and consumer goods shortages, as well as party privileges and the high level of military spending, showed that voters were more concerned with internal domestic affairs rather than world hegemony.

With a newly formed Congress of People's Deputies in place and a mandate to speedily implement Gorbachev's proposed reforms, their first major task is to tackle the economic crisis that has beleaguered the nation despite feeble attempts to implement perestroika in the marketplace. Although Kremlin officials agree there is a need for change, Soviet sources told Newsweek that there has been serious infighting over the questions of how far and how fast.

Are Soviet Reforms Genuine?

Some of Gorbachev's key reforms were watered down prior to the elections. His proposal to remove government control of prices was postponed, although both Soviet and Western economists agree that decontrol of pricing is the central element in perestroika. Centralized decision-making is still intact with factory managers who have to submit annual plans for approval. They must abide by the approved plans despite changes in conditions.

And although Gorbachev has acknowledged the failure of Stalin's collectivization and wants to encourage more private farming, his reform is less than a half-way measure. The state continues to control most arable land and ideology prevents a full return to private farming.

Soviet economists say the country is running a budget deficit of 100 billion rubles a year ($150 billion at the official rate of exchange and nearly triple the amount that the Soviet government admitted to only a few months ago.) Western economists such as Judy Shelton of the the Hoover Institution estimate that the deficit may be as high as $250 billion.

Although some of Gorbachev's Kremlin critics say they want to see the economy improve and have admitted that the old Stalinist, centrally-planned system doesn't work, they believe Gorbachev's reforms have "gone too far for their taste" because of non-economic changes such as glasnost (openness) and partial democratization of the political process."

In his post-election observation, Gorbachev noted the main moving force in perestroika is the Soviet man, and that "today we can register the fact that Soviet man has spoken up - the voters intense activity has shown that. And even if everyone is not pleased by the outcome of the elections - well, there is nothing that can be done about it. The master of the country has spoken."

As one editor observed, "(T)he military and the Communist Party apparatus have been the true masters of the country since the 1917 Bolshevik revolution. There is no point in speculating on the future of Soviet policy under a more democratic (by Soviet standards) regime until we can be sure the old masters of the Kremlin are willing to relinquish power to Gorbachev's 'new masters' - the people."

Soviet voters have demonstrated their commitment to democracy and their desire for change; now it is time for the machinery of the Communist party to be replaced. The response of the newly elected Congress of People's Deputies and Supreme Soviet to the need for economic reform within the next few months will show whether the election was a genuine effort to democratize or a ploy to placate the disgruntled masses.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Russian Radio

4/89

LA MIRADA, CA (EP) - Glasnost in the Soviet Union is opening doors for Soviets to respond by letter to Christian radio broadcasts from the U.S., according to two U.S.-based evangelical Christian broadcasting organizations.

The Far East Broadcasting Company, an international missionary radio organization which airs broadcasts in 100 languages around the world, reports a tremendous increase in responsive mail from the Soviet Union. "Where before we would receive only a handful of letters from Russia in a year, we received over 800 in November [1988] and 1,000 in December [1988]," said FEBC's Russian programming director, Jack Koziol.

A second Christian radio organization reported the same sudden influx of Soviet mail. "Last September we started seeing a significant increase in mail from the Soviet Union," said Wally Kulakoff of HCJB, an evangelical Christian broadcasting organization which airs programs around the world in 14 different languages via shortwave radio.

Kulakoff, Russian language service director for HCJB (Heralding Christ Jesus Blessings), said that before glasnost, the organization was receiving about 30 or 40 letters a month from listeners in Russia. But since last September, that number increased by 300 to 500 percent. In January, 1989, HCJB received 244 letters, compared to 20 in January, 1988. "One listener said he wrote us 80 times, but only three letters made it through to HCJB," Kulakoff said, who added that there are Soviet pastors who have written that they have no Bibles.

Both groups said the greatest need for Russian listeners is Bibles. "Never before has there been this freedom to not only request a Bible, but to actually receive one by mail from the West," said Koziol.

The Soviet policy of glasnost has meant an end to jamming of foreign broadcasts, and Soviet citizens, who own an estimated 60 million shortwave radios, can tune in to Christian radio programs more easily. Kulakoff said that he knows of an estimated 39,700 "radio churches" in the Soviet Union. "These are churches where people gather in homes to fellowship and listen to Christian broadcasts - the radio is their preacher!"

Both radio broadcasting organizations also expressed a concern that glasnost may not last long. "It is for this reason that we are sending Bibles as fast as we can," Koziol added. "We just don't know how long this opportunity will last, so we are trying to fill these requests quickly." Even if glasnost disappears, Bibles that have reached the Soviet Union will remain, HCJB pointed out.

"There is an Iron Curtain," said Donn Ziebell, executive vice-president of Slavic Gospel Association.

"But there is no iron roof, and shortwave radio will always make it through."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(51514032c8ca341817228f39f1307b05_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(c444627dab9fee9a1550c053ffaaaae2_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Christian Students To Study in U.S.S.R.

5/89

KIEV, U.S.S.R. (EP) - In what is apparently the first arrangement of its kind, two universities in the Soviet Union have agreed to allow Christian students with InterVarsity Christian Fellowship to visit and enroll for the 1989 summer term. Kiev State University and Kiev State Pedagogical Institute will each host a group of 20 InterVarsity students in July.

"This is the first time a Soviet University has entered into an exchange agreement with a Christian organization," said Dan Harrison, who recently returned from Kiev where he made the final arrangements for the trip. The U.S. students will be matched up with English-speaking Soviet students who will stay with them in university dormitories, share meals together, take classes together, and participate in cultural events together.

The purpose of the trip is to "promote good relationships between Soviet and American young people" according to Harrison, and to act upon the Helsinki Accord and the Soviet/U.S. summit agreement in Geneva regarding cultural exchanges.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Christian Book Popular in USSR

5/89

A novel with strong Christian overtones is causing quite a stir in the Soviet Union, partly because Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev is the controversial author's biggest fan.

Chingiz Aitmatov, a native of the Soviet Asian republic of Kirghizia, is one of the USSR's best-known writers, and Gorbachev says he has read nearly every word the author has penned. His most recent novel, The Place of the Skull (published in English in the U.S. in April of this year), is a searing attack on drugs, the destruction of wildlife, and the stupidity of Communist Party officials in the countryside. The numerous criticisms of communist dogma throughout the book would have surely been censored prior to Gorbachev's glasnost policies.

In the novel, the main character Avdiy Kalistratov infiltrates a gang of marijuana smugglers and attempts to convert them to God. But he is later enlisted to work for local authorities on the steppes of Kazakstahn and is brutalized by the savagely cruel Ober Kandalov - who bears striking resemblance to Joseph Stalin. When Avdiy attempts to speak to his comrades about God, he is crucified on a saxaul tree.

Prior to his torture, Avdiy has a dream about the confrontation between Pilate and Jesus Christ on the terrace of Herod's Palace. In a fanciful retelling of the encounter, Jesus explains to Pilate that all men - including Caesar - are accountable to God. The narrative makes powerful assertions about the limits of political power which are quite revolutionary for Soviet audiences. In the following brief excerpt, Jesus questions Rome's authority and Pilate becomes indignant:

"There is nothing higher than the power of Rome. I hope that is what you meant to say?"

"That is what you think, Governor."

"That is what clever men have always thought," Pilate corrected him condescendingly. "That is why they say that Caesar is not a god, but God is like Caesar. Convince me that is not so, if you are so sure of yourself. Are you sure that Caesar is less than God?"

"He is mortal"

"Obviously. But while he is alive and well, is there God above Caesar for men?"

"There is, Roman Governor, if you choose another dimension of being."

"Enough!" cried the Procurator. "We're wasting time."

When the literary monthly Novy Mir published The Place of the Skull in two installments in 1986, the magazine's print run of 427,000 sold out immediately, and millions of copies of the book have been sold in the Soviet Union. It is safe to suggest that the Soviet people are drawing their own conclusions from the novel about the limitations of their own government's controls over their lives and freedoms.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Wall Street Journal Says Gorbachev May Be A Christian

6/89

NEW YORK CITY, NY (FR) - An intriguing report in the Wall Street Journal (April 28, 1989) has raised serious questions about the religious beliefs of Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, and has top-level government leaders throughout the world wondering if the Communist Party chief is actually a Christian.

"The Russian Reformation," an article by Mark Helprin, states that President Reagan's press secretary, Larry Speakes, recorded in his memoirs that Mr. Gorbachev confided in Reagan while they talked at the Geneva Summit in 1985 - saying that he was a Christian. Helprin says that evidence has now accumulated to verify this claim.

Reagan's pre-summit intelligence research indicated that Gorbachev was indeed a baptized Christian, and that his mother Maria goes to church. "Maria Panteleyvna does not merely attend services," the article stated. "She is devout. Her son, baptized during Stalin's terror, worshipped at a time when doing so was an elemental commitment and an act of courage. In what may have been a prophetic metaphor, his paternal grandparents hid religious icons behind portraits of Lenin and Stalin. Today, when President Gorbachev visits his mother each year on his birthday, she serves an Easter cake decorated with the initials for 'Christ Is Risen.' "

Because the Communist Party in the USSR has a long record of disinformation tactics, and with regard for Mr. Gorbachev's political survival, President Reagan did not report his findings to the American people.

Although Gorbachev could never have advanced in the Communist Party leadership without taking some direct actions against the church and religious practices, Helprin noted that the Soviet leader has made numerous positive references to Christianity in recent years. He told Time magazine in 1985, "Surely, God on high has not refused to give us enough wisdom to find ways to bring us an improvement in our relations." He also stated to Newsweek, "Jesus Christ alone knew answers to all questions and knew how to feed twenty thousand Jews with five loaves of bread" - and added that things may work out politically "if the Politburo and God are well disposed toward me."

After remarks commencing his first American visit, he turned to Secretary of State George Schultz and said, "The visit has begun. So let us hope. May God help us."

After the devastating earthquake which rocked Soviet Armenia in the fall of 1988, Gorbachev shocked onlookers as he made a forthright statement about his political opponents: "They're striving for power. They should be stopped, by using all the power at our command - political and administrative. Let God judge them. It's not for them to decide the destiny of this land."

Is all this talk of God just a public relations measure rigged by the Kremlin? Helprin proposes that it is not. "Were this language merely for export it might unambiguously be a ruse," the article stated, "but (Gorbachev) also speaks it at home. Alert Muscovites have commented that he frequently invokes the name of God, he has recommended that Soviet youth go 'back to church,' and the men of the cloth whom he brought on his first visit to the U.S. may have been more than just hostages, for religion in the USSR appears truly to be benefitting from glasnost." At the Jubilee Mass in Kiev last June, as thousands of Russians crowded the streets to celebrate the Millennium of Christianity in their country, the message was shouted out, "God has given us Gorbachev, but Satan wants to kill him."

Helprin says that if Gorbachev truly is a believing Christian, "the implications are stunning. ... For if he believes in an omnipotent presence above all, he is probably not as enthusiastic as his predecessors about the 'perfectibility of man,' social engineering, or the precedence of governments over the rights of the individual."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Fast-Paced Changes in USSR

6/89

MOSCOW, Soviet Union (NIRR) - "Changes in the religious situation in the Soviet Union are occurring so fast it is difficult to keep abreast," say reporters for the National and International Religion Report (April 24, 1989). The Council of Religious Affairs (CRA) repealed a series of repressive decrees introduced during an anti-religion campaign of the early 1960s, as reported in a recent edition of Moscow News. The measures, many unpublished to this day, prohibited such things as bell ringing, charitable social work by believers, and all other activity other than that specifically "aimed at satisfying the religious needs of believers."

Under Soviet president Mikhail Gorbachev, reformists have been appointed to head the CRA, and churches have been granted much greater freedom in anticipation of a broad new law of conscience that will "legalize" the new freedoms. No longer restricted to their own premises, Soviet leaders report that churches are conducting rallies in stadiums and public halls. A growing number of believers are carrying out ministry in hospitals and among the elderly. Many churches are establishing the equivalent of Sunday Schools for children.

The Illinois-based Slavic Gospel Association is sending tons of paper for the printing of lesson materials. And in a recent communication seminar for Baptist leaders in Kiev, SGA representatives from the U.S. helped them launch a newspaper. SGA leader Peter Deynaka, Jr., says he found revival-like conditions in some parts of the Soviet Union, with spiritually hungry non-believers crowding into churches. Other visiting church leaders from the West have issued similar reports.

Moscow News also reported that 1610 new congregations were registered last year, compared with 104 in 1987. These include 1244 Russian Orthodox, 72 Georgian Orthodox, 71 Roman Catholic, and 36 Baptist churches, along with 48 Islamic mosques.

An astonishingly candid commentary published by the paper said that in the past the guarantee of religious freedom in the Soviet constitution had been designed mostly for "foreign consumption," and the CRA decrees had sharply limited the practice of religion. "We are openly recognizing our mistakes, but we have to go further," the commentary said. The editorial went on to push for the adoption of the proposed new law of conscience.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Soviet Book on Child-Rearing

6/89

A new evangelistic tool is making its way into the hands of Soviet families. A book on child rearing, written by a psychiatrist from an explicitly Christian perspective, has been purchased by Soviet authorities for distribution in Russian health centers.

Author Ross Campbell said he is "pleased but perplexed" by the Soviet government's decision to buy and distribute the books without any censorship.

"It doesn't make rational sense," he said recently, adding that the Soviets "could have plagiarized it if they wanted to, rewritten it, published it in the government's name."

The book, titled How To Really Love Your Child, was first published in 1977 by Tyndale House. It has since been issued in thousands of editions in 30 languages and was one of only a few hundred books from the Western world at a Moscow book fair where it was seen and purchased.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

The Coming Transformation of the USSR

By Jay Rogers
9/89

"The Soviet Union is opening up wider and wider to the gospel. Now is the time for Christians in America to take full advantage of the situation."

This description of the current spiritual state of the Soviet Union comes from George Brown,* an American missionary, who has been travelling inside the Iron Curtain for several years. Brown believes that the Soviet Union is on the verge of an awakening of unprecedented proportions akin to the Great Welsh Revival at the turn of this century.

The underground Christian church in Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania and the Ukraine is presently experiencing great revival. Soviet states such as Georgia and Armenia are currently in a state of social upheaval. This scenario could ultimately lead to the establishment of freer Soviet states and possibly the emergence of independent, democratic European countries separate from the control of the Kremlin.

"Gorbachev is an intelligent man," says Brown. "It is likely that he sees that the communist system will inevitably fail and is in favor of dismantling it while remaining the power broker."

Brown sees three possible scenarios for the Soviet Union in the next 10 years. The first two are possible outcomes but they are unlikely to happen. According to Brown, "The third one is the most likely to occur by the year 2000."

The first possibility is that Soviet leadership could fall back into the hands of a conservative communist like Andropov or Brezhnev. Brown says this is unlikely and most political analysts agree that Gorbachev's popularity is so immense that he will probably remain in power for many years.

The second possibility is that Gorbachev's reforms will work and that the concept of infusing new life into the old system will be successful. This is Gorbachev's hope - that somehow capitalism can revive the communist economy of the Soviet Union - but Brown disagrees. "It is obvious that perestroika has failed. The word means reconstruction - you can't revitalize something that is dead."

The third possibility is a total failure of the communist system and a breakup of the Soviet state into separate self-governing nations. The Ukraine, with a population of almost 50 million people, would be the largest nation in Europe if it is restored to self-rulership. Brown believes that this is likely to happen within the next 10 years. Gorbachev, he says, could emerge as a benevolent dictator over the remaining state of Russia and the Siberian states.

Presently, public demonstrations for freedom in the Baltic states, Soviet Georgia, and Armenia are common occurrences. Worker apathy coupled with natural disasters have made the retention of these satellites economically unprofitable. Brown believes that the policy of glasnost may be Gorbachev's way of speeding up a process which he sees as coming to an inevitable conclusion. In the meantime, the new openness has paved the way for mass evangelism by American missionaries.

Caught Off Guard

"The situation in the Soviet Union is a lot like what happened when Peter was in jail in the Book of Acts in the New Testament. The other disciples had been praying for Peter to be released. However, when this finally happened they couldn't believe that God had answered their prayers. In the same way, Christians in the United States have been praying for 70 years for freedom to preach the gospel in the Soviet Union. Now that it is happening we are being caught off guard."

Brown stresses that it is important for the Church in America not to miss a golden opportunity. "We have an open door and yet few people are aware of it. American Christians are so used to thinking of the Soviet Union as an evil power that is going to invade Israel, that most do not believe a total turn around is possible. Instead of reading the latest prophecy book about Gorbachev being in league with the antichrist and wondering what that birthmark on his forehead really means, we should be mobilizing to invade the Soviet Union with the gospel."

The defeatist attitude that characterizes many Christians' predictions about the outcome of the communist world can be attributed to dispensationalism, an idea that has dominated Western theology for the past 150 years. Brown cautions Christians against being apathetic about the possibilities for the Soviet Union. "There are some terrific things happening among the so-called 'underground' churches. I can tell you from experience that many of these churches no longer like to term themselves 'underground' and now are beginning to become openly evangelistic."

In the past, it was illegal to preach in the open. Pentecostal churches as well as all Protestant denominations always maintained a fervor for evangelizing the Soviet people. This had to be done secretly, however. An open display of this activity led to many arrests of Soviet Christians. According to Brown, Protestant denominations that are the most liberal in the United States are evangelical behind the Iron Curtain.

When asked about the genuineness of the experience of most professing believers, Brown said that without a strong commitment it was unlikely that someone could remain a Protestant believer for very long in this type of setting. All of these churches stress the importance of a salvation experience and a living relationship with God.

"It takes a real commitment to maintain this type of fervor. Most professing Christians in the Soviet Union have a genuine relationship with Jesus Christ. There are some who have fossilized in ritual and tradition, who have let superstition keep them from a true relationship, but even among this group there is a small percentage of believers who love Jesus with their whole heart."

For many years, George Brown has been travelling into the Soviet Union to preach the gospel. In the past he was able to enter either as a performer or music instructor. He was always able to present a strong Christian witness under this covering, but had no exciting stories to tell about narrow escapes from the KGB or meeting with strong opposition. He attributed his success to using extreme caution and wisdom in dealing with each situation. In the past, he was able to help Soviet Christians emigrate from their country but usually encouraged people to remain in their nation where they were most needed to preach the gospel.

Open Evangelism in a "Closed" Country

Brown had worked for many years with the Soviet underground churches as a pastor or evangelist, but more recently under Gorbachev's reforms the nation has been allowing Bibles, tracts and Christian literature to come into the country. Missionary activity is still restricted, but Brown says that many Christians are able to enter the country as touring artists or musicians. In this setting, Brown has been able to openly preach the gospel for the first time.

This year he was invited to take part in a jazz festival which featured mostly Soviet performers in the streets of some eastern cities. "I sang mostly gospel songs set to slow blues arrangements. Before I performed, one of the festival managers told me that once I was on stage, I could preach or say anything I wanted. At one point, I talked to the people and told them about the love of Jesus. I said, 'I know that most of you are not used to the style I am about to perform in, but I know that you will appreciate it because the Soviet people appreciate truth and honesty.'" Brown then sang worship songs for the crowd.

Realizing that Brown was taking greater liberties under the new system of glasnost than had ever previously been allowed, a huge crowd gathered and the people were fascinated by what he had to say. The promoters of the festival were greatly pleased with this response and he was later interviewed for a documentary and a Soviet radio program. In both of these interviews, he was able to openly share the message of the love of Jesus for the Soviet people.

The people viewed him with curiosity, asking, "You are an American, you have no relatives in the Soviet Union, you are not Russian in nationality, why do you love the Soviet people?" Many people told him that they could tell by the depth of emotion in his singing and preaching that his feelings were genuine. This gave George Brown further opportunities to share the good news of Jesus' love for the people.

This summer Brown toured the Soviet Union again and was optimistic about future possibilities for his ministry. "My dream is to form a worship symposium that could be taught at one of the universities."

Brown is hopeful about the future of Christianity in the Soviet Union but warned Americans against fatalistic thinking. "I would like to admonish Christians in this country to begin thinking more positively about the Soviet Union. I see a new breed of Christians coming out of the reconstructionist movement. These Christians could have a great impact on the Soviet Union."

"It is ironic, but most Soviet citizens think democracy is something that the government gives you." Brown spoke of the Soviet people as having no knowledge of the work ethic or of any of the Christian principles that are foundational to democratic government. It is possible that Gorbachev's reforms could continue without Christian influence. This would inevitably lead to a secular state - a freer life for the people - but with a government based on the ideals of Western humanism.

Brown emphasized that American Christians should be taking bold initiatives, but dispensationalist thinking has gained such a stronghold in American churches that most are unprepared to do anything. "There should be a greater emphasis on victory," Brown said. "I believe that Jesus is concerned with seeing an expression of His glory in the Soviet Union before He returns."

The Soviet Union is now open to the gospel. Brown's many years of experience behind the Iron Curtain presents America with a challenge to respond.

* This American missionary's true identity has been withheld in this article.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Soviet Atheism is Facing a Crisis

10/89

WHEATON, Illinois (EP) - Perestroika and glasnost are not Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's doing, a Russian church leader told delegates at an international conference recently. The reforms that have come to the Soviet Union are the work of God, he said.

"This is God's timing for our country," said the Rev. Yakov Kuzmic Dukhochenko, of the Ukrainian Baptist Church.

Dukhochenko addressed the participants of the Slavic Gospel Association's international conference in Wheaton, Illinois, stressing that atheism in the Soviet Union is going through a crisis, he said, and the church in the Soviet Union needs help from the West to meet the resulting crisis of spiritual hunger. "It is our vision that we want to do as much as we can today, so that if the door closes, we will have accomplished something."

Scientific atheism in the Soviet Union is in a time of confusion, Dukhochenko said, and atheists are in disagreement over what teaching materials should be published. As a result, the required scientific atheism course that was previously required in all universities will no longer be offered. Instead, an elective introduction to religion courses will include lessons on both atheism and Christianity. Dukhochenko also pointed out that a course on the Bible is already being offered at the University of Kiev by an Orthodox priest.

Courses taught in elementary and high school level classes have yet to be revised, said another Ukrainian pastor, Rev. Komendant. Both Komendant and Dukhochenko appealed for Christians in the West to continue to send Bibles and Christian books to the Soviet church. "Our problem is no longer how to get the literature into the country," Komendant said, "It is how to get all of the literature that we need and how to get it into the country at a faster pace. We need at least two million more Bibles for the Ukraine alone."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Ukraine Launches Autonomy Movement

By Jay Rogers
10/89

KIEV, U.S.S.R. (FR) - According to a recent Washington Post report, the Soviet state of the Ukraine has launched an autonomy movement similar to the growing nationalist political parties of the Baltic states.

Like Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia, Ukrainian activists called for greater autonomy at the First Congress of the Ukrainian Popular Movement for Perestroika. The Ukrainian Communist Party, which has traditionally held a tight grip on the Ukraine, allowed the congress to proceed on September 8th, 1989.

1,105 delegates called for greater freedom for the Ukraine calling for the Soviet Union to be transformed into a confederation of sovereign republics. Dimitro Pavlychko, one of the leaders of the movement reviewed their goals: "We don't want to leave the Soviet Union. We want an independent Ukraine within a totally free union of independent republics."

Although they did not endorse complete independence from the Soviet Union, the Ukrainian movement has alarmed Kremlin conservatives who view any hint of secession of the Ukraine as a potential disaster for the Soviet Union. The Ukraine is more vital to the welfare of the Soviet economy than the Baltic states since it contains 50 million people and a well developed industry. The loss of the Ukraine would mean the entire unravelling of the Soviet Union.

The delegates at the congress gave standing ovations to emissaries from other independent political parties in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe. One of the guests at the congress was Polish Solidarity senior adviser Adam Michnik, who told the delegates "totalitarian communism is crumbling" all over the region.

As in the Baltic states of Lithuania and Latvia, the independence movement has been dominated by members of the Catholic Church. As evidence of the Kremlin's awareness of the growing resurgence of various Christian churches in the independence movements, Mikhail Gorbachev has written to Pope John Paul II to arrange a historic meeting which could take place during the Soviet leaders visit to Italy on November 25.

According to an anonymous Vatican official, chief topics for discussion between Gorbachev and the pope would be the Baltic states of Lithuania and Latvia, and the status of the Ukrainian Catholic Church. This meeting's historical significance could be the result of gaining of greater freedom for all Christians in the Soviet Union.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(dd161862f9164df98f62b726e9846241_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(758ebdf4629c903da74c2e079717ae32_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Latin American Evangelist Luis Palau Preaches in Soviet Union

11/89

RIGA, Latvia (EP) - Evangelist Luis Palau told several thousand Soviet citizens in the Latvian capital of Riga that "all over the world we praise God for you, for what God is doing in your land and for the great enthusiasm there is here for the Lord." Latvia is a republic of the Soviet Union, and is located on the Baltic Sea.

Palau has been in the Soviet Union since September 8 holding a public crusade sponsored by the Russian Orthodox Church and other churches. Soviet officials said that his meetings are the first such meetings there since the 1917 revolution.

"I look forward to lifting up the name of Jesus Christ here," said the Latin American born evangelist. Palau spoke to an audience of 7,000 on September 10 at a large concert hall where he extended a public invitation to receive Jesus Christ as Lord. About 1,300 people responded and received free Russian New Testaments.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Soviets Receive Thousands of Christian Books at Moscow International Book Fair

11/89

MOSCOW, U.S.S.R. (EP) - Representatives of 30 Christian publishing companies, all of which belong to the Evangelical Christian Publishers Association (ECPA), reported an unprecedented hunger for Bible commentaries, doctrinal and theological books and Bible study aids at the seventh annual Moscow International Book Fair.

Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev gave the opening address to the participants, saying that he hoped the event would "be instrumental in the further development of international book exchange, in upholding intellectual values and asserting the ideals of truth, justice, peace, and progress."

"The Soviet people have a great hunger for spiritual literature," said Peter Deyneka, Jr., president of the Slavic Gospel Association. "I was deeply moved by the spiritual hunger of the people who came to the fair," he said. Soviet people came from as far away as Eastern Siberia and Soviet Asia to obtain Bibles and Christian books.

The Slavic Gospel Association had an exhibit at the fair, where Christian books were available, such as Loving God, The Apostle, The Everlasting Man, and The Magician's Nephew, as well as an anthology of Russian Christian poetry. All of the books, even those just for display were gone within two hours of the start of the fair.

Doug Ross, executive director of the ECPA, said that he brought 10,000 New Testaments with him as a gift for the Soviet people. He said he was surprised at how high the demand was for the Bibles.

Ross expressed surprise at the interest that the media took in the Christian publishers at the fair. "We weren't prepared for the tremendous outpouring of interest from the Soviet press," he said, adding that he was interviewed for Soviet television.

Ross said that this year's Moscow Book Fair was unique among other international book fairs because of the interest in Christian literature. At other fairs, he said, it is primarily a business interaction which takes place, but in Moscow the spiritual hunger of the Soviet people is "phenomenal."

Kent Hill, director of the Washington-based Institute on Religion and Democracy, noted that the commotion caused by the free distribution of 10,000 New Testaments was the most popular event of the fair.

"This created quite a stir very early on during the fair when the ECPA opened to hand out New Testaments, Hill said. "A long line formed and the booth was absolutely jammed with people. It was the largest group of people at any booth for any publisher."

Ironically, a booth manned by Madalyn Murray and her son and daughter, The American Association of Atheists, attracted little interest. "None of the Soviets wanted to talk to her," observed Hill. "They wanted to go to the ECPA booth and get a New Testament."

At the conclusion of the fair, it was announced that ECPA will be developing a strategy for printing in the U.S.S.R. Soviet authorities said that they would not interfere with the activities of Christian publishers and an unprecedented number of contracts were negotiated for the publishing of Christian literature by Soviet publishers.

In recent months there has been a sharp increase in the ability of independent publishers developing their own presses. Foreign publishers also noted a a measurable increase in the ability of presses in the Baltic States to publish Christian literature and cited contracts made with Estonian publishers for the production of literature for children.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

The Downfall of Communism

By Jay Rogers
3/90

"Let the ruling classes tremble at a Communistic revolution. The proletarians have nothing to lose but their chains. They have a world to win. Working men of all countries unite!"

Karl Marx
The Communist Manifesto, 1847

For decades, the Communist Party of the Soviet Union swore that the red tide initiated within its borders would sweep the world covering every nation with the ideals of Marxism. Karl Marx's promise of a communist utopia was embraced by the governments of many nations and his philosophy became one of the prevalent worldviews of the 20th century.

Recently, however, the leaders of the Communist Party bowed to a revolution of a different type. This concession was the result of the reform efforts of Mikhail Gorbachev as the party agreed to end its monopoly on power in the Soviet Union. As the world enters a new decade, Karl Marx's bold statement appears destined for obsolescence.

After a decade of massive social upheaval in countries behind the Iron Curtain, the communist philosophy appears to have become an anachronistic system of a bygone era. The Soviet Union, the nation with the world's largest land mass and the leader of the communist world, has suddenly had its political power base challenged and its economic system shaken to the core.

Following a costly and unsuccessful war with radical Islamic sects in Afganistan, the Soviet government faced greater battles on the home front. A sagging Soviet economy and splintering political factions within the Communist Party forced Soviet leader, Mikhail Gorbachev, to take drastic action in the form of perestroika, a plan to revitalize the Soviet economy by implementing reform.

According to Gorbachev, communism has not been successful in the Soviet Union because there is a need for further reform. Gorbachev's goal is to implement democratic ideals and freedoms in a socialistic structure. In the meantime, Soviet society is in the process of recovery and renewal. Gorbachev firmly believes that an ideal communist society can yet be created in which democratic ideals are cultivated in the hearts of the people. When the Soviet Union is revolutionized through perestroika, he claims, the people will submit willingly to the structure of communism.

"Today our main job is to lift the individual spiritually, respecting his inner world and giving him moral strength. We are seeking to make the whole intellectual potential of society and all the potentialities of culture work to mold a socially active person, spiritually rich, just, and conscientious. An individual must know and feel that his contribution is needed, that his dignity is not being infringed upon, that he is being treated with trust and respect. When an individual sees all this, he is capable of accomplishing much."1

An understanding of history is essential in analyzing the status of the Soviet Union. Gorbachev's pledge to restore the individual spiritually by giving him moral strength becomes tainted when we examine how the current situation came into being.

The Origin of Communism

There is a striking contrast between the teachings of Karl Marx and the teachings of Jesus Christ. A similarity exists between them in their diametrical opposition. The ideal of human equality is fundamental to both Christianity and Marxism. However, Jesus taught that this is achieved only by the direct contact of a relationship with God, while Marxism aims to establish equality by destroying all the higher aspects of the personality. As the following quote reveals, to be a Marxist presupposes a deep hatred of Jesus Christ and His Church:

"The social principles of Christianity have had eighteen centuries in which to develop, and have no need to undergo further development ... The social principles of Christianity are lickspittle, whereas the proletariat is revolutionary. So much for the social principles of Christianity!"2

If there is a defense that can be offered for Marx's bitter and caustic rejection of Christianity, it would be to note that he had personally experienced a weak and anemic church, which was inept in providing the solutions so desperately needed in his generation. The oppression of the working class was indeed a problem in 18th and 19th century Europe. In his homeland of Germany, Marx perceived a growing problem with seemingly no solution.

Marx blamed social injustice on the capitalistic system. In his works, he claimed that all injustice could be resolved with the elimination of the bourgeoisie, the social class which controlled the production of wealth. Marx proposed that a utopian state would naturally result when the ruling class and the lure of capital were eliminated from society.

In stark contrast to this philosophy, the Bible teaches us that it is the love of money, but not money itself, which is the root of all evil. Furthermore, Jesus taught us that the basic root of all human problems lies in an innate selfishness. This flawed nature can never be remedied through an external form of government or system of law, but can only be eradicated through a spiritual identification with Christ's suffering, death on the cross, and His subsequent resurrection. Marxism teaches that the answer to all of humankind's problems is found in a government structure, while Christianity teaches that the answer is found only in Jesus.

Karl Marx was a product of over a century of intellectual skepticism toward the claims of biblical Christianity. He was influenced by a long string of social philosophers, such as Rousseau, Hegel, Nietzsche and Engels, who embraced agnosticism and rejected the role of Jesus Christ as the Savior of the world. Man's only hope, they reasoned, lay in his hidden potential.

Humanism versus Revival Christianity

The origin of the working class revolution can be traced back to the 18th century when the world saw the emergence of two competing methods for the reformation of society: Humanism and Revival Christianity. The scenario which best illustrates the nature and outcome of these two opposite ideals is the social fomentation of England and France during that century. One nation experienced a renewal of Christianity; the other experienced a revolution which plunged them into darkness and a series of bloody wars.

Describing this time period, the English novelist, Charles Dickens, opened The Tale of Two Cities with the following scenario:

"It was the best of times, it was the worst of times, it was the age of wisdom, it was the age of foolishness, it was the epoch of belief, it was the epoch of incredulity, it was the season of light, it was the season of darkness, it was the spring of hope, it was the winter of despair, we had everything before us, we had nothing before us, we were all going direct to heaven, we were all going direct the other way ... "

The personalities of the French author, Voltaire, and the English revivalist, John Wesley best typify the contrast of events in these two 18th century nations.

On one side of the English channel, Voltaire, a vicious atheist, surveyed the deteriorating situation in France with pessimism. As in much of Europe, the poor of France were repressed by the rich nobility. Any hope of Christian reform, in Voltaire's eyes, was scornfully disdained as futile. The only hope for change lay in arbitrary determinism and a violent class struggle. Voltaire's ideas permeated the atmosphere of France as his society collapsed into a violent and bloody revolution in 1789.

But on the other side of the English channel, hope was reborn. Many of the same social maladies that were prevalent in France also plagued England. But one man, John Wesley, saw a promise in a return to the principles of biblical Christianity. Wesley labored for 53 years, preaching the Gospel, aiding the poor, and building orphanages and schools.

Many historians have credited Wesley with single-handedly turning England away from the same fate as France during the Revolution of 1789. Wesley was a demonstration of what one man, empowered by God, can do to transform a society.

Confronted with the miracle of the New Birth, the experience of knowing God which was sweeping England, Voltaire scoffed and echoed the sentiments of the rationalists of his day. "In one hundred years from now," he claimed, "Christianity will be a thing of the past and the only Bibles will be in museums!" Ironically, one hundred years later, Voltaire's home became the site of a Bible publishing house.

19th Century Germany

Karl Marx's homeland, 19th century Germany, resembled the fast deteriorating society of 18th century France. Abuses against the poor included unhealthy working conditions in factories, conspiracies by wealthy capitalists to keep prices high and workers' wages low, and cruel exploitation of child laborers.

The ordeal of the human personality in such a barbarous world produced the thinking of such men as Nietzsche, Hegel, Marx, Engels and Freud. The prevailing philosophies of each of these men were relativism, rationalism and materialism. Each declared in his own way that "God is dead." They represented the logical culmination of mankind's humanistic rebellion against God.

The legacy they left behind - this century's totalitarian communism - has trampled the human personality and all its God given rights underfoot. Their application of socialism and humanistic atheism to life has produced a system which negates the needs of the human personality. They made this error because they disregarded the teaching that gave birth to the very concept of the human personality, namely, Christianity.

Russia's Prophets

Against the fray of atheistic socialism, appeared two of the greatest thinkers Russia has ever produced, Leo Tolstoy and Fyodor Dostoyevsky. Both of these men were committed Christians and the influence of their message has been felt as nothing short of prophetic. Two of the world's most widely acclaimed novelists, still loved and respected in Russia today, had the foresight over one hundred years ago to describe Russia's destiny - a destiny that is even now beginning to unfold in the 1990s.

The personalities and backgrounds of these two novelists were as different as day and night. One was a genteel estate owner, graced with the privileged upbringing of aristocratic Russian society. The other was the son of Russian peasants, who had to struggle to make a mark for himself in the world of literature.

- Leo Tolstoy

Viewed by literary scholars as a deeply contradictory man, Tolstoy's fame rests mainly on two novels, War and Peace and Anna Karenina. Tolstoy lived for many years as an individualistic aristocrat until, in later life, he rejected his career as a writer of fiction to become a radical Christian, who, in a stream of essays, pamphlets, plays and short stories, advocated a life of love and faith in Jesus Christ.

During the time Tolstoy wrote his two most famous novels, he lived an intensely happy existence, marrying a beautiful woman, fathering 13 children, and managing a large estate with much success. Though happily married, world famous as a novelist, and enjoying a large income, Tolstoy experienced a spiritual crisis. In 1879, he wrote:

"In the middle of thinking about the fame that my works were bringing me I would say to myself, 'Very well, you will be more famous than Gogol, Pushkin, Shakespeare, Molière, more famous than all the writers in the world - so what?' And I could find absolutely no reply."3

After his conversion to Christianity, Tolstoy devoted the rest of his life working among the peasants of Czarist Russia. His rejection of property, his disdain of man-made governments and religious institutions, and his advocacy of non-violent resistance as a means of conquering unrighteous social structures have earned him a place in history as one of the greatest reformers of all time.

Contrary to the claims of Marxism, Tolstoy understood that the reformation of society depended, not on class determinism and violent class struggle, but upon the growing moral perfection of each individual which could only be found in a relationship with Jesus Christ, and through obeying His supreme law of love.

- Fyodor Dostoyevsky

The social background of Dostoyevsky, was entirely different from that of Tolstoy. Known for his novels, Crime and Punishment, The Idiot, The Possessed, and The Brothers Karamazov, Dostoyevsky was the son of a financially insecure, middle-class family and had to struggle to establish a reputation as a writer.

As a young man, he became embroiled in the movement for political reform under the repressive rule of Czar Nicholas I. He began to use his writing talents to propagate the ideas of the French utopian Socialists in radical pamphlets. This activity led to his arrest and conviction in 1849. Dostoyevsky was sentenced to be shot, but through the mercy of God, his sentence was mysteriously changed to four years of hard labor in prison in Omsk, Siberia.

During his time in prison, Dostoyevsky was impressed with the pleasant temperament of many "extraordinary people" who lived in chains. The only book allowed in prison was the New Testament, which he read frequently. It taught him a new faith in Jesus Christ which alleviated his suffering and bitterness. Prison life gave Dostoyevsky a new sense of destiny - a life of service to the poor, insulted, injured masses of Russia.

Upon Dostoyevsky's release, he began to gain fame as a writer. Socialist radicals were eager to glorify him as a political prisoner, but Dostoyevsky spurned them and their beliefs - especially their rejection of the promises of Jesus Christ. His sympathies were on the side of social reform through the spread of Christian principles immersed in his novels.

The principle idea behind The Idiot, he wrote his niece, "is to portray a positively beautiful man ... There is only one positively beautiful man in the world - Christ."4 Another novel, The Possessed, reflects Dostoyevsky's opposition to a socialist revolution and an expression of nationalist faith in Russia's future that can take shape only as his nation turned to faith in Jesus Christ. Likewise, The Brothers Karamazov, considered by many to be the greatest novel ever written, is permeated throughout with a persistent theme of a search for faith in God.

The significance of Dostoyevsky's and Tolstoy's works to modern Russia is that they are strikingly prophetic of the rise and inevitable fall of the Soviet empire. Retaining the promise for their nation's redemption, they provide hope for the present generation in communist Russia, a hope not found in perestroika, but in Jesus Christ.

The Rise of the Soviet Union

- Lenin and the Bolshevik Revolution

At the end of World War I, Russia became embroiled in a bloody civil war and the entire nation succumbed to the oncoming tide of communism. Vladimir Illych Lenin, a young revolutionary, seized power and began a long standing policy of the Soviet Union: hostility toward all forms of Christianity.

In the early years after the revolution it was the Orthodox Church that suffered the full brunt of persecution. Protestant churches enjoyed comparative freedom and took the full advantage, but it was not for long.

- Stalin: The Reign of Terror

The bloodiest reign of terror in modern history, which surpassed Hitler's attempted genocide of the Jews, was the rulership of Josef Stalin. During the 1930s and 40s, millions of people were killed in Stalin's purges. Many of these people were Christians.

Then World War II abruptly changed the situation. Exploiting the Russian nationalism of the Orthodox Church, concessions were made between Stalin and Christian leaders. A relaxation of oppression led to a spiritual revival in the Soviet Union during the war.

- Post War Russia

This relative freedom did not last long, however, as Nikita Krushchev came to power in the 1950s. Krushchev unleashed a vicious attack against the Church which lasted until his fall from power in 1964. Half the Orthodox churches in the country were closed during this time and Baptist and Pentecostal churches suffered as well.

This militantly atheistic policy has affected all the churches in the Soviet Union. Communist policy toward the Church has swung between violent persecution and subtle propaganda, but at no time has the Soviet Union officially abandoned its declared aim of destroying Christianity.⁵

In the midst of these persecutions, there have appeared a group of vocal Christian dissidents within the Soviet Union, who have kept up the prophetic tradition of Tolstoy and Dostoyevsky in calling their nation back to God. Most notable among these Soviet dissidents are Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn and the recently deceased Andrei Sakharov.

Solzhenitsyn, author of The Gulag Archipelago, a narrative which describes his imprisonment under Stalin, has also compiled a collection of essays written by some of the Soviet Union's most brilliant thinkers, the majority of whom also happen to be Christians. The following excerpts are taken from From Under the Rubble:

"Mysteriously and unsuspected by the busy multitudes, Christian consciousness, once almost defunct, is stealing back. It is as if a door had opened while nobody was looking. Why is this rebirth taking place in our country, where Christianity is attacked particularly systematically and with great brutality, while the rest of the world suffers a decline of faith and religious feeling?

"Backsliding and denials notwithstanding, we live in a Christian culture in a Christian age, and it is Christianity that is the fermenting agent, the 'yeast of the world,' causing history to rise like dough in a trough, not only in the past but in the future as well. We are profoundly convinced that Christianity alone possesses enough motive force gradually to inspire and transform our world."6

"We discover with astonishment that so-called rationalist humanism actually lacks an adequate rational basis for its defense of the dignity and inalienable rights of the human personality - for which it has often risked both life and limb. The American Founding Fathers who many years ago first propounded the 'eternal rights of man and the citizen' postulated that every human being bears the form and likeness of God; he therefore has an absolute value, and consequently also the right to be respected by his fellows.

"Rationalism, positivism and materialism successively destroyed the memory of this absolute source of human rights. The unconditional equality of persons before God was replaced by the conditional equality of human individuals before the law."7

Despite the Marxist mandate to sweep aside the principles of Christianity, the strength of the Church has continued to grow behind the Iron Curtain. The principles of communism, which have been cultivated in the Soviet Union for nearly a century, have not achieved the utopia which Marx foresaw. Instead, the predictions of Russia's prophets are now beginning to come to pass.

From under the rubble of a fallen system, there is now arising a new hope. Communism's downfall has been precipitated by the presence of an overcoming Church which has withstood all persecution and has now been vindicated by the God of history. The Soviet Union has been destined for one of the greatest spiritual revivals of all time.

The Second Christianization of Russia

Missionaries travelling recently in the Soviet Union report a growing spiritual fervor among the churches. Coupled with this revival has been a nationalistic movement within Soviet satellite nations and a deep spiritual hunger among the people.

Mikhail Gorbachev's policies of perestroika and glasnost have indeed brought greater freedom for Soviet Christians desiring to spread the gospel throughout their society. The goal of perestroika is the reconstruction of the Soviet economy. However, it is doubtful that something that is so fallen and flawed at its foundations can be rebuilt.

Many of the Soviet Union's perceived economic problems are simply anti-Christian principles which need to be eradicated from Russian society before the people and culture of that nation can grow and flourish. In the meantime, glasnost has proven to be a gateway for a Christian renewal among the Soviet people.

Contrary to Gorbachev's plan to reconstruct the communist system, Soviet political theorists are beginning to realize that communism's principles can be easily refuted with the teachings of Jesus Christ.

Aleksandr Tsipko, a consultant in the International Department of the Soviet Central Committee, recently stated, "We have paid dearly for our neglect of man's true nature. All our absurdities stem from our dogged refusal to see man as he really is, as he has been created by nature and by history." Tsipko blames Marx for misinterpreting human nature and attributes the current economic and social crisis to the application of Marx's ideas.

Noted Soviet dissident, Aleksandr Ogorodnikov, has predicted "the second Christianization of Russia" which could occur if Gorbachev's policies continue on their present course. Ogorodnikov is presently involved in developing the first Christian Democratic Party in the Soviet Union. "Our first priority," he says, "is fighting communism, and Christianity is the only force that can do this."

Admitting communism's failure, while enhancing freedom of expression among the people, Soviet leaders have inadvertently prepared the way for revival. In a short period of time, we can expect that the freedom afforded by glasnost will result in a great move of God among the Soviet people.

Until recently, communism was a pervading world philosophy which competed with Christianity for dominion over men's souls. Like the many other philosophies that have appeared on the scene of human history to challenge the eternal principles set forth in the Word of God, communism appeared powerful for a season, but has been weighed in the balance of time and has been found empty. In the battle of ideas, the field of competition has now been reduced by one.

1. Mikhail Gorbachev, Perestroika, New York, Harper & Row, 1987, pg.30
2. Karl Marx, The Communist Manifesto
3. Leo Tolstoy, Confession, New York, W.W. Norton & Company, 1983, pg. 27
4. The Encyclopedia Britannica, 1985
5. Myra Grant, Vanya, Altamonte Springs, FL, Creation House, 1974, pg.8

6. A.B. "The Direction of Change," From Under the Rubble, Little, Brown, and Company, 1974, pg.146-147
7. Vadim Borisov, "Personality and National Awareness," From Under the Rubble , Little, Brown, and Company, 1974, pg. 200

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(6a9b39b98eb945faa14c645ec99e4eaa_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(9c2e8d1b5bd77cb5c9f83b7a9cff79fd_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn's Warning to the West

The Gulag Archipelago is so profound in its insight into the Soviet system of repression that it has caught the attention of politicians in the West. Much of the reform and revolution presently occurring in the Soviet Union has been foreseen by Solzhenitsyn. Considering the accuracy of Solzhenitsyn's predictions, Americans should take notice of his warning to the free democratic nations of the West.

Mine was, probably, the easiest imaginable kind of arrest. It did not tear me from the embrace of kith or kin, nor wrench me from a deeply cherished home life. One pallid European February it took me from our narrow salient on the Baltic Sea, where, depending on one's point of view, either we had surrounded the Germans or they had surrounded us, and it deprived me only of my familiar artillery battery and the scenes of the last three months of the war.

The brigade commander called me to his headquarters and asked me for my pistol. Two counterintelligence agents stepped forward and shouted theatrically: "You are under arrest!"

Burning and pricking from head to toe, all I could exclaim was: "Me? What for?"

And even though there is usually no answer to this question, surprisingly I received one! "You have ... a friend on the First Ukrainian Front?"

I knew instantly I had been arrested because of my correspondence with a school friend.

"Resistance! Why didn't you resist?" Today those who have continued to live on comfort scold those who have suffered. Yes, resistance should have begun right there, at the moment of the arrest itself. But it did not begin.

During a daylight arrest there is always that moment when they are leading you through a crowd of hundreds of just such doomed innocents as yourself. You aren't gagged. You really can and you really ought to cry out - to cry out that you are being arrested. That villains in disguise are trapping people! That millions are being arrested on the strength of false denunciations!

Instead, not one sound comes from your parched lips, and the passing crowd naively believes that you and your executioners are friends out for a leisurely stroll. I myself often had a chance to cry out.

So why did I keep silent?

Every man has handy a dozen glib little reasons why he is right not to sacrifice himself. Some still have hopes of a favorable outcome to their case and are afraid to ruin their chances by an outcry.

As for me, I kept silent for one further reason: because those Muscovites thronging the steps of the escalators were too few for me, too few! Here my cry would be heard by 200 or twice 200, but what about the 200 million? Vaguely, unclearly, I had a vision that someday I would cry out to the 200 million.

The following is an excerpt from "Russia's Prophet in Exile", Time, July 24, 1989, Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn's first interview in 10 years.

From the age of nine, I knew I was going to be a writer, although I didn't know what I was going to write about. I was raised by my elders in Christianity, and almost through my school years, up to 17 or 18, I was in opposition to Soviet education. I had to conceal this from others. But this force field of Marxism, as developed in the Soviet Union, has such an impact that it gets into the brain of the young man and little by little takes over.

From age 17 or 18, I did change internally, and from that time, I became a Marxist, a Leninist, and believed in all these things. I lived that way up through the university and the war and up until prison, but in prison, I encountered a very broad variety of people. I saw that my convictions did not have a solid basis, could not stand up in dispute, and I had to renounce them.

Then the question arose of going back to what I had learned as a child. It took more than a year or so. Other believers influenced me, but basically it was a return to what I had thought before. The fact that I was dying also shook me profoundly. At age 34, I was told I could not be saved, and then I returned to life. These kinds of upheavals always have an impact on a person's convictions.

It is quite extraordinary the extent to which I have been lied about. It is remarkable, and it makes me ashamed of journalists. No one ever gives any quotes. The same is true for the charge that I am a nationalist. I am a patriot. I love my motherland. I want my country, which is sick, which for 70 years has been destroyed, and is on the very edge of death, I want it to come back to life. But this doesn't make me a nationalist. I don't want to limit anyone else. Every country has its own patriots who are concerned with its fate.

In Western civilizations - which used to be called Western-Christian but now might better be called Western-Pagan - along with the development of intellectual life and science, there has been a loss of the serious moral basis of society. During these 300 years of Western civilization, there has been a sweeping away of duties and expansion of rights. But we have two lungs. You can't breathe with just one lung and not the other. We must avail ourselves of rights and duties in equal measure. And if this is not established by the law, if the law does not oblige us to do that, then we have to control ourselves.

When Western society was established, it was based on the idea that each individual limited his own behavior. Everyone understood what he could do and could not do. The law itself did not restrain people.

Since then, the only thing we have been developing is rights, rights, rights, at the expense of duty.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(35dc653d59570f8f891c312eeece91a2_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(ab4e2b3fc7e7887b7a72f548aa6f5e60_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Is the Soviet Union Gog and Magog?

By Jay Rogers
3/90

Is the Soviet Union mentioned in the Bible?

Many people, searching to discover the answer to this question, have studied Ezekiel chapters 38 and 39 in an attempt to find the role of this communist superpower in the end times:

"And the word of the Lord came to me saying: 'Son of man, set your face toward Gog of the land of Magog, the prince of Rosh, Meshech, and Tubal, and prophesy against Him, and say, "Thus says the Lord God, 'Behold I am against you, O Gog, prince of Rosh, Meshech, and Tubal. And I will turn you about, and put hooks in your jaws, and I will bring you out, and all your army, horses and horsemen, all of them splendidly attired, a great company with buckler and shield, all of them wielding swords; Persia, Ethiopia, and Put with them, all of them with shield and helmet; Gomer with all its troops; Beth-togarmah from the remote parts of the north with all its troops - many peoples with you'" (Ezekiel 38:1-6).

Many have interpreted the vivid apocalyptic imagery in Ezekiel 38 and 39 as foretelling a war between the Soviet Union and the restored nation of Israel just before the Second Coming of Jesus. Others have understood this vision as a prophecy which was fulfilled in the 2nd century B.C. at the defeat of the Assyrian invaders of Palestine by Judas Maccabeus.

In order to gain an understanding of these chapters, it is useful to employ a method of interpretation which rightly discerns the nature of apocalyptic literature. Apocalyptic passages in the Bible serve a dual purpose: to comfort God's people in times of tribulation, and to show them that they are only a small part of a universal struggle between the forces of good and evil in which the kingdom of God will ultimately emerge as victorious. Apocalyptic messages are designed to increase the faith of God's people in times of national crisis by assuring them that their God is able to deliver them.

Ezekiel 38-39 should be understood in the context of its apocalyptic literary style; this is a highly visionary passage depicting an earthly struggle of Ezekiel's time which is only a smaller reflection of a spiritual conflict between the forces of heaven and hell.

Historically, the nations mentioned in this passage, Magog, Meshech, Tubal, Gomer and Beth-togarmah, were a barbarous people known as the Scythians. These were a nomadic people who had moved from central Asia to southern Russia. Just about the same time that Ezekiel was born, the Scythians terrorized southwest Asia and the Middle East.

Horsemen Splendidly Attired

Pouring through the passes of the Caucasus mountains, hordes of Scythians covered the fertile plains of the south. Known and feared for their ruthless cruelty, they came like a flight of locusts, devouring the countryside, consuming crops, slaughtering livestock, burning homes and villages, and massacring the inhabitants of the land.

The Scythians were fierce tribesmen who were paid no wage unless they could produce scalps of enemy soldiers killed in battle. Every Scyth owned at least one horse used for riding into battle. All carried a double curved bow, shooting over the horse's left shoulder. Arrows and bow were carried in a case slung from the left side of a belt. The Scythians also carried swords, knives and daggers and wore bronze helmets and chain mail jerkins lined with red felt. They carried round shields decorated with central gold emblems in the shape of an animal.

The Scythians were accomplished horsemen, being among the first people to master the art of riding. This made their approach seem unnaturally sudden and gave them the great advantage of surprise attack. The Scythians advanced quickly southwestward striking fear into the hearts of the people of every nation that lay in their path.

One force appeared on Iran's border in the 8th century B.C. bringing them into fierce conflict with the Cimmerians. The Scythian horsemen drove the Cimmerian foot soldiers northward through the Caucasus mountains across the Volga river. Another force chased the remnant of the Cimmerian army across Armenia, while a third force joined the second contingent at Lake Urmia and drove the remaining Cimmerian armies all the way across central Turkey into the regions of Phrygia and Lydia.

During the time of Ezekiel and Jeremiah, the Scythians attacked Syria and Judea from their capital city of Saqqez. Later, they attacked Egypt which borders Ethiopia and Libya (Put).

In the same year that the prophet Jeremiah was called (626 B.C.), swarms of Scythian invaders struck terror into the nations surrounding the Assyrian empire. Having made a pact with the Assyrians, Scythian horsemen were sent against Egypt and Judah.

Jeremiah, a contemporary of Ezekiel, foresaw an approaching storm, and described the coming invasion of the Babylonian empire. The early chapters of Jeremiah refer to the Scythian invasion which shortly preceded that of the Babylonians:

"I am bringing evil from the north, and great destruction.
A lion has gone up from his thicket,
And a destroyer of nations has set out;
He has gone out from his place
To make your land a waste.
Your cities will be ruins

Without inhabitant.

Behold, he goes up like clouds,
And his chariots are like the whirlwind;
His horses are swifter than eagles.
Woe to us, for we are ruined!"
(Jeremiah 4:6,7,13)

The inclusion of the nations of Meshech, Tubal, Gomer, Beth-togarmah, Persia, Ethiopia and Put in Ezekiel 38:3,5,6 is best understood in light of the historical context of the Scythian invasion.

* In Genesis 10:2, Magog, Meshech, Tubal, and Gomer are named as the sons of Japeth and are the founders of the northern group of nations from which the Scythians descended.

* In Ezekiel 27:13, Meshech and Tubal are mentioned as being sellers of slaves to Tyre; and in Ezekiel 32:26, they are spoken of as "instilling terror in the land of the living."

* Meshech is thought to be a people called the Moschi dwelling in the Caucasus mountain regions according to Assyrian inscriptions.

* Tubal is thought to be a people called the Tibareni dwelling on the southeast shores of the Black Sea.

* Gomer is thought to have been the Cimmerians, who occupied central Turkey in the days of the Assyrian empire.

* Beth-togarmah is thought to be Armenia.

* Persia is the people inhabiting the region of modern day Iraq and Iran.

* Ethiopia and Put speak of the Black African nations.

When the history of the Scythian people is examined, it becomes apparent that they are the people described in Ezekiel's prophecy. Herodotus, the Greek historian, refers to the suddenness of the Scythians attack on the Assyrian empire.

By examining this passage in its historical and cultural context, it can be seen that Ezekiel 38-39 describes the Scythian invasions during the time of Ezekiel. This passage also apocalyptically foresees the ultimate triumph of Jesus Christ and His victorious Kingdom over the kingdoms of this world.

Telescoping

A characteristic of apocalyptic literature is telescoping or the compression of immediate historical judgments and which prefigure the ultimate judgment of God. An example of telescoping is found in Joel 1:4. The prophet Joel stated that a locust plague causing a famine in his day was "the day of the Lord" (Joel 1:15). Joel saw in the locust plague a prefiguring of final judgment. The two events are superimposed giving the hearer a sense of immanency.

The same phenomenon occurs in Ezekiel 38-39. The invasion of Judea by the Scythian armies is coupled with a vision of an almighty God ultimately vanquishing these forces:

"I shall strike your bow from your left hand, and dash down your arrows from your right hand. You shall fall on the mountains of Israel, you and all your troops, and the peoples who are with you; I shall give you as food to every kind of predatory bird and beast of the field. You will fall on the open field; for it is I who have spoken,' declares the Lord" (Ezekiel 39:3-5).

"Gog and Magog" is a biblical symbol for the heathen nations of the world. The Apostle John equates "the nations of the four corners of the earth" with "Gog and Magog" (Revelation 20:8). Thus, "Gog and Magog" is used in the Bible to denote the nations of the world that are opposed to Christ and His Kingdom.

The Bible tells us the Kingdom of God is destined to overcome all the nations of the world. One day these nations are going to stream into the Kingdom of God. In Psalm 2, we are told of a great King, ruling over a vast kingdom that far transcends the boundaries of the nation Israel. This Psalm speaks of the heathen nations being given to Jesus Christ as His inheritance.

This great end time revival is likened to the invasion of the Scythian horsemen in Ezekiel 38-39. The suddenness of the Scythian's attack is superimposed on the vision of Jesus Christ moving quickly throughout the nations bringing spiritual awakening to the entire world prior to His return.

By interpreting Ezekiel 38-39 as an apocalyptic passage, it can be seen that this is not meant to be a prediction that the Soviet Union will one day invade a restored Israel. This is not to say that the Soviet Union won't invade Israel someday, but this is not what this passage is intended to mean.

Currently, the nations mentioned in Ezekiel's message are under the domination of Soviet influence. Nations such as Kazakh, Kirghiz, Tajik, Uzbek, Turkmen, Azerbaijan, Armenia, Georgia, Moldavia and the Ukraine are a part of the Soviet Union. These nations were overrun in ancient times by the Scythian hordes. Today there is great social upheaval occurring in these nations. Demonstrations calling for independence occur daily in these nations.

There is good reason to hope that a great awakening of God's Spirit will begin in a short time in these countries. The progress of this awakening will overthrow the yoke of atheistic communism and many of the people in these nations will begin to stream into the Kingdom of God.

Although God may choose to use a particular nation in some strategic way at a given point in history, His Kingdom and power to save are not bound by the governments and institutions of men. God has appointed dominion over the nations to His Son. One day, not only the Soviet Union, but all the kingdoms of this world shall be shaken by His power and they shall become a part of the Kingdom of God and of His Christ.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(4fe57c3593bf1b21d272ae7ac8dfaf77_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(0d5ec72f61334709c3fc9450209b754f_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Soviet Union Proposes Drastic Measures Toward Perestroika

8/90

Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev returned home to Moscow last month after the summit to face a failing Soviet economy and increasing nationalistic unrest in the 15 Soviet republics.

Gorbachev moved to hold together a fast-splintering Soviet Republic by proposing drastic restructuring measures which would allow the 15 republics to agree on a new, looser federation of sovereign states.

The redefinition of the Soviet federation of republics could effectively ease unrest for the three Baltic State's demands for independence and quell separatist demands now occurring all across the Soviet Union.

Rival party leader Boris Yeltsin, leading the Russian republic's parliament toward its own restructuring plan, declared that the Russian republic's laws supersede the national laws of the Soviet Union. This measure would drastically reduce Gorbachev's authority in the Russian republic which includes 52 percent of the Soviet Union's population and 75 percent of its land mass.

The presidents of Lithuania and Latvia, Vytautas Landsbergis and Anatoly Gorbunov, met with Gorbachev and later indicated that the Soviet president had offered their republics a deal on independence.

Estonian President Arnold Ruutel said on national Estonian radio that Gorbachev had agreed to talks and had recognized the need for independence.

Gorbachev told the Supreme Soviet legislature: "If Lithuania will suspend the implementation of this act of independence, we may start to talk. That means suspend its implementation at least for the duration of the talks."

Gorbachev had earlier ordered an embargo of natural gas, oil and other supplies to Lithuania when the country reiterated its declaration of independence and denounced the Soviet Union's forceful annexation of the Baltic States during Josef Stalin's "reign of terror" in which millions of ethnic people were deported to labor camps and later died under cruel conditions.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Chuck Colson's Prison Fellowship in USSR

9/90

"Some of the Pharisees in the crowd said to Jesus, "Teacher, rebuke your disciples!" "I tell you," he replied, "if they keep quiet, the stones will cry out" (Luke 19:40).

It was twelve years ago that Alexander Solzhenitsyn stunned the distinguished audience assembled for Harvard's 327th commencement.

Sounding more like an Old Testament prophet than a Nobel Laureate, Solzhenitsyn charged intellectuals and the media with abandoning the West's Christian heritage and embracing instead a destructive humanism.

While the human spirit had been strengthened in the West through suffering, said Solzhenitsyn, the affluent and comfortable West had become spiritually exhausted. It had lost its courage and moral resolve.

Many dismissed the Russian writer's speech as an extremist's rantings. The suggestion of spirituality in the East seemed unlikely at best; Communist tyrants held the church in an iron grip. And in the West an unprecedented born-again movement anticipated a widespread return to traditional moral values.

But by 1990 Solzhenitsyn's startling words had proved prophetic. A spiritual movement born in the open-air masses of Krakow, the Lutheran churches of East Germany, and the sanctuaries of brave Romanian pastors had spilled onto the streets, toppling Communist tyrants. All the while the West, its born-again enthusiasm spent, drifted far from its moral moorings.

A few months ago I traveled to Solzhenitsyn's native land. There I saw firsthand the new spiritual openness in the East the Russian writer had foretold.

I went to Russia to visit Soviet prisons, and in Moscow found myself at a negotiating table across from Vadim Viktorovich Bakatin, minister of internal affairs and fourth-ranking official in the Communist government.

Mr. Bakatin is an impressive man with alert, penetrating eyes and a hearty manner. He welcomed our delegation and opened the meeting by explaining , with disarming candor, the crime problem in the Soviet Union.

Crime shot up 38 percent in 1989, he said. The reasons were varied: economic, political and ethnic unrest. But the Soviets were determined to improve their prison system and deal with their crime crisis.

He had been candid; I returned the favor. I told him that crime is not caused by economic or political or ethnic factors. It is caused by sin - by the fundamental evil in the human heart.

In a system that rejects God, there can be no transcendent values or authority to which people are accountable - so one can only reasonably expect unfettered human behavior. And that means crime. "As your own writer Fyodor Dostoyevski put it in The Brothers Karamazov," I said, "when there is no God, everything is permitted. Crime becomes inevitable."

Then I described Prison Fellowship's ministry: how Christian volunteers visit prisons, sharing the news that Jesus can change an offender's heart and give him a new perspective for living. Bakatin listened intently, "That's what we need," he said.

Encouraged, I laid my hopes on the table. This is what I would suggest," I said. "One, that religious services be allowed. Two, that community involvement be encouraged. Three, that aftercare be developed, using community groups like Prison Fellowship. And four, that restitution and help for victims be made part of your criminal justice process."

Mr. Bakatin smiled broadly, "Mr. Colson," he said, "we will welcome Prison Fellowship and groups like you in our prisons. We need your kind of help." He paused, then with a twinkle in his eye concluded, "And God be with you."

Surprised and delighted as I was by this outcome, I'm not so naive as to suppose that Soviet officials have all been born again. But what is obvious is that they recognize the failure of the Communist's system to provide any moral undergirding for their society.

This is the great irony of our age. While formerly "godless Communists" are affirming the fact that society cannot survive without a vital religious influence, religion continues to be shoved out of the public square in what many used to call Christian America.

- Chuck Colson

The God of Stones and Spiders, a recently released book by Chuck Colson, tells of the anti-Christian bias inherent in America's society of the 1990s. A compilation of essays taken from regular columns written for Jubilee, the newsletter of Prison Fellowship, Colson's intent is to alert the West to the forces of a hostile culture and call us to renew our spiritual strength.

The obscure title, The God of Stones and Spiders, comes from the story of Nien Ching, a Chinese woman who spent seven years in prison during China's Cultural Revolution. Watching a spider weave an intricate web from a window of her prison cell, Nien Ching asked herself, "Who had taught the spider to make a web? Could it have really acquired the skill through evolution, or did God create the spider and endow it with the ability to make a web so that it could catch food and perpetuate the species?" This experience helped the woman to see that God, not Mao, was in control.

It is the power and sovereignty of God, rather than human wisdom, that enables us to overcome in our struggles. A god limited to human campaigns and crusades is too small. Like the Pharisees, who told Jesus to keep his disciples quiet, our human effort is an offense to the true God, awesome in power and might, who can only reply: "I tell you, if these become silent, the stones will cry out!"

Colson has hit on many of the most important issues that face us and offers biblically based answers to the problems that threaten to destroy our society. Dealing with the issues of government and public policy, culture, the church, prisons and criminal justice, Colson offers challenge, insight and prophetic words for America.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!

It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Sweeping Changes Are in Store for the USSR

Counting 500 Days to Freedom

- by Jay Rogers

10/90

The Supreme Soviet legislature adopted a radical plan in September to move beyond merely reforming their socialist economy, toward creating a Western-style free-market economy within 500 days.

Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev initially embraced free-market economics to give the sagging Soviet Union a boost, but now radical reformers, such as Russian Supreme Soviet Chairman Boris Yeltsin and economics professor Stanislav Shatalin, have passed legislation that will eventually bring death to socialism.

The proposal for reformation, drawn up by Shatalin and passed by the Russian parliament led by Yeltsin, calls for dismantling the power of the central government and selling businesses to private owners and breaking up collective farms. This spells the end of Gorbachev's dream of perestroika: the restructuring of the Soviet economy by implementing free-market economics - yet retaining a socialist framework.

Other sweeping changes include allowing Gorbachev to wield powers affording him the authority of a dictator during the time of transition. These powers were deemed necessary by the Supreme Soviet legislature in order to help the nation toward making the drastic turnover. Gorbachev has promised to use the powers responsibly.

With the decentralizing of the Soviet government, according to Shatalin's plan, the 15 separate Soviet republics will have economic and political autonomy, with the government of the Soviet Union controlling only the military and certain communications, transportation and energy companies. Although many of the details must still be worked through during the transition, in 500 days the Soviet government will become less socialistic than many western nations.

With little or no time to lose in resurrecting the fast failing Soviet economy, Gorbachev and rival party leader Yeltsin have struck a deal. Yeltsin, if the transition goes smoothly, will emerge as the country's leader and Gorbachev's power will become greatly decreased in the transition. Gorbachev will eventually become a type of foreign minister relating to nations of the world and representing the people of the Soviet Union.

The 15 separate Soviet republics will be given greater freedom to act independently, almost like a union of confederate states rather than a single republic. People groups as diverse as the central Asian states, the Baltic states, and "fringe" nations such as the Ukraine and Moldavia, will be given the freedom to run their own economies and elect their own government officials.

Soviet Union Experiencing Unprecedented Revival

Soviet citizens are flocking to church in record numbers since the state control of religion officially ended in late September. By a 341-1 vote, the Soviet legislature adopted historic legislation which ended the communist policy of atheist education and state control of all religious institutions and permits organized religious instruction.

In another historic move, the first church service was held in the Kremlin's Uspensky Cathedral since 1918. Since the days of Lenin and Stalin, communist officials have persecuted the church in the Soviet Union, executed and persecuted Christians and infiltrated churches with KGB agents.

Christian leaders currently hold political offices in the national legislature, such as dissident priest Gleb Yakunin, who was jailed and exiled during the Brezhnev era. A number of Christian Democratic political parties have also emerged, all of which are now legal.

Armenian legislator, Genrikh Igitian recently stated that traditional atheistic instruction helped to "destroy" the country and said, "I believe every educated person should be instructed in religion."

The new law on "Freedom of Conscience and Religious Organizations" declares that all religions are legal and bars the state from interfering in religious affairs. The law also allows religious groups to set up schools, send students overseas, and receive exchange students. It also permits "societies, brotherhoods, associations" and other organizations.

So what are you waiting for?

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Prison Fellowship Invited to the Soviet Union

11/90

WASHINGTON, DC (FR) - In late October, Prison Fellowship, a reform ministry founded by Charles Colson, began working within the Soviet Union in order to provide a Christian presence in the Soviet prison system.

Soviet citizens interested in working in prisons as an expression of their Christian faith were presented with four workshops by Ron Nikkel, president of Prison Fellowship International. The convocation was held in Moscow October 22-28.

"My general thrust will be to get these 850 Christian Soviet leaders connected with the Prison Fellowship Committee," said Nikkel. "The convocation is geared toward learning new ways of Christian outreach. The organizers have invited resource people from a variety of areas and since prisons are high on their list, we were invited to participate."

The four workshops presented methods for building relationships with prisoners and communicating the Gospel in light of prisoners' needs. Nikkel and Robert Babb of Prison Fellowship's Frankfurt office also worked with church leaders on how to mobilize volunteers for ministry.

Soviet Christians Organize

Organization of Christian volunteers for prison work began in April this year when Nikkel and Charles Colson visited the Soviet Union and received permission from Vadim Bakatin, Soviet minister of internal affairs, to go into the prisons with religious programming.

"Our prisons are open to you," Bakatin told Colson at the time. "This is what we need in the Soviet Union."

Consequently, Prison Fellowship International coordinated a national conference on prison ministry in Kiev last July. There, 200 people assembled and elected a committee, deciding to choose one representative from each of seven geographic regions.

"I was amazed that they followed a true democratic process," Nikkel observed. "There were nominations, then a long and heated debate preceding the elections. There were winners, but it was not unanimous. So they broke for prayer, then met again and concluded with a unanimous vote for the chosen representatives."

He observed that this is a Quaker tradition and that a number of Quaker traditions appear among Soviet Christians.

Christian Radio Programming

In addition, Nikkel said, Prison Fellowship will investigate the possibility, with Trans-World Radio, of broadcasting Christian programming five days a week, by and for prisoners.

"They do have radios in the prisons," he said, "and we are thinking of initiating Christian fellowship groups within the prisons to gather for the broadcast for learning and encouragement."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Historic Soviet Congress

12/90

MOSCOW, Soviet Union (FR) - A few weeks after the Supreme Soviet legislature had voted to abolish laws which restricted religion, nearly 1000 of the nation's evangelical church leaders gathered for the Soviet Congress on World Evangelization. This marked the first time in 73 years that Soviet believers were able to gather for such a large interdenominational gathering.

1100 Soviet participants came from a cross section of evangelical churches and all 15 provinces of the Soviet Union. The participants of the Lausanne Congress in Moscow, coming from many different church denominations, affirmed the common tenants of Christian doctrine outlined in the Lausanne Covenant.

The Congress examined evangelism in a variety of ways including unreached groups, nominal Christians, business people, and young people. Participants looked at the mass media, spiritual discipleship, and church leadership and organizing new churches.

The Congress theme, "The Gospel for All Peoples," was designed to bring delegates face to face with the immensity of the task before them. The earth's largest nation, the Soviet Union occupies over one-seventh of the globe's land surface and is the world's third most populous country.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Christian Youth International Begins

Behold I am doing a new thing!

By Jay Rogers

12/90

As we close out the first year of this decade of harvest, the prospects for World Awakening are more promising than they have ever been before at any other time in world history. This could be the decade in which the Great Commission is fulfilled!

The fires of revival are even now igniting in the Soviet Union and in Eastern Europe. Now is the time to infiltrate these nations with the Gospel! Some recent happenings concerning the Soviet Union should excite you into action:

- * A group of university students were among the people who accepted Jesus Christ during a recent outreach to the Soviet Union. Scores of young people went forward to publicly commit themselves to Christ at the end of a series of concerts put on by YWAM in 14 locations within the Soviet Union.
- * In a single meeting at a Vineyard conference last June, over $1.1 million was raised by Terry Law Ministries for distribution of Russian Bibles in the Soviet Union. At 50c per New Testament, this will provide 2 million Soviet citizens with the written Word of God.
- * Terry Law is working to raise the $6 million he will need to print and ship the 12 million New Testaments that he has been permitted to take into the Soviet Union.
- * 100,000 of these Bibles have already been acquired to distribute to university students throughout the entire Soviet Union.
- * Every major university campus in the Soviet Union will be evangelized in 1991 and there will be a campus ministry established on each one of these campuses.
- * Hundreds of Soviet and Eastern European youth leaders will be trained to reach their universities, cities and governments with the Gospel.
- * Office space in Riga, Estonia has recently been offered for the training of these leaders and serving as a headquarters for evangelizing the university campuses!
- * Hannu Haukka, a Finnish missionary to the Soviet Union, is calling for 500 days of fasting and prayer to correspond with the 500 day plan to create a free market economy. While each passing day brings the Soviet economy closer to anarchy and ruin, we must be in prayer and actively evangelizing the Soviet Union.

We must hurry to bring in the harvest! Let us pray for the multitudes who have never heard the Name of Jesus Christ proclaimed. Let us pray for the Soviet Church, for the government, and for the people who will respond to the Gospel message in the Soviet Union.

Will you join with us in prayer? And you might ask God about your going to the Soviet Union. There will literally be hundreds of opportunities opening to go to the Soviet Union next year. But what happens after 500 days is something we cannot know. Only God knows.

If, after having prayed for the Soviet Union, you would like to have more information about reaching the youth in the Soviet Union, or, if you would like to support this great work financially, you can write to:

Bob and Rose Weiner Ministries
P.O. Box 1799
Gainesville, Florida, 32609

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Youth Explosion Soviet Union: A Report on the beginnings of Christian Youth International

By Jay Rogers
3/91

MOSCOW (FR) - Under a new law guaranteeing religious freedom, new indigenous missions are beginning to emerge throughout the Soviet Union in an effort to evangelize their own people and extend the gospel to this country's millions of unreached people. The long-awaited revisions to the Soviet law on religion, ratified in August 1990, could not have come at a more timely moment in the history of the Soviet Union.

One of the most exciting developments concerning this new freedom is that the university campuses are now open to Christians. In the past, the Institutes and Universities of the Soviet Union included the elite students of the nation but were closed to Christians. Not only are Christians now allowed to study at the universities, but the campuses are even inviting in Christian speakers, taking advantage of their newfound religious freedom.

This year may be the most crucial time to begin Christian student groups, as a great deal of interest in the novelty of religious freedom has permeated all of Soviet society.

Before a recent meeting in an exciting new church in Moscow, featuring American youth evangelist Bob Weiner, Komsomolskaya Pravda (a major communist newspaper) ran a front page story encouraging the Soviet people to attend. The publicity brought an additional 500 people to the meeting at which there were 200 people who received Christ with many noted miracles.

A number of prominent television stations also covered the meeting, including Good Evening Moscow, a popular Soviet program. The youthful enthusiasm of the worshippers was noted by showing the charismatic style of dancing, clapping and joyfulness. The program contrasted the meeting with the Russian stereotype of drab, irrelevant religion. Coverage like this has sparked a national fascination with Christianity.

This spiritual revival began in 1987, when the Russian Orthodox church celebrated the millennium of Christianity in Russia. At that time, the government "tested the waters" of religious freedom, by returning some church buildings, granting new freedoms, and allowing Western evangelists to visit the country.

According to one American businessman who attended the meeting in Moscow: "There is now unprecedented freedom of religion in the Soviet Union." This freedom has now been extended to the schools and universities.

Campus evangelism has begun!

On April 3- 7, a five day evangelism and church planting training seminar, sponsored by Bob and Rose Weiner Ministries International, will be held in Moscow to equip hundreds of select Soviet Christian students to reach their campuses.

Out of 60 potential campus workers interviewed in March, fifteen were selected who will be visiting hundreds of cities throughout the Soviet Union. These workers will be interviewing thousands of university students from all across the 9 time zones of the USSR and will be choosing 300 of the most outstanding Christian students to attend the April leadership seminar in Moscow.

Bob's vision is also to put a Russian Bible into the hands of every university student in the Soviet Union. Over 200,000 New Testaments have been obtained thanks to the tremendous cooperation of Terry Law Ministries and Mission Possible, Inc.

Four popular Bible study books, including Bob and Rose Weiner's Bible Studies for a Firm Foundation, have been translated into the Russian language and 100,000 of these 200 page workbooks are being printed for use on the campuses. After the April training seminar, the students will go back to their campuses with almost a thousand New Testaments and over 300 work books each.

On an ironic note, the Bible Study workbooks are being printed on a communist printing press in Moscow. The Russian New Testaments are being printed at a cost of less than 50c each on a printing press in Communist China - the same press that was used to print millions of Chairman Mao's "Little Red Books."

The goal of Bob's newly formed organization, Christian Youth International, is to release hundreds of youth workers to the campuses of the Soviet Union. Christian Youth International is working in cooperation with several other ministries dedicated to reaching Soviet youth and planting churches on the major university campuses.

One cooperating missionary, Daniel Williams, President of Calvary Ministries International, has begun a Bible College in Riga, Latvia, which is currently training over 130 students. These students will be attending the Moscow evangelism and church planting training seminar in April. This summer, Christian Youth International will be working with Calvary Ministries in an effort to plant 18 churches in the Soviet Union.

While in the Soviet Union, Bob had unlimited opportunities to preach unhindered to thousands of university students. International students and young military trainees from every communist nation in the world are sent to the Soviet Union each year by the thousands.

There is in Moscow alone an unprecedented opportunity to win young people to Jesus Christ from every yet unreached communist nation in the world. Thousands of young Cubans, Ethiopians, North Koreans, Vietnamese and many others from every communist nation in the world are gathered on the university campuses of the Soviet Union or are there serving their terms of military training.

The university campuses are perhaps the greatest resource for shining the light of the gospel to Soviet society and the communist world. Reserved for an elite few, the campuses provide a microcosm of future Soviet leadership who will be the most influential men and women in that culture. It is imperative that Christians begin to reach the campuses this year.

There will be literally hundreds of opportunities opening to go to the Soviet Union as a part of a church planting team this year. Every major campus will be evangelized in the 1990s and there will be a campus ministry established on each one of these universities.

If you would like to support this great work financially, or if you would like to know about opportunities to go to the Soviet Union this year as a part of a church planting team, contact:

Bob and Rose Weiner Ministries, Int'l
P.O. Box 1799
Gainesville FL, 32602

Phone: (904) 375-4455
FAX: (904) 375-6000

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Mikhail Gorbachev: The True Meaning of the Soviet Flag

By Jay Rogers

4/91

Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev has brought some very real changes to the style of leadership within the Soviet Union. Despite the turmoil that has occurred under his leadership, Gorbachev is unlike all of the Soviet leaders of the past, who have refused to talk with the heads of state of the free world.

Gorbachev once spent many hours with Margaret Thatcher debating the power of the free market verses Marxism. Only the two of them and the Soviet president's interpreter heard the conversation. Gorbachev made everyone else leave the room.

He also spent a lot of time speaking with President Reagan. The ideas of liberty and freedom being sown into his heart and mind began to take root and overturn the falsehoods of communism.

Those ideas of freedom went deep into his heart and prospered because it was really God who sent them. Other Soviet leaders have always presented very formal canned speeches, while Gorbachev has stimulated the minds of people all over the world with fresh ideas. This dramatic change has affected all of Soviet society, especially the young people.

In an interview with some 20 year-old Soviets, Public Radio reported on perestroika ... The question was asked: "What does it mean to you?"

One responded: "It means that we can think for ourselves ... Before we were expected to only do as we were told. What we speak in the kitchen can be published in the paper. There is a feeling that we can change things. We will never allow the cult of personality worship to happen again. We keep feeling that something within us needs to be changed, but we don't know what it is."

What is the driving force behind all of the changes the past few years have brought to the Soviet Union? The answer to this question can only lie in an unseen force in history which is pulling the Soviet people toward a greater destiny. It is as if the God of all history has said to the Soviet Union, "I'm going to put my hook in your jaw and turn you around and rain fire upon you. Is not my word like fire and like a hammer that shatters the rock?"

The Soviet Flag

Long viewed as a symbol of communistic repression and a threat to the West, the flag of the Soviet Union, with its Hammer and Sickle, attests to the prophetic destiny of God on this great nation.

Hammer: "Is not my word like fire and like a hammer that shatters the rock?" Jeremiah 23:29

Sickle: "Thrust in your sickle and reap for the harvest of earth is ripe."
Revelation 14:15

Star: "Until the day dawns and the Morning Star arises in your heart."
2 Peter 1:19

Red Flag: "The blood of Jesus." He has redeemed every nation ... every nation shall serve Him.
1 Peter 1:19

In the West's fear of the spread of communism, we have missed a greater significance behind the symbols of the Soviet flag. A meaning once hidden now reveals that there is a great destiny for this nation. The question has never been - "Could the West contain communism?" - but rather - "Could communism resist freedom?"

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Mikhail Gorbachev - A Modern Cyrus?

4/91

A Time magazine article recently described the precarious balance in which the tenure of Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev is hanging. "He may be the most widely disliked figure in the Soviet Union, yet he is convinced that he alone can avert outright warfare among tribes and factions that hate one another even more than they hate him" ("The Conductor of Discord," March 25, 1991, p.33).

Gorbachev stands on a narrow precipice. On either side are civil war with social anarchy or a return to the iron hand of a repressive dictatorial government. The condition of the Soviet Union at this moment is extremely urgent. Forces which seem out of control have been unleashed which either threaten to destroy the Soviet republic or promise to bring lasting change and permanent freedom. Caught in the fulcrum of the mechanism of change, Gorbachev is being used as an instrument to bring freedom to many long repressed people.

Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev has brought some very real changes to the style of leadership within the Soviet Union. Despite the turmoil that has occurred under his leadership, Gorbachev is unlike all of the Soviet leaders of the past, who have refused to talk with the heads of state of the free world. Gorbachev once spent many hours with Margaret Thatcher debating the power of the free market verses Marxism. Only the two of them and the Soviet president's interpreter heard the conversation. Gorbachev made everyone else leave the room.

He also spent a lot of time speaking with President Reagan. The ideas of liberty and freedom being sown into his heart and mind began to take root and overturn the falsehoods of communism. Those ideas of freedom went deep into his heart and prospered because it was really God who sent them.

Other Soviet leaders have always presented very formal canned speeches, while Gorbachev has stimulated the minds of people all over the world with fresh ideas. This dramatic change has affected all of Soviet society, especially the young people. In an interview with some 20 year-old Soviets, Public Radio reported on perestroika ... The question was asked: "What does it mean to you?"

One responded: "It means that we can think for ourselves ... Before we were expected to only do as we were told. What we speak in the kitchen can be published in the paper. There is a feeling that we can change things. We will never allow the cult of personality worship to happen again. We keep feeling that something within us needs to be changed, but we don't know what it is."

What is the driving force behind all of the changes the past few years have brought to the Soviet Union? The answer to this question can only lie in an unseen force in history which is pulling the Soviet people toward a greater destiny. It is as if the God of all history has said to the Soviet Union, "I'm going to put my hook in your jaw and turn you around and rain fire upon you. Is not my word like fire and like a hammer that shatters the rock?"

While we must always keep in mind the diabolical nature of the communist system of government, as well as a realistic understanding that a few reforms will never renew a governmental system whose foundational principles deny personal freedom, truth and the existence of God, we must not ignore the possible beginnings of freedom that are stirring within the Soviet Union today.

God has foretold in His word that every nation, every tribe, and every kingdom of this world is destined to come under the Lordship of Jesus Christ. While the earmarks of repression are still observable in the Soviet Union and while oppression still continues, the seeds of communism's downfall have already been planted.

Perhaps history will record that the unseen hand of God moved through Gorbachev and his policy of glasnost to insure the complete destruction of communism - an event scheduled on God's calendar in order to establish His kingdom on earth as it is in heaven.

In the West's fear of the spread of communism, we have missed a vital truth. There is a great destiny for this nation. The question has never been - "Could the West contain communism?" - but rather - "Could communism resist freedom?"

Some of the most obvious recipients of the benefits of perestroika have been the Soviet Jews. The number of Soviet Jews returning to Israel in 1990 exceeded the expected 150 thousand, as thousands of last minute arrivals landed in Israeli airports in late December before the impending Persian Gulf War. This year the total number of Soviet Jews returning to Israel under Gorbachev may approach one million.

Like King Cyrus, the Persian who promised safe passage to returning Jews coming out of the fallen Babylon in the 6th century B.C., Gorbachev is allowing an ancient prophecy to be fulfilled. The Prophet Jeremiah proclaimed that the Lord would bring "the sons of Israel from of the land of the north and from all the countries where he had banished them" (Jeremiah 16:14,15). Today Gorbachev is allowing Soviet Jews to be restored to their biblical homeland.

Financing this tremendous task, Christians and Jews from all over the world are sponsoring the Soviet Jews' safe passage out of the Soviet Union. Forbidden to take Soviet wealth out of the country, many Jews are being greeted at the Jerusalem airport by a banner that reads "International Christian Embassy Jerusalem."

Many Jews, who have been falsely taught that Christianity is at the source of the vast anti-semitism of Europe, are visibly overcome with emotion at the first sight of their homeland. The thought that Christians have actually helped them to come home is unbelievable. A great reconciliation of Jews and Christians around the world is occurring as a result of the sponsored airlifts.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(d0262bbe9d2356661a2e89321dfcc781_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(51514032c8ca341817228f39f1307b05_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Christian Youth International July 1991 Conference

8/91

Christian Youth International is now a bonafide campus movement in the Soviet Union!

A July 3-7 conference was attended by 2000 university students. Out of the many who attended, one thousand student leaders were selected to to be intensively trained as campus evangelists at three upcoming discipleship conferences in August, October, November and December. Then in January, a "Youth Celebration '92" conference will be held January 21-26. This will be attended by all the students who are saved as a result of the labor of the 1000 campus workers.

Exciting miracles took place at the July conference and several revivals broke out among the students in their cities in the following weeks.

* On Friday night, the glory of God fell during a healing service. Literally hundreds of students were healed and several notable miracles took place. Deaf ears were opened and eyesight was restored to several people.

* Following the conference, hundreds of students were saved at evangelistic meetings in the city of Kazan. An infant church has been birthed there. The plan of CYI is to send evangelism teams wherever revival breaks out. CYI will establish churches in the cities of the Soviet Union where many students are being won to the Lord.

How did such great fruit come to be harvested in such a short period of time? The move of the Holy Spirit in the Soviet Union is unprecedented - God is being glorified in this nation. Using a simple leadership training program, Bob Weiner, founder of Christian Youth International, has spurred rapid growth of this movement among university and high school students.

Earlier this year, 100 Soviet Christian leaders were interviewed and 20 were selected to go in teams of two to interview students in hundreds of cities all across the eleven time zones of the Soviet Union. 300 students attended a five day leadership conference in April. Each student was exhorted to believe God to win many other students to Christ. To equip them in their task, they were provided with 10,000 Bibles and hundreds of Jesus Brings New Life Bible study books in the Russian language.

A tremendous response soon followed - since January, the movement has increased over one-hundredfold. As the July conference began, there was the anticipation that God was doing something monumental among this group. The sessions consisted of celebratory praise and worship, which could begin in dead silence in the awesome presence of God, and then slowly accelerate into an explosive time of dancing and jubilant praise. Hundreds of students were baptized in an Olympic size swimming pool. Many others were filled with the Holy Spirit and delivered from demonic oppression.

The change in these young people was evident - many were transformed night by night - as they entered into a powerful time of anointed preaching, teaching and equipping. Five afternoon workshops, plus a morning and evening session, gave each student the opportunity to soak in over 50 hours of training during the five day conference.

Meals and lodging for the 2000 students were paid for by Christian Youth International. Bob Weiner reported that only one week before the commencement of the conference, as a sign of God's miraculous provision, tens of thousands of dollars poured in providing enough money to conpay for the total expenses of the conference including food and lodging for 2000 students and the printing of thousands of Bible study books.

Where will this revival take the young people of the Soviet Union? Several of the conference's speakers indicated that this revival is now reaching a greater intensity level than what transpired 20 years ago during the "Jesus Movement" in Southern California. It is evident that God is raising up a new generation of church leaders who will take the Soviet Union into the 21st century.

Some are predicting that this awakening could continue and may grow to the magnitude of the First Great Awakening of the 1740s, during which one-third of the American colonists were saved. If this is the case, then there is the real potential of harvesting over 100 million souls (one-third of the 300 million population of the Soviet Union) for the Kingdom of God before the year 2000. This awakening could turn into the greatest move of God in human history.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

America Tries to Make Sense of Soviet Politics

By Konstantin Pleshakov

A Soviet View of American Academia

An article reprinted from the Moscow News

August 4, 1991

The following article "America Tries to Make Sense of Soviet Politics" is representative of the outlook of the Soviet people. Giving an accurate critique of the political views of a cross section of America, Konstantin Pleshakov emphasizes the failed attempt of the Soviet government to restructure the socialist system.

Americans love to hear of change, especially crumbling totalitarianism, a boggy even their grandfathers never saw. But if after six years of change the Soviet Union is ready to accept Christmas food relief, it's a bizarre change. If you talk with academics at American universities about the Soviet Union you can see that they fall into several different categories:

Liberals of the 1960s

Their political views took shape on the crest of the leftwing movement in the U.S. They favor social experiment and leftwing views in general. They are sympathetic towards Marxism and distinguish it from Stalinism with a determination I can't comprehend: a liberal of the 60s ferociously criticizes every step taken by the Bush administration.

They like many features of state socialism in the USSR such as the non-existent "collectivism," "social security" and "egalitarianism." They screw up their eyes maliciously on hearing of private businesses. Liberals of the 60s are well off, they aren't like members of the US Communist Party, whom nobody likes. Among the academic community they are well known, people who live perhaps as comfortably as second secretaries of party central committees in the Soviet Republics.

They simply can't understand why Soviets don't want socialism any more. They say: "I hope your grandiose experiment will be carried through." God forbid.

Liberals of the 60s are enthusiastic about all Soviet leaders ranging from the Center (Gorbachev), towards the left wing (Yeltsin, Popov, Sobchak). For them Gorbachev is outside all criticism. They support active aid for the Soviet Union, something on the scale of the Marshall Plan. They are not naive. Especially if they are Sovietologists, they well understand the games Soviet bureaucrats play - which is why they support the idea of a Marshall Plan and Western control over its implementation.

Liberals of the 60s are consistent friends: the political preferences that took root when they were still young are a firm link with an USSR undergoing change. Whatever takes place in the Soviet Union, the liberals of the 60s are with us till the end.

Traditional liberals

They have no affiliation with the leftists. They value human rights above social experiments in other lands. They like the Soviet Union for the current change rather than its socialist past (as do the liberals of the 60s). Traditional liberals don't ignore those things liberals of the 60s like to forget (like bloodshed in Lithuania). They watch events in the Soviet Union with guarded optimism and regard its leaders with caution. They judge the situation with reference to traditional liberal ideas and most certainly see a considerable difference.

Traditional liberals are for aid to the USSR but they are stumped on seeing the gluttony of Soviet bureaucracy, disarray in Soviet society, the uncertainty of the Republic's position. Traditional liberals are sometimes amazed at Soviet endurance.

Tolerant conservatives

They appreciate our fear of a new mode of socialism - that's part of their system of values. What's happening today in the former "socialist camp" confirms their past predictions. For many years tolerant conservatives argued with liberals of the 60s about the USSR's history and future. Today tolerant democrats in the USSR behave in almost the same way tolerant conservatives predicted. This gives them great moral satisfaction. They criticize most of the Soviet leaders and mainly for good reasons. They take a detached view of the Soviet Union.

Whereas liberals of the 60s would like to see the socialist experiment continue, conservatives are fascinated with the new anti-socialist experiment. They are in no hurry to help the Soviet Union, being very cautious and not wishing to send investment down the drain and provide aid in dubious circumstances - when reforms are contradictory.

Caustic conservatives

They have insisted all along that the system should be destroyed. It has now finally collapsed. One Sovietologist caustically remarked: "They say Soviet perestroika has failed. It hasn't: communism has collapsed." Caustic conservatives should be happy, but they aren't for some reason. Mostly because they no longer have an enemy to contend with. All along they were busy fighting communism in one way or another and still call for vigilance. They aren't against helping the USSR on the whole, but do nothing to help.

What stumps tolerant conservatives is seen by caustic conservatives as an insurmountable obstacle.

Whether historians or traders, they still want to make sure their enemy is dead. They are not intimidated by the prospect of a possible loss of geopolitical balance in Eurasia if the Soviet Union breaks apart, or if it becomes depleted, angry and abandoned by the world community. Caustic conservatives do not wish to consider these dangers. They want to see the noxious system razed to the ground.

The Soviet Union is in disarray. A country Americans thought they knew well - the winter of Stalinism, mummified leaders, fighters for human rights - has all at once been turned into a formidable crossword puzzle. Today's Soviet Union does not fit any pattern. America is accustomed to the logic of categories of good and evil, black and white. In the USSR it is hard to find logic.

But the seventy-year-long winter has been followed by spring, hasn't it? Yes, it's spring, but a strange spring which history has never before known.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

An Analysis of the Soviet Awakening

By Jay Rogers
8/91

Since 1988, the year when the Soviet Union celebrated the "Millennium of Christianity" in Russia, religious groups have enjoyed comparative freedom and many churches have taken full advantage. Many existing churches have doubled or tripled in size since then; the vast majority of the new converts are under the age of 30; a growing number of Christian school teachers are introducing Jesus into the classroom; and many new churches are being planted to accomodate the surging tide of salvation.

There are also some serious problems to be countered by Christians; rather than coming into unity after years of persecution, many churches continue to be divided; and many cults, such as the Hare Krishnas, Mormons, Jehovah's Witnesses and the Unification Church, are also gaining new members.

On a positive side, Soviet leaders are meeting frequently with missionary evangelists; and laws have been passed which allow churches to establish missionary training schools which may incorporate foreign exchange programs as a part of their training.

According to one young Soviet Christian we interviewed: the greatest needs for the church are "mature servants who will come to the Soviet Union and do the work of pastors, evangelists, teachers, etc. to equip the new converts. Most of the Christians in Russia are new believers who want to work in the ministry. We need ministers from America to start new churches and shepherd the flock and to train people in local churches to be pastors."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

jrogers@forerunner.com

A Look at Mikhail Gorbachev: Can Perestroika Produce Democratic Freedom?

By Jay Rogers
8/91

In 1987, Mikhail Gorbachev released his famous work, Perestroika: New Thinking for Our Country and the World, the outline of his policy for the restructuring of the Soviet system. This is an overview of the plan he presented in April of 1985 to the Plenary Meeting of the Central Committee of the Communist Party. The Communist Party then endorsed his plan of Perestroika as their general policy line.

It was immediately heralded in the West as a breakthrough; a new openness or glasnost was proposed as a way of admitting the failures of the Soviet system and a means of engendering a mutual trust and understanding with the free nations. In America, publications such as Time magazine heralded Perestroika and glasnost as a move toward western-style democracy. Gorbachev was named "Man of the Year" and later "Man of the Decade" by Time and he received the Nobel Peace Prize.

By 1991, the economic demise of the USSR has been interpreted as a failure of Perestroika. Gorbachev announced recently that the Soviet Union would continue to try to move toward a system of reform under a government consisting of "reformed Communism." Although the Party has apparently fallen from favor with the people, and Gorbachev has renounced atheism and Marxism, his policy of Perestroika is still in place.

But what does Perestroika actually say to the West? Perestroika states emphatically from the very first chapter that its goal is a return to Leninist-Communism. In this work, Gorbachev maintained that the potential of socialism hadn't yet been realized. He made frequent appeals to western leaders for nuclear disarmament, "new thinking," and global environmentalism. A reading of Perestroika will show that these terms are just socialism dressed up in popular, western, free-world lingo. So what is really new about Perestroika?

Here is the plan in Gorbachev's own words:

"Perestroika is an urgent necessity arising from the profound processes of development in our socialist society." p.17

"The works of Lenin and his ideals of socialism remained for us an inexhaustible source of dialectical creative thought, theoretical wealth and political sagacity. His very image is an undying example of lofty moral strength, all-round spiritual culture and selfless devotion to the cause of the people and to socialism." p.25

"The Leninist period is indeed very important. It is instructive in that it proved the strength of Marxist-Leninist dialectics, the conclusions of which are based on an analysis of the actual historical situation.... The important thing was to translate it into the practical language of everyday life." p.26

"There are people in the West who would like to tell us that socialism is in a deep crisis and has brought our society to a dead end. That's how they interpret our critical analysis of the situation at the end of the seventies and beginning of the eighties. We have only one way out, they say: to adopt capitalistic methods of economic management and social patterns, to drift toward capitalism....

"To put an end to all the rumors and speculations that abound in the West about this, I would like to point out once again that we are conducting all out reforms in accordance with the socialist choice. We are looking within socialism, rather than outside of it, for the answers to all the questions that arise. We assess our successes and errors alike by socialist standards. Those who hope we shall move away from the socialist path will be greatly disappointed. Every part of our program of perestroika - and the program as a whole, for that matter - is fully based on the principle of more socialism and more democracy." p.36

Here in effect, is Gorbachev's plan. Allow basic human freedoms to function within the socialist state while bolstering the material productivity of the nation and the happiness of the individual:

"More socialism means more democracy, openness and collectivism in everyday life, more culture and humanism in production, social and personal relations among the people, more dignity and respect for the individual.... We will proceed toward better socialism rather than away from it.... We want more socialism and, therefore, more democracy." p.37

More socialism and more democracy?

Perestroika is - in theory - a form of socialistic democracy. But it differs greatly from the American form of democracy. The Russians themselves are a people in search of democracy. For thousands of years they have been oppressed by invasions of barbaric tribes, placed under the thumb of Czarist Russia, then ruled by the iron fist of Stalinist Communism, and now being ruled with renewed Communist leadership.

Communist Russia has been ruled with the same spirit of oppression as during the time of the Czars. The spirit hasn't changed - still there is oppression - only now it is through a committee. But through all the centuries there has been a gradual change. Ivan the Terrible - a madman, Peter the Great and Josef Stalin all ruled over a nation that was in search of democracy. This long history brings us to the present day - a time when real and lasting progress can be made.

During the past five years, Gorbachev has continually vacillated between concessions to Communist hardliners while gradually opening up the Soviet Union to the West. In a meeting before the Communist Party in July 1991, he reportedly made his strongest denunciations of the socialist system.

Whether he first realized it or not, Gorbachev started a process in 1987 which has prepared his country for mass evangelism by Christian missionaries and for a resulting freedom which can only come when their society is leavened by the gospel. Western Christians, if they avail themselves to the Holy Spirit and see beyond the media smoke screen to the real issues at hand, can tip the scales of destiny in favor of a lasting freedom.

The question that needs to be asked here is: Can socialism and freedom coexist as Gorbachev once maintained? Or is it a system that must be done away with completely before freedom can reign? We must answer: True lasting freedom can only come when the socialist system is done away with and a Russian Constitution is ratified on the basis of the natural law.

The Natural Law

What is the natural law? For most of America, this term is forgotten; yet it is the foundation on which our entire society is based. This question reveals the fact that we have forgotten that it is the Judeo-Christian ethic upon which our laws and government are based. Although not every American has been Jewish or Christian in personal orientation, Americans have until recently held to a Judeo-Christian worldview. This worldview is based on the natural law.

Simply: The natural law states that governments are founded for the purpose of protecting rights, not granting rights. All human beings are born into the world apart from any rulership of government; the only laws they are bound to be subject to are God's laws found in the Bible. Men should enter into citizenship of a civil government by consent, not by force. When we enter into this citizenship, the Bible commands us to obey the civil authorities, because even they have been instituted by God (1 Peter 2:13-17).

There are God-given rights which are self-evident; that is, even people without the Bible can see them (Romans 1:18-20). These rights are life, liberty and property. These rights exist even without civil government. The natural limit of government is to protect these rights. However, only those people who are able to be self-governing under God's laws found in the Bible are capable of enjoying the full privileges of these rights.

Thomas Jefferson, the author of the Declaration of Independence, said that natural rights were also moral duties:

"Man has been subjected by his Creator to the moral law, of which his feelings, or conscience as it is sometimes called, are the evidence with which his Creator has furnished him.... The moral duties which exist between individual and individual accompany them into a state of society ... their Maker not having released them from those duties on their forming themselves into a nation."

The Constitution of the United States assumes that the American people are fully capable of being self-governing. Thus the Constitution confirms both the natural law and the Biblical law as the basis of a moral code which every citizen is bound to obey. The sole purpose of the Constitution is to "secure the blessings of liberty" which a God-fearing people ought to enjoy.

The United States Constitution

The basic outline for the first working democratic republic is found in the United States Constitution. Whereas the Soviet Union has drafted several constitutions since their Leninist beginnings, the United States has drafted only one in its history. The body of the U.S. Constitution remains completely unchanged after over 200 years. This is baffling to some Russian students; during my recent trips to the Soviet Union some of them wanted to know why. To them it was a violation of the law of progress.

The fact that the U.S. Constitution remains successful and unchanged is not due to the fact that we are a democratic society; or that we have a free market; or that there is a comprehensive Bill of Rights. Our country has a successful Constitution because it is based on the main premises of the natural law. The American documents of liberty are merely extensions of philosophical reasonings based on biblical principles. The Declaration of Independence and the Constitution outline our basic liberties and propose a structure that limits the powers of government to protect those freedoms.

The success of the American system is founded firmly on a biblical basis of government and an understanding of the natural law. While many countries seek to copy the American free market system or impose laws which guarantee basic freedoms, they will always fail to produce true liberty unless their form of government implies an understanding of the natural law. Unless the framers of any national constitution understand that it is the Bible which provides the laws and principles upon which a successful, free society must be based, their system is destined to fail.

But what did Gorbachev have to say about the American system?

"I know that American propaganda - yes propaganda - presents America as a 'shining city atop a hill.' America has a great history. Who will question the importance of the American revolution in mankind's social progress, or the scientific - technological genius of America and its achievements in literature, architecture and art? All this America has. But America today also has acute social and other problems, to which not only has American society not yet found an answer, but, even worse, it is looking for answers in places and in such a way that may lead to others having to pay.... I admit frankly that what we know does not support the idea of the United States of America as a 'shining city atop a hill.'" p.215

Looking at our current failures - which are moral failures due to America's recent rejection of Christian values - Gorbachev rejected the American system as a whole. It is a shame that he did not understand that the root of America's problems lies in the decay of the root of America's success: biblically based social order and the innate freedom of each individual to responsibly govern himself under God's laws found in the Bible.

Nevertheless our form of government ought to be the model - a city set on a hill for all the world to see - which other nations would copy. Any democracy which is based on a moral code which agrees with the natural law and the Bible is destined to succeed.

The socialist mentality defines democracy as collectivism. Collectivism states that the worth of a person is determined by what he contributes to the group. The society benefits from each individual's productivity. The individual benefits from the privileges he enjoys as a productive citizen. For instance, doctors get more benefits (but not in the form of capital) than factory workers. The deception here is that a person is valued for his productivity, yet is not allowed to share in the wealth he produces. Benefits and privileges take their place.

In direct opposition to collectivism, Christianity teaches the principle of individuality. All of us are unique, yet God does not value us by what we produce. God also gives us the right as individuals to possess property. The principle of private ownership of property gives birth to the idea of self-government. If we are self-governed according to the laws of God, then the material wealth produced by our own industry will naturally increase.

Each of us has been created equal in the sight of God with certain inalienable rights. When individuality, private ownership, self-government and industry are all working together, a free market economy arises. To expect Communism to produce these ideals is foolish. In fact, the very definition of Communism is the direct opposite of these principles: collectivism, state ownership of business, state control of individual rights, and a government controlled economy.

Retaining a form of socialism, Gorbachev once hoped to revive his country by giving the people certain rights, and allowing a degree of private ownership and capitalism in the form of foreign investment. But is this plan feasible? Can socialism and democracy work together?

Democratic Freedom

The form of government the United States enjoys is correctly labelled as a Democratic Republic. It is democratic because there is an underlying assumption that all men are created by God with certain equal and inalienable rights. We are republican in the sense that all legislation and judicial proceedings are done through representation of the people. The tyranny of the majority is eliminated through the judicial branch of government which is appointed by the existing executive representative. The tyranny of the individual is eliminated by frequent, democratic elections by the people.

American government is truly "of the people, by the people and for the people." There is also the sense that all freedoms are inalienable; that is, our rights are God-given. Rights cannot be given by the government or taken away by the government. When a government becomes tyrannical, it becomes the God-given duty of the people to overthrow it.

In the 1980s, Mikhail Gorbachev believed that freedom and socialism could coexist - and the policy of Perestroika was birthed. His recent denunciations of Communist policies and the resulting coup by Communist hardliners may be the result of the hard experiences of the past six years.

Let's continue to look at the differences between socialistic democracy and the freedom based on the natural law by examining the God-given rights of private ownership of property, and freedom of the press and religion.

A Free Market

Privately owned property is the basis of a free market economy. Under the Soviet plan of Perestroika instituted in 1985, citizens of the Soviet Union were allowed to establish private enterprises and own and buy private businesses. The chief goal of this plan was to encourage foreign investment in order to stimulate the economy. Presently over 90 percent of all the businesses in the Soviet Union are run by the state.

The move to a free market economy is a slow change. In fact, most of the Soviet people are not capable of paying the exorbitant registration fees required to begin and operate private businesses. Most are discouraged by the immense amount of bureaucratic paper work involved in starting such an enterprise.

Commercial businesses are, for the most part, unprofitable because even highly motivated businessmen are constrained by many legal restrictions placed on their enterprise by the government. To compound this problem, once the enterprise is established, it must out of necessity cooperate with the state run businesses since the private sector is not as yet fully developed. The immense waste of time and financial investment due to government regulations ensures that most private businesses will remain small.

Hence, the God-given right to property is still being violated by undue control by the Soviet government. The reforms have given the Soviet people greater freedom than in the times of Stalin, or even Brezhnev, but these freedoms are cannot be compared to the inalienable freedoms of the West.

Freedom of the Press

Two of our inalienable liberties include freedom of expression and the press. The Communist government has acquiesced to these two liberties. But the Communist government is granting concessions to the people, when each one of these rights is already God-given according to the natural law. If the people realized that liberty comes from the Lord, then they would know that they are already free.

In registering the newspaper Predvestnik in the Ukraine (one of the more progressive republics) we found that any group of four or more citizens with official documentation may register a newspaper. The price of registration was 1000 rubles, low by American standards, but for an individual Soviet citizen equivalent to almost four months salary!

After this fee has been paid the government may deny registration or close the newspaper at any time. This arrangement encourages foreign investment and the growth of newspapers run by successful companies, but restricts freedom of the press for the individual and almost abolishes individual initiative in publications.

Freedom of Religion

There is more freedom of religion in the Soviet Union today than at any other time in Communist history. There is almost unlimited freedom of religious expression and there is an openness among the people which makes evangelism simple and easy. The difficulty comes when churches are formed and they wish to meet and establish themselves in their communities. The Soviet government requires each church that is meeting regularly to register with the state.

It is here that churches become subject to the arbitrary requirements of government officials. Independent charismatic churches are routinely denied registration. Often the state will require them to submit a full summary of doctrines and practices which must be approved by the state. They will also scrutinize "the psychology of the church" before registration will be made complete. The Soviet government allows the establishment of new churches but regulates and controls the process. Consequently, many young churches refuse to register and continue to be harassed by the KGB.

Guaranteeing free press and worship to the people while striving to maintain the socialist apparatus is like trying to mix oil and water. It simply cannot be done. The two are based on mutually exclusive principles.

Freedom of the press and religion are based on the assumption that these are rights given by God to the people. Socialism, on the other hand is a state-run ideal, in which freedoms are given to the people by the state. In fact, the people of communist countries often act as though freedom is something that the government gives you. The people themselves must be educated and liberated from this idea.

Hope for the Future

Hope for reform within the Soviet Union can only come when the gospel is spread throughout their society. Only when biblical principles become ingrained in the hearts and minds of the people can true democratic freedom result. Within this process there must be Christian education. The people of the Soviet Union must begin to realize that the government does not exist to provide freedom. Governments exist only to protect property - and most importantly: liberty of conscience.

Liberty of conscience includes every democratic freedom which we as Americans hold as God-given inalienable rights. A tyrannical government is one which invades the rights of conscience of the people. Furthermore, this type of government will eventually control all the property and the economy. Christian education is needed to prevent this type of government.

Education of Christian principles secures free government to future generations; without it tyranny will reign. An ignorant people will quickly become a people enslaved. In fact, it should come as no surprise that the initial goal of communism has been to gain control of all newspapers and effectively indoctrinate the people by squelching all forms of personal expression.

Our hope for the future of the Soviet Union is a bright one. When Communism finally grinds to a halt - under Gorbachev or another leader - the gospel must continue to be preached until it takes root all across the land. Only then can individuals be self-governing under the laws of God. They will then be able to choose representatives who will form strong local governments. The government will exist solely to protect the individual rights of the people and secure their property from theft and foreign invasion.

As the gospel is preached, Christians will become responsible for educating the people. The rights of individuals will be protected in future generations and the Soviet Union will be known for its high standard of morality. Love for God, family and country will be the chief characteristic of a people who are truly governed by a just and loving God.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Predvestnik: The Voice of a New Generation

By Jay Rogers

8/91

In July of this year, a student newspaper was established in the Soviet Union. This publication will go forth on the university campuses as a voice to the youth of our generation; it will be a bright and shining light in a dark place. Exactly one day after the coup, this newspaper was printed in Moscow. We thank God for His miraculous timing!

Choosing a Name

The name Forerunner translates several different ways in the Russian language. We wanted our subscribers and supporters in the United States to immediately identify this newspaper as the Russian language Forerunner, so initially the name Predtecha was chosen. Predtecha means literally, "one who runs before." However, we discovered that this is an archaic name associated with Russia's past. The word Predtecha appears in the Russian Bible, but it is not generally used or understood.

So another name - Predvestnik - was chosen. Predvestnik means literally "Foreteller." It has the same meaning as a "herald," or a "prophet." This is the meaning we want to convey. This newspaper will go forth in the spirit and power of Elijah to preach the gospel in all the Soviet Union.

The Need

There is an unprecedented opportunity in the Soviet Union today to saturate this society with Christian literature. The average Soviet citizen has been raised in total atheism - in a world where the name of Jesus Christ was rarely mentioned. To counter this famine for the Word of God, New Testaments and Bibles in the Russian language are being delivered by the ton to the existing churches and ministries. Speaking with Christian students, I discovered that most Christians in the Soviet Union now have Bibles. There is now an even greater need for other types of Christian literature.

This is where Predvestnik comes in. I will be a "new, sharp threshing sledge with double edges." It will openly challenge the principles of Marxist-Leninism, while presenting a fresh, exciting gospel message to the youth. There are now no nationally distributed Christian youth newspapers of this type in the Soviet Union. From time to time, local editions of Christian newspapers will spring up in the western cities, but many perish due to a lack of financial support, equipment, trained staff and supplies.

Due to this lack, the potential for Predvestnik is very great. There is a great demand for Christian literature caused by a virtual spiritual desert. The vision for Predvestnik is to be a vast lake full of God's Word at the center of this desert.

There is in reality an almost unlimited demand for Christian literature in the Soviet Union. Our first printing, 100,000 copies, is only a drop in the bucket compared to the vastness of what God desires to supply. With an exchange rate of above 30 rubles to the dollar, we were able to supply the formation of this newspaper at a low cost. For example, $2000 was able to cover all the expenses for myself and a staff of four people living and travelling in the Soviet Union for one month as well as printing 100,000 copies of the first edition.

Now is the best time for the beginning of such a publication. We are beginning this great work with virtually perfect timing. We have the opportunity to become the first nationally distributed Christian publication of this type in the Soviet Union.

Financial Support

This project is being funded by friends and subscribers of The Forerunner. We wish to thank every person who has contributed thus far. The support of this newspaper is one of the most fruitful investments in missionary work that you can make. Consider that the average salary in the Soviet Union is 260 rubles per month. At the current exchange rate (30 rubles to the dollar), a gift of 100 dollars could pay for the support of one staff member for an entire year!

We hired several Christian journalists, photographers and artists in Kiev as full time staff. Each comes with a recommendation from a pastor of a thriving church in Kiev. Alexey Salapatov, the managing editor, is a computer science student at an institute in Kiev most of the year. He and Roman Medvid, another computer programmer, are currently responsible for the editorial work of Predvestnik. They will continue to provide oversight and leadership of the newspaper and later in the year staff members will be added.

An apartment in Kiev will be leased as the main office for Predvestnik. We also want to provide a photocopier and a $2000 professional quality post-script laser printer (currently we have an ink jet printer) and provide supplies which are impossible to obtain in the Soviet Union.

There are many road blocks when working within the socialist system. The recent upheaval in the Soviet government is one such hindrance. Therefore, all of these plans are tentative and subject to change. However, in the formative stages of this newspaper, God has moved miraculously to remove many roadblocks. The providence of God has been evident from the very beginning and I believe that He will continue to provide the finances necessary to complete foundation laying of this newspaper. I believe that the current obstacles will be taken out of the way.

We are building for the long term, but there is a sense of urgency to act now to make this publication solid and capable of supporting itself if the need arises.

Would you consider supporting this project at this time? Now is the time for the harvest in the Soviet Union! Your financial giving is greatly needed and appreciated.

- Jay Rogers

Managing Editor, The Forerunner
Editorial Consultant, Predvestnik

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

A Providential History of Russia

By Jay Rogers
8/91

An early Christian legend says that it was the Apostle Andrew who first preached in the region of Scythia on a missionary journey. Stopping on his way back on a bend in the River Dnieper, he planted a flag on its shore prophesying that one day a great city would arise in this place. The city of Kiev arose in this spot as early as the fifth century.

The Slavs, who form the nucleus of the Russian population, emigrated to Russia from the neighborhood of the Carpathian mountains. From the earliest period from which we have any record of them, they are known as a free people, strongly opposed to subjection.

By the ninth century, the Dnieper with its many tributaries formed the boundary of the Slavonic settlements to the east. On the north, they reached the great Valdai plateau and the great lake region. On the west and south, they touched the German settlements, and on the southwest, bordered on the Byzantine Empire. In the middle of the ninth century, we find them split up into numerous tribes settled on the soil and engaged chiefly in hunting and agriculture.

They were a continental people, without a military organization, and on account of the endless warfare between the tribes were but little able to resist the inroads of invaders - the Vikings, Mongols and Turks - who now pressed them from the north, south and east.

The Foundation of the Russian Empire

It was the invasions of the Vikings or Northmen which forced a union of northwestern Russian principalities under a Scandinavian chieftain named Rurik. The very first warlike expeditions of the Vikings had been directed against the Slavs. The Vikings established themselves on the east coast of Sweden and sent frequent expeditions to the northern frontier of Russia.

The Slavs and Finns of northwestern Russia came to have great respect for the bravery and power of the Scandinavians and finally decided to call them to their aid - a move which would protect them from the crueler invasions of the Mongols and Turks. They sent to Rurik, a great Scandinavian chief, saying, "Our land is great and has strength in abundance, but it lacks order and justice. Come and take possession and rule over us."

In response to this invitation, Rurik gathered together his kindred and a company of armed followers, and established himself on the northern frontier of the Slavs. He soon became very powerful and about the year 862 made Novrograd (about 100 miles south of the present St. Petersburg) the capital of an empire stretching from the lakes in the north to the sources of the Dnieper in the south.

In the meanwhile, two Viking chiefs by the name of Askold and Dir had wrested Kiev from the eastern Slavs and established Scandinavian rule over them. The first certain date in Russian history is the year 865, during which Askold led an expedition against Byzantium. This expedition was successful, and Askold's fleet was destroyed in the sea of Marmora. The barbarians attributed this disaster to the efficiency of the prayers of the Christians, and, as a result, Askold and many of his followers embraced Christianity. In the following year, the Church was established at Kiev.

Kiev - The First Capital of Russia

The death of Rurik occurred in 879, when he was succeeded by the oldest member of his family, Oleg. This ruler conquered the eastern Slavs, put Askold and Dir out of the way by an act of treachery and made Kiev the capital of the Empire. The great Byzantine city, Constantinople, was now the goal of the Russian Monarchs. In 907, Oleg reached the gates of Constantinople and obliged the emperor to pay a large ransom for the city and to agree to a treaty of free commerce between the Russians and Greeks.

The kings descended from Rurik gradually consolidated the monarchy, which was destined to become one of the foremost powers of Europe. The state came to be called Russia, from Ruotsi (Corsairs), the name given by the Finns to the Norse conquerors.

In 988, Vladimir I adopted the Greek Orthodox Church as the official state religion. He ordered that churches and priests be established in all towns, and that the people be baptized. Thousands of people formed lines at the river Dnieper and were baptized en masse.

Although it was a forced Christianization of Russia, it was beneficial to the progress of the society in general. From this time, monks from Byzantium and architects, artisans and merchants from Germany, Italy and Greece, spread languages, customs and ideas of the Christian nations of the East and West. They brought their culture to the fierce tribes of the North until by the eleventh century the Russians were on the same level of civilization as the people of western Europe.

The Tartar Conquests

But then in the thirteenth century, this budding civilization was rudely crushed by invading Tartar hordes, who overran the unfortunate land and for more than two hundred years held the Russian princes in a degrading bondage, forcing them to pay homage and tribute, and inflicting upon the people the most horrible atrocities. Then Russia was cut off from the rest of Europe, and the civilization and nationalization of the Slavs was delayed until the fifteenth century.

In 1301, the government of Kiev moved to Muscovy, or Moscow. Ten years later the See of the Orthodox Church followed. This was the foundation of Czarist Russia. Moscow was fortified as a protection against the Tartars. Over a 300 year period the city was gradually enlarged, the Kremlin was built and Moscow gained economic control over the surrounding principalities.

The Czars

In the 16th century Ivan the Terrible was crowned the first emperor of Russia. Ivan saw himself as a new Caesar and promoted a system of peasants and nobles. While the rest of Europe was moving into the Renaissance, the Reformation and the Age of Discovery, the Russian Czars were establishing medieval feudalism as a way of life. The next one hundred years were marked by civil wars, peasant uprisings, foreign invasions and treachery.

In the 17th century, the Romanovs founded a dynasty that ruled Russia for the next 300 years. Under the Romanovs, the czar's power increased dramatically, local governments weakened and the Orthodox Church was exploited to fix the status of the peasants. Expansionist policies continued, Siberia was settled and vast areas of land were incorporated into Russia.

The most powerful of the Romanovs was Peter the Great (ruled 1689-1725). Peter was determined to open a window to western ideas and brought tradesmen from Europe to Russia to train his people. He fought a war against Sweden and incorporated Karelia, Finland, Estonia and Livonia into his Empire. The city of St. Petersburg (Leningrad) was founded and southern acquisitions were taken after a war with Persia.

But even with all the land acquisitions and enlightenment that was coming into Russia, the peasants remained cruelly oppressed. Catherine the Great and Alexander I continued to expand the empire during their reigns. By the 19th century, the Russian Empire included part of Poland and stretched all the way to Alaska and northern Californian coast. By the time of Alexander's death, Russia was the largest country in the world. They had resisted Napoleon, but unrest among the peasants mounted and many of Russia's young aristocrats plotted to overthrow the government.

Nicholas I succeeded Alexander and, frightened by an attempted coup during the early years of his reign, began one of the most repressive regimes in Russian history. Ironically, this period also was the era of the great authors, Tolstoy, Dostoyevsky, Pushkin and Gogol, and the composer, Tchaikovsky. Dostoyevsky prophetically warned his nation against the consequences of atheistic thinking which was at work in the minds of Russian intellectuals. "If there is no God," he wrote, "then everything is permissible."

Nicholas was followed by his son, Alexander II who began a great reform of the system his ancestors had created. He became known as the "Czar Liberator." Nicholas survived many assassination attempts by radicals who wanted either socialism or anarchy. In 1881, the revolutionaries assassinated him. If Nicholas had lived longer, Russia may have entered the 20th century as a democratic society.

Alexander III relied on the army and established a secret police (the forerunner of the KGB) to quell further uprisings. He made the Jews scapegoats for his father's murder, forced them to live in certain provinces, and subjected them to periodic pogroms, or organized massacres. During this time many Jews emigrated to the United States. Alexander also turned back many of his father's reforms.

The Last of the Czars

The collapse of the imperial regime came in the early 20th century. Nicholas II, a weak ruler who faced serious political and economic problems during his reign and suffered an unexpected defeat in the Russo-Japanese war. On January 22, 1905, a large crowd of peasants followed a priest to the Winter Palace in St. Petersburg to present a petition to the Czar. At the palace troops fired into the crowd, killing several hundred people. The incident is known as "Bloody Sunday" and spurred a worker's strike which paralyzed the faltering nation.

Czar Nicholas granted a constitution which gave voting rights, freedom of the press and assembly to the people. A legislative body called the Duma functioned on through the first World War. Nicholas rode a popular crest of patriotism for czar, Church and country at the outbreak of the war, but faced with crushing defeats by the Germans, food shortages and a shattered economy, the people deposed him in 1917.

The Duma met to organize a provisional government on March 15. A legislative body composed of socialists and liberal democrats was formed and tried to restore public order. Headed by Alexander F. Kerensky, the Provisional Government seemed for a fleeting time to be steering Russia toward a democratic form of government. But they made several mistakes: they allowed the rival Bolsheviks to form a rival political structure throughout Russia; they freed political prisoners allowing the exiled revolutionaries Lenin and Trotsky to return to Russia; and they vowed to continue the war with Germany.

The October Revolution

The Germans reacted to the Provisional Government's decision to continue the war by supplying the Bolsheviks with huge sums of cash and by secretly conveying the exiled Lenin from Switzerland to Russia. Born Vladimir Ilych Ulyanov, Lenin was a brilliant student of Marxism and began to see himself as a prophet of the Communist revolution. Lenin developed an intense hatred for God, the Orthodox Church, the clergy, the czar, and the Jews.

After further military defeat, the Provisional Government began to lose the favor of the people. The Bolsheviks seized power using their paramilitary force, the Red Guard. Lenin and Trotsky came to the forefront of the revolution as the new leaders of Russia. When Lenin allowed the people of Russia to go to the polls, they voted overwhelmingly against the Bolsheviks and gave the Communists only one quarter of the seats in the Constituent Assembly.

Lenin's solution was to declare that the election was not valid because it had occurred too soon after the revolution to be meaningful. He forcefully cleared the Assembly with the aid of Bolshevik soldiers. For the next three years civil war raged between Russian "Whites" and "Reds." Leon Trotsky's Red Army put an end to all uprisings by 1920 and a Communist dictatorship began.

Lenin began a long standing policy of the Soviet Union: hostility toward all forms of Christianity. In the early years after the revolution it was the Orthodox Church that suffered the full brunt of persecution. Protestant churches enjoyed comparative freedom and took the full advantage, but it was not for long.

The Reign of Terror

The bloodiest reign of terror in modern history, which surpassed Hitler's attempted genocide of the Jews, was the rulership of Josef Stalin. During the 1930s and 40s, millions of people were killed in Stalin's purges. Many of these people were Christians.

Then World War II abruptly changed the situation. Exploiting the Russian nationalism of the Orthodox Church, concessions were made between Stalin and Christian leaders. A relaxation of oppression led to a spiritual revival in the Soviet Union during the war.

Post War Russia

This relative freedom did not last long, however, as Nikita Krushchev came to power in the 1950s. Krushchev unleashed a vicious attack against the Church which lasted until his fall from power in 1964. Half the Orthodox churches in the country were closed during this time and Baptist and Pentecostal churches suffered as well. This militantly atheistic policy has affected all the churches in the Soviet Union. Communist policy toward the Church has swung between violent persecution and subtle propaganda, but at no time has the Communist Party officially abandoned its declared aim of destroying Christianity.

In the midst of these persecutions, there have appeared a group of vocal Christian dissidents within the Soviet Union, who have kept up the prophetic tradition of Tolstoy and Dostoyevsky in calling their nation back to God. Most notable among these Soviet dissidents is Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn.

Solzhenitsyn, author of The Gulag Archipelago, a narrative which describes his imprisonment under Stalin, has also compiled a collection of essays written by some of the Soviet Union's most brilliant thinkers, the majority of whom also happen to be Christians. The following excerpts are taken from From Under the Rubble:

"Mysteriously and unsuspected by the busy multitudes, Christian consciousness, once almost defunct, is stealing back. It is as if a door had opened while nobody was looking. Why is this rebirth taking place in our country, where Christianity is attacked particularly systematically and with great brutality, while the rest of the world suffers a decline of faith and religious feeling?

"Backsliding and denials notwithstanding, we live in a Christian culture in a Christian age, and it is Christianity that is the fermenting agent, the 'yeast of the world,' causing history to rise like dough in a trough, not only in the past but in the future as well. We are profoundly convinced that Christianity alone possesses enough motive force gradually to inspire and transform our world."1

"We discover with astonishment that so-called rationalist humanism actually lacks an adequate rational basis for its defense of the dignity and inalienable rights of the human personality - for which it has often risked both life and limb. The American Founding Fathers who many years ago first propounded the 'eternal rights of man and the citizen' postulated that every human being bears the form and likeness of God; he therefore has an absolute value, and consequently also the right to be respected by his fellows.

"Rationalism, positivism and materialism successively destroyed the memory of this absolute source of human rights. The unconditional equality of persons before God was replaced by the conditional equality of human individuals before the law."2

Despite the Marxist mandate to sweep aside the principles of Christianity, the strength of the Church continued to grow behind the Iron Curtain. The principles of communism, which were cultivated in the Soviet Union for nearly a century, never achieved the utopia which Marx foresaw. Instead, the predictions of Russia's prophets are now beginning to come to pass.

From under the rubble of a fallen system, there is now arising a new hope. Communism's downfall has been precipitated by the presence of an overcoming Church which has withstood all persecution and has now been vindicated by the God of history. The Soviet Union has been destined for one of the greatest spiritual revivals of all time.

The Second Christianization of Russia

Travelling recently in the Soviet Union we encountered growing spiritual fervor among the people. Coupled with this revival has been an almost complete rejection of Marxist-Leninism among the people. Coupled with this rejection, Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev had recently loosened the shackles of restraint on religious freedom. It is unclear at this point what the recent change in power will mean for the Soviet Christians. However, a spiritual force has been unleashed which will eventually transform this great nation.

It has been over a thousand years since the first Christianization of Russia, which consisted of a forced baptism of Vladimir's subjects in the river Dnieper. For the first time in history, we see the hope of a spiritual awakening that would spread throughout the fabric of Russian society. The shakings and turmoil that is making the daily news is an indication of what is happening in the spiritual world. We must remember that God and not man is in control of the Soviet Union.

1. A.B. "The Direction of Change," From Under the Rubble, Little, Brown, and Company, 1974, p.146-147.
2. Vadim Borisov, "Personality and National Awareness," From Under the Rubble , Little, Brown, and Company, 1974, p. 200.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Mikhail Gorbachev quote

Quote of the Month
9/91

"Only Jesus Christ could take a few loaves of bread and feed the thousands ... Only Jesus Christ could solve problems such as these."

- Mikhail Gorbachev

On describing the problems posed to him with the breakup of the 15 republics of the Soviet Union.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

The One-Way Mirror

By Jay Rogers
9/91

Standing in the city square of Kiev last July, I saw something that prefigured the downfall of the communist government one month before it happened.

I was visiting a small church in the Ukraine made up mostly of young people - teenagers and young adults - five of whom are establishing a newspaper in the Soviet Union similar to The Forerunner. That day we had been to the River Dnieper. Three young converts had been baptized in the river by their pastor, completing a Christian tradition that has been taking place for two thousand years. But for the Kievan beach-goers it was a strange novelty. Many stopped and watched the event and stayed and listened to the pastor's sermon on the meaning of baptism.

Remarkably, this group of young Christians then decided to preach the gospel in the city square. One of the young men who had just been baptized wanted to publicly declare his faith to the thousands of people passing through the square after working hours. As I stood and watched, I noticed above us a large hammer and sickle insignia on a building. In the background was the Ukrainian government building ornate with communist symbols engraved in stone. Directly across the street was a three story high statue of Lenin. I then realized that only a few years before preaching the message of Christianity in public was forbidden.

Scores of people gathered to hear, some immediately rejected the message and walked on, and others stopped to listen intently and asked questions. Many were given the address to the church and were invited to a service. It was still a novelty - like the baptism an hour before - most Kievans had never seen such a spectacle.

And yet I realized that the "spectacle of the message of the cross" has always been the life-blood of the Christian movement. This is exactly how the gospel originally spread throughout the World during the Early Church era (33-325 AD). The New Testament has a lot to say about the "spectacle" or the "foolishness of preaching." According to one description the Christian message has always been divisive (2 Cor. 2:15-17). People hearing the gospel message either embrace it for its life-changing simplicity, or they mockingly scoff at its foolishness and reject it.

On American campuses the story is the same. From Harvard Square to the UC Berkeley campus, preaching evangelists often show up. Most will walk on by undistracted by a common event. A few students will grasp at the heart of what is being said. Others greet the preacher as a buffoon, a clown, a sideshow of entertainment.

But on this warm, sunny day in the Ukraine, the preaching was incredible. Gazing up at the Soviet flag, the statue of Lenin, and the communist symbols in the square, I felt that the power of a kingdom was being shaken ... and it was. This wasn't simply a public square; it was an arena for displaying the power of God through the Church. These young people were an army and the legions of hell - the communist legacy in the Ukraine - were about to be vanquished through the power of their words.

In the Bible God says: "Is not My word like a hammer that breaks a rock into pieces?" (Jeremiah 23:29).

Upon returning to the United States, I watched the hourly news reports of the failed coup attempt against Mikhail Gorbachev and the resulting ouster of the communist governments of all 15 republics. The most incredible scene was that of the city square in Kiev. On my television screen, I saw the demolition of the communist insignia in the very same square which I had just visited. Hammers were smashing the name of Vladimir Illych Lenin on the base of his statue to pieces.

All over the Soviet Union statues of communist heroes were being toppled. One Latvian man - obviously a Christian - said: "We just tore down a monument to Lenin, perhaps there should be something to be put in its place. It should be replaced by a monument to Jesus Christ."

The Christian movement in the USSR, so often ignored by the western media, was now being recognized. There was certainly something miraculous about the failure of the coup. Communism wasn't defeated from the earth, it was vanquished by the powers of heaven. The New Testament speaks of "the principalities and the powers of the heavenly realm." This is a description of spiritual beings - angels and demons - which war over cities and towns, battling for the hearts and minds of men. The Church is described as the showcase for God's spiritual power.

"His intent was that now, through the Church, the manifold wisdom of God should be made known to the principalities and powers in the Heavenly realms" (Ephesians 3:10).

In our Western culture of materialism - often devoid of lofty spiritual ideas - many would scoff at the idea of demonic forces holding power over a city. But was there ever a force so rightfully described as demonic as the scourge of Stalinist Russia? From the viewpoint of the physical sciences, there are theorems in the field of quantum mechanics which allow for the necessity of parallel universes. Would it be strange to discover that there are other created beings besides ourselves which inhabit our world?

A good analogy of the natural realm and the spiritual realm would be to consider what we can see with the human eye of the total light spectrum. If we could see past the natural colors that we discern with the unaided eye, we would discover a vaster spectrum. Likewise, there is a vaster spectrum of experience than what we can see in the material world.

It is as if there is a one-way mirror that divides the universe. We see only the reflection; but on the other side we are being watched by spiritual rulers - the principalities and powers of the spiritual realm. And it is the Church that is being watched most intently.

As I watched young Christians preaching to their Ukrainian countrymen, I also was aware of some other groups - Hare Krishnas passing out literature near the subway entrances, anti-nuclear protesters stimulating the political consciences of the people, etc. - but I knew that there was only one message that was being heard by the powers that controlled that city.

How strange it must have been for those powers to look down on the earth and see young Christians with a message going forth like a hammer to smash their power, like a fire to consume them. And how strange for them to know that their allotted time of rulership was almost up. The last sands in the hour glass had almost sifted away. And their kingdom was about to be supplanted by another Kingdom which would last forever.

- Jay Rogers

Managing Editor, The Forerunner

Editorial Consultant, Predvestnik

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Reforms Suggested for Soviet Schools

9/91

In May, a pilot curriculum for Soviet secondary schools was reviewed by the Supreme Soviet Education Ministry, which last year asked Wheaton Bible College professors to suggest a curriculum that would instill moral values. A 1990 survey by the ministry showed that 81% of the adult population in the Soviet Union were still "seeking a belief system."

On the reading list, to be test-taught in 100 schools next Fall, are the Illustrated New Testament, Pilgrims Progress, Know Why You Believe, and In Pursuit of Holiness. If accepted, the curriculum will be taught to all 70 million Soviet secondary students.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!

It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

White House Predicts Revival of Christianity in Russia

9/91

President Bush's foreign advisors are expecting a strong reemergence of Christianity in Russia, bringing with it a moral framework that has long been missing from Soviet political life.

This revival is coming at a time when the moral problems of this society threaten to hinder positive change. Alcoholism, in particular, is a serious problem - the life expectancy of Soviet men was 10 years lower than that of men in the West during the 1970s. This is partially due to the hard drinking of a large portion of the population.

Now Soviet leaders are looking for positive moral guidance. Evangelist Billy Graham met with Soviet leaders Gorbachev and Yeltsin in July. Both leaders had told Graham of the need for "some philosophy, some religion, an inner strength" for their society.

For the first time in 70 years, Christians are allowed to be involved in the political life of the republics. Although Gorbachev himself claims to be an atheist, the burgeoning spiritual awakening is sure to have an effect on all levels of Soviet society including its political leadership.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Nikita Khrushchev quote

Quote of the Month
10/91

"I can prophesy that your grandchildren will live under socialism."

"We will bury you."

- Nikita Khrushchev

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Russian Forerunner almost shut down by coup attempt

An update on the beginning of Predvestnik

By Jay Rogers

10/91

MOSCOW (FR) - Predvestnik is now an officially registered Christian youth newspaper in the USSR. The first printing of this publication amounted to 100,000 copies; these are being distributed in over 100 cities throughout Russia and many of the other Republics. However, since the first run of newspapers occurred during the last week of August, it was not accomplished without resistance from the Communist coup attempt led by Genadi Yenayev.

Alexey Salapatov, the managing editor of Predvestnik, was in Moscow during the week of the "Second Russian Revolution" in order to facilitate the printing of the first edition. According to Alexey: "Communism contributed its mite to prevent us."

Ordering a halt to the printing of all newspapers in the USSR, Yenayev placed Communist troops around the building in which Predvestnik was due to be printed. All paper and supplies were seized. When the coup failed, the orders to print Predvestnik were reissued. However, all the red ink that would have been used in printing the first newspaper had been irretrievably lost.

Rather than wait for extra supplies to be ordered in the slow moving Soviet system, Alexey decided to print the 100,000 copies of the first run of Predvestnik in blue and black ink only.

The first issue of Predvestnik is an eight page newspaper. Some of the articles included are as follows:

* Voice of the New Generation - This article summarizes the current spiritual awakening which is now taking place among Russia's youth. Millions of Russian Bibles have been distributed in the Soviet Union by Western ministries in an attempt to evangelize the Russian people. Questions are posed - such as: "Are these Bibles being read and understood?" - "Are there biblical answers for the problems which confront our nation?"

* Worldview - An explanation of Biblical worldview is given. There is a Biblical paradigm for every discipline taught in the school curriculum. "Now that the philosophy of Marxist-Leninism has fallen, what worldview will replace it?"

* Christian Youth International - A brief history of this student movement is given. The dates of upcoming monthly conferences in Moscow are given, and students are invited to attend.

* Who is Jesus Christ? - The Russian people are now grasping for Truth in a spiritual vacuum. The claims of New Age, materialist dialectics, and false religion are brushed aside. A Biblical view of the claims of Jesus Christ - the Son of God - is presented.

* Alexander Bolotnikov Testifies - Born a Ukrainian Jew, Alex studied in a Jewish seminary for two years before giving his life to Jesus Christ. (His testimony appears in English in The Forerunner, Summer 1991.) Alex now plans to begin Messianic Jewish Fellowships throughout the USSR.

* The Christian Idea of Man and Government - An adaptation from Verna Hall's work on the U.S. Constitution, this is the first part of a series of articles on Biblical Christianity and how the writings of Christian philosophers have influenced civil government.

Predvestnik is now one of the major Christian publications in the Soviet Union. Due to the labor of the newspaper's staff, mass literature evangelism among the Russian speaking youth of the Soviet Union is now a reality.

The next edition of Predvestnik is due out in November; the plan is to do a 16 page, bi-monthly edition in blue, red and black ink which will look similar to The Forerunner. Extra finances are now being raised to tie everything together. The remaining needs are as follows:

1. Finances for the first few press runs. The first few press runs are in need of financial support from American supporters.
2. A laser printer and photo-copier. These two tools make life much easier for an editor. Predvestnik's staff will have the best equipment available for their needs.

If you would like to see a sample copy of the new 16-page Russian language Forerunner, or, if you are interested in supporting this work financially, write:

The Forerunner
P.O. Box 1799
Gainesville, FL 32602

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Big changes in store for Ukraine

The New Soviet Union

By Jay Rogers

10/91

With a population of 52 million, Ukrainian legislators are pushing this Soviet Republic toward complete democratic freedom and autonomy from Moscow. This would make it the largest nation in Eastern Europe, and potentially, with its agricultural richness and warm water ports in the Black Sea, on par economically with western European nations such as Germany, France and Italy.

The Ukrainian people are a nation with a complex history, yet until now they have never had a chance to establish independence for long enough to secure their own identity. But this December 1st, its eligible voters will go to the polls to cast two crucial ballots. The first is to decide whether the Ukraine will become independent; the second is to select the republic's first democratically elected president. The Ukrainians will vote for independence and will choose a leader who will progressively steer the Ukraine toward its national sovereignty.

The economic situation is of a high concern during this time. When the Ukrainian government introduced an internal customs control blocking the flow of agricultural goods to Russia, the Russian government retaliated by blocking the flow of gasoline which has caused severe shortages for automobiles and have shut down factories. Economic ties to Russia remain strong, yet Ukrainians are resolute in their move toward complete national independence.

The most encouraging sign to come out of the Ukraine, however, is its burgeoning spiritual awakening. Long considered to be the "Hub of Christianity," the city of Kiev is currently experiencing a strong revival of Christianity - the historic kind of Christianity practiced by Jesus and the Apostles. While the Russian Orthodox Church and the Ukrainian "Eastern Rite" Catholic Church have struggled over the issue of establishing a "national church" in the Ukraine, many Protestant and non-denominational churches are springing up everywhere.

As was the case in Eastern Europe and the Baltic nations, praying followers of Jesus Christ are sure to have a profound influence on the nation as it moves toward democracy.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

The Moscow Revolution: "I was there."

Reported by Alexey Salapatov

Editor-in-chief of the Russian language Forerunner

12/91

This article was written shortly after the events of August 1991 in Moscow. I was there from beginning to end. I wrote a short day-by-day chronicle of all the facts written here. You heard all about this from newspapers, television and mass media in America, no doubt. These are my own observations and thoughts. The tenses are mixed because I divide the events as they are happening from other information about the coup. If my style seems informal, this is because I am questioning the greater significance of this "Last Revolution." Here I am wondering if it will be the last revolution in our history. If God has shown me something here, then I must tell my story. Let God help me to inquire into these things which I have seen to reveal the Truth.

On August 18th, I am leaving Kiev for Moscow in the evening to deal with some problems concerning the printing of our newspaper - Predvestnik. As usual, the atmosphere of the train station reminds me of a large eastern bazaar. There are many people around. Some are seeking tickets, others sleep on the floor or wait for the train. The air is very hot and dry in Kiev. As the train pulls away from the station and travels for a few hours we enter rain

On the morning of August 19th, the train arrives in Moscow on time at 9:09 am. The scenario is ordinary - nothing unusual here - except for one interesting trifle. The train stewards whisper to their colleagues arriving from other cities: "Did you hear about it?" - "Haven't you heard about that yet?"

I didn't suspect that anything unusual was happening, so I didn't think anything of it. Perhaps these whispers were brought about by the death of some high ranking official in Moscow or by violence caused by the racketeers who control the black market trade around the station. Nothing in any way suggests a crisis or high treason. I immediately leave the station and ride the Metro to the Sevastopol Hotel.

Having come to the office of Christian Youth International located at the hotel, I greeted everyone there and introduce myself to the new director, Steve Connolly. I had come to clear up some questions concerning our first newspaper edition.

The first news I heard of the coup was from the BBC World News Service: "Yesterday tanks rolled into Moscow - Three people were killed." Later we found out that soldiers killed two people pumped up by drugs who were trying to break through a barricade.

Despite everything that is happening, we decide to pursue business as usual. Even the coup isn't a good enough reason for us to avoid the job we have come to do.

We meet with the head of the publishing company who informs us about the continuing negotiations with the coup plotters for their surrender. I don't know if it is the truth or not - but it seems that the coup was organized in an amateurish fashion. Even such an important thing as the curfew they imposed was not observed.

Coming back to the hotel in a private, car our attention is riveted on a small radio tuner. We are able to tune in the democratic station, Radio of Russia, since it is close by. The announcer tells of the people's resistance to the communist troops: "And now all members of the so-called emergency committee are trying to reach Vnukovo airport."

Using all my knowledge of English, I interpret these sensational messages to Steve: "Oh, yes it seems that the ordeal is coming to a close." Steve asks, "Do you mean it's over? The Revolution is finished?" I said, "Yes, I hope it's over!"

We praise God that this conspiracy ended as quickly as it began. Even the weather changes from a nasty rain to sunshine. We are having lunch and I am informing Steve and another staff member about some footnotes of Russian history, about times of coups, revolutions, putches ...

I couldn't help wondering: Was this the last deed of its kind in Russia?

Who knows? God alone ...

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

More on Russian Forerunner

12/91

As a student of the Russian language and Soviet society, I know the seeds that are being planted and the harvest that's being reaped. I want you to know that even the "token" issues which were sent to some friends of mine were not in vain; they were given to me and soon passed on to native Russians in this country!

Teri D. Van Leuvan
New Lebanon, New Hampshire

Siberian student enjoys Russian Forerunner

Greetings from Siberia! I enjoyed the time I spent with you in Moscow. I saw the first issue of the Russian "Forerunner" - (Predvestnik). The first issue was good.

Here is a document that your readers might find interesting. It says that the owner of it is a member of the Pioneers Organization of Lenin of school #35. This is a communist youth group. Inside there is a poem: "In your hearts a big power is growing. Roads, storm, and wind are waiting for you. Live so that you will not be ashamed to look into the eyes of our dear Lenin." On the other side it says that your name is written down in the Book of Honor. And you have the honor to have your picture taken next to the flag, the banner of the Pioneers Organization of school #35. Now they don't use this card anymore. And there is no longer a Pioneers Organization in our school.

Murad Abdul-Ali
Krasnoyarsk, Siberia

Question about Gorbachev quote

I am really enjoying reading The Forerunner. You take courageous stands. I was struck with your quotation by Gorbachev in the September 1991 issue. Could you give me the source of that quotation? It's powerful.

Herbert Links
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Editor's note: Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev resigned as Communist Party chief after the failed coup attempt last August. Several days later, Gorbachev emerged from a day long debate with the Supreme Soviet over the secession of several Soviet states. During the meeting, he threatened to resign as President as well. A CNN broadcast televised a short clip of his exchange with reporters after the meeting. His answers were described by CNN as being "rambling and incoherent." This is when he made the quote: "Only Jesus Christ could solve problems such as these." Gorbachev is an avowed atheist.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(6a9b39b98eb945faa14c645ec99e4eaa_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(9c2e8d1b5bd77cb5c9f83b7a9cff79fd_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Alexander Solzhenitsyn's Triumphant Return

By Jay Rogers

12/91

Alexander Solzhenitsyn claimed two decades ago, "One word of truth shall outweigh the whole world." Sophisticated observers chuckled at his naivete, but the fall of communism in Eastern Europe has given Solzhenitsyn the last laugh as Vaclav Havel in Czechoslovakia, Lazlo Tokes in Romania, and Lech Walesa in Poland all confronted tanks and machine guns with words of truth, paving the way toward a new future.

In October, the Soviet chief prosecutor dropped treason charges against the Russian author who has been in exile since 1971. Solzhenitsyn was the first author to alert the West to the horrible realities he experienced in Stalin's labor camps after World War Two. The Gulag Archipelago, his Nobel Prize winning work, has been released to the Russian public as well. Although his works have been popular in the Soviet Union, it was only recently that he was given permission to return.

Now the writer's intentions may seriously influence the course of events in Russia and other parts of the former union republics. His new book, Rebuilding Russia, makes it clear that he is getting ready to get involved in Russian politics. "Upon my return to Russia," says Solzhenitsyn, "I will immediately become immersed in other concerns that I in common with everyone."

When Solzhenitsyn ends his 20 year exile, he will return to Russia with his own political program for reform. This is a man who knows and understands Russia better than most democrats that are now trying to reform it. He has a controversial but clear vision for the country's future, something that many other figures in Russian politics lack.

In a National Review article (Sept. 23, 1991, p.24), Solzhenitsyn said: "The strength or weakness of a society depends more on the level of its spiritual life than on its level of industrialization. Neither a market economy nor even general abundance constitutes the crowning achievement of human life. If a nation's spiritual energies have been exhausted, it will not be saved from collapse by the most perfect government structure or by any industrial development."

This understanding of the great need for the spiritual revitalization of Russia is the main thrust of Solzhenitsyn's thinking. He knows that those who are characterized in the Western press as reformers are a relatively small group of intellectuals who have capitalized on the widespread resentment of communism but have not yet outlined a viable agenda which the people will endorse. Yeltsin's hesitation and vacillation on crucial issues will cause him to lose his stature as a national hero. It will then be time for a viable force to step in.

Solzhenitsyn's timing will be determined by political ripeness. By spring or summer the disillusionment will be widespread. His plan favors dismissing the non-Slavic republics from the union. The new nation will be named the Union of Russian Republics of Europe and Asia. He speaks for the restoration of traditional rural farming communities in Russia. He is not an advocate of democracy, but advocates strong but enlightened central power. The new republic would be based on traditional Christian values, moral order, restraint, modesty and other virtues that have always been respected by Russians.

Although it is unlikely that, at age 72, Solzhenitsyn would seek a political office, he may exert a tremendous ideological, spiritual, and political influence on every facet of Russian life. He will become Russia's foremost prophet-statesman.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Moscow CYI conference and Kiev outreach held in March 1992

By Jay Rogers

4/92

MOSCOW (FR) - Christian Youth International (CYI) - the student outreach ministry begun by Bob and Rose Weiner in January 1991 in the former Soviet Union (now Commonwealth of Independent States) - has experienced rapid growth in the past few months. Since April 1991, eight leadership training conferences have been held at the Izmajilovo hotel and sports arena in Moscow. In March, over 1000 student leaders packed an auditorium for four days of intensive leadership training seminars.

CYI founder Bob Weiner described the spiritual fervor of these youth leaders: "We are seeing great fruit. These young people are radical; they love God and are committed to holiness."

The fruit that Weiner describes is also evident in the home cities of CYI's leaders. One young woman, after being saved out of a life of prostitution during an evangelistic outreach, was trained as an evangelist and sent back to her city. Largely due to her evangelism, her church now numbers in the hundreds.

Other cities in Russia have experienced revivals as a result of CYI evangelistic outreaches. Rapidly growing churches with hundreds of members have sprung up in less than a few months in the cities of Yaroslavl, Izhevsk, and Kazan. Established churches, such as the Raisa Church of Moscow, have grown exponentially due to the evangelistic thrust of CYI. Youth leaders have been trained to teach Bible studies among students, to disciple new converts, and to begin home cell groups. Many former cell group leaders are now pastoring fast growing churches.

During the March conference, CYI received the cooperative input of over 35 American missionaries, including Moses Vegh (of James Robison Ministries), Anne Giminez (of Rock Church, Virginia Beach, Virginia), and Dennis Balcombe (a missionary to the underground house churches in Mainland China).

Moses Vegh's Ambassador Ministries, now based out of Budapest, Hungary, has supplied humanitarian relief to Russian cities in the form of medical and food supplies. Vegh's ambassadorship has brought him into contact with Russian President Boris Yeltsin, as well as many leaders from Russia's Democratic Party. Vegh has been a frequent speaker at CYI's conferences.

Dennis Balcombe spoke to CYI leaders on March 20 about the revival occurring among the underground house churches in China. Balcombe estimated that almost 100 million spirit-filled believers now make up the house church movement in China. According to Balcombe, most of the new converts in China are young people. He then challenged the students attending the CYI conference with a vision for missionary work in China. Mainland China has its largest border on the C.I.S. and is easily visited by exchange students.

Also in attendance at the conference were international students from the nations of Ghana, Ethiopia, Pakistan, Poland, Hungary, and most of the C.I.S. Muslim republics. CYI leaders were reminded that the C.I.S. borders more nations than any other country in the world and thus has the greatest missionary potential.

KIEV, Ukraine (FR) - Over 30 ministers who took part in the Moscow CYI conference in March travelled to Kiev, Ukraine to take part in a two day outreach to that city. Moses Vegh, Anne Giminez, Bob Weiner, David Kitely and Bart Pierce were the featured speakers. In two nights, over 2000 people packed Kiev's October Palace - originally built as a memorial to the Communist Revolution - to hear the Gospel preached freely for the first time within its auditorium.

During the Kiev outreach, team members passed out hundreds of scripture booklets on the streets in only a few minutes by simply holding them in their hands. Two or three people at a time would line up to receive them. Many people were witnessed to on the streets and many came to Christ during the nightly evangelistic services. As in many other places in the C.I.S., the hunger for the Word of God in Kiev is unbelievable.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Yeltsin - A Christian?

By Jay Rogers
4/92

"We are believers now, but we need more help."

- Boris Yeltsin

MOSCOW (FR) - Moses Vegh, of Ambassador Ministries in Budapest Hungary, spoke at a Christian Youth International conference in March and related to student leaders in attendance that he had met Boris Yeltsin. Speaking of his wife and himself, Yeltsin told Vegh: "We are believers now ... But we need more help."

"We met at a tennis match," said Vegh later. "It was the only time that Yeltsin had to spend with his grandson. We spoke only briefly and this is what he told me." Moses Vegh was guarded in his interpretation of Yeltsin's statement, but expressed optimism with regard to the Russian President's request for help: "He has asked to meet with us again."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Letters to Predvestnik

(Translated into English from Russian by Roman Medvid)

4/92

Letter #1.

Dear friends!

I came to a breaking point recently in my life (I'm now 53) - and I am shocked. My mother, a true Christian, died this year. While living she had been trying to admonish me in the knowledge of God, but she died without a positive result. Recently I bought a copy of Predvestnik and was invited to The House of Prayer (a church), I was taught in the basic knowledge of God after 53 years of being deceived. And I was completely shaken.

Now I have been changed! I read the article "Who is Jesus Christ" in Predvestnik - and I repeat - I was shaken by the story of the life of Jesus Christ and the acts done by Him for the sake of the people living in the earth. I am now studying The New Testament, which was given to me in The House of Prayer by some young preachers, who were probably from Ukraine ...

A.S. Kleshevnikov
Izhevsk, Russia

Letter #2.

The following letter was written by Nikolai, who is currently in a Siberian prison. Nikolai became a Christian in the prison hospital. At the time we received this letter, Nikolai's church consisted of 8 prisoners; we have testimonies of some of these believers.

I accepted the Lord Jesus Christ as my personal Saviour and thank Him for opening my eyes to the spiritual life, and helping me to get rid of bad habits. He helped me to break links with my past and to get away from my carnal life in which I was mired in iniquities and the hopeless leprosy of sin. I would never have thought that Someone is able to change my thoughts and my entire life. The thing that neither my school nor militia could do, my almighty Lord Jesus Christ has done.

On the 1st of December 1991, our church kept covenant with the Lord through water baptism. Also, we try to reach out all the prisoners with the Gospel that they would accept Jesus as their Savior. We pray that the Lord bring the revival into our prison, into all hearts that have not accepted the Lord.

May God Himself abundantly bless you who love our Lord Jesus Christ fervently. Praise Him!

N.N. Denisov
Prison code: UO 68/14 Br-19
Krasnodar, Siberia

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(758ebdf4629c903da74c2e079717ae32_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(fe3aebe81acea8d45108cd2768939da7_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

A Special Report From Ukraine:

Russian language Forerunner firmly established in Kiev

By Jay Rogers

4/92

"Let us go back and visit our brothers in every city where we have preached the Word of the Lord, and see how they are doing." - Acts 15:36

KIEV, Ukraine (FR) - I just returned from Russia and Ukraine, having spent eight days in Kiev with Alexey Salapatov, the director of the new Russian language edition of The Forerunner called Predvestnik. We then travelled to Moscow to a Christian Youth International Conference attended by 1000 youth leaders.

Two new issues of Predvestnik have been produced since December by Alexey Salapatov, who is also a full time computer science major at Kiev Polytechnical Institute.

The first issue was printed in August in Moscow shortly after the attempted coup. 100,000 copies were soon distributed by members of Christian Youth International. Some went as far as Vladivostok; thousands were distributed in the Muslim republic of Kazakstan; others went to the Baltic States, Russia, Ukraine, Belarus, Siberia and the cities of the Far East.

The two last issues were printed at 20,000 copies each and the page size was doubled to 16 pages (as opposed to the eight-page Summer issue). On March 10, the third issue of Predvestnik rolled off the presses. There has been a dramatic improvement in the quality of the layout since the first issue.

Alexey believes that he will be able to turn a profit on either this or the next issue. He hopes to print eight issues this year and to begin to produce a monthly newspaper by January 1993.

The staff of Predvestnik has been expanded to include three full time workers and a part time graphic artist. Roman Medvid, another student at Kiev Polytech, serves as the copy editor. Vadim Urugamov is the circulation manager; and Vladimir Berendiv serves as the graphic artist.

Newspapers are ordered by the hundreds or thousands by youth leaders and they are able to sell them for a few rubles each. One man in Kiev sold 100 copies in less than 45 minutes! The last issue was over halfway sold out by the time I left for America.

One young woman from the city of Izhevsk distributed 10,000 copies of Predvestnik! She was able to sell most of the copies. She also included an invitation to her church in each one of the newspapers. As a result, 2000 visitors came to one church meeting! Many people came to know Christ that day. This testimony was related to the student leaders at the CYI conference in Moscow. The auditorium erupted in applause. Immediately thereafter thousands of copies of Predvestnik were ordered by student leaders.

Alexey received over 60 letters in response to the first issue, all of them positive. Most people have never seen a newspaper like this before and are happy to receive it. One man wrote that he had given his heart to the Lord after reading the article in the first edition of Predvestnik about Jesus Christ. He had formerly been a hardened atheist and a communist. Another man wrote to Alexey from prison. Now he is helping to establish a prison fellowship. He is distributing Predvestnik to the other prisoners.

Predvestnik is now being printed at the largest and most powerful newspaper press in the Ukraine. A formerly communist press did all the printing of the last two issues and at an even lower cost than the press we first used in Moscow. (The last two 16-page editions cost .8c each; while the eight-page Summer edition printed in Moscow cost 1.5c each.) Alexey has great favor with the director of the company and he is our friend now. When I met him last Summer this was not the case, but he has changed his attitude. It is a significant breakthrough that we are able to use this press.

The ability to print newspapers is not a problem now; the real challenge is establishing the circulation network for the newspaper. The goal is to make the newspaper profitable while steadily increasing the number of copies at each printing. Alexey has chosen to be conservative in his plan for growth. He is registering a printing business this month which will enable him to distribute newspapers through the kiosks (newsstands) throughout Russia and Ukraine. This alone could more than double the present circulation. Some other plans for distribution are also being tested.

If you would like to see a sample copy of the new 16-page Russian language Forerunner, or, if you are interested in supporting this work financially, write:

The Forerunner
P.O. Box 1799
Gainesville, FL 32602

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Christian Youth International:

Phenomenal Church growth in C.I.S.

5/92

MOSCOW (FR) - According to David Grubbs, the administrative director for Christian Youth International (CYI), over 100 churches related to CYI have sprung up in different parts of the Commonwealth of Independent States. Since January of 1991, CYI has held eight student leadership training conferences and has trained 7000 leaders. The conferences, sponsored by Bob and Rose Weiner Ministries, have also brought many American pastors to Moscow for the purpose of training student leaders and making contacts for future missionary involvement.

CYI has been successful both in reaching and training the potential leaders among university students from the furthest reaches of the C.I.S. and has spawned significant activity in many cities, towns and universities. Due to the fact that the conferences have been so successful, CYI is now beginning its second phase: a regional development strategy.

David Grubbs has compiled a list of known churches and cell groups that have been begun by CYI leaders. So far Grubbs has estimated that there are over 100 such groups and he is still counting. In some cities, such as Yaroslavl, Izhevsk, and Kazan, there is tremendous revival. Several groups in each city are adding new converts every week. Small and large groups of new Christians have sprung up in many places and have begun to move out in ministry without guidance or support on a local level. It is not unusual for these groups to be pastored by young men and women in their teens or early twenties who been Christians for less than one year. Many are in great need of support and training.

From June 21-29, 1200 student leaders will be trained at a three day Moscow conference and American missionary teams will be sent out to 25 cities to help plant churches and minister to newly established groups. The churches of American ministers who have been involved with CYI conferences will "adopt" fledgling churches for the purpose of giving financial support, further training of leaders and developing relationships with young ministers. Throughout July, August and September, American "sister churches" will be developing relationships with leaders of the new churches in the C.I.S.

From September 28 to October 5, the process will begin once again with another national leadership conference. The American missionary teams will return to the cities where they have adopted churches or will travel to new cities to plant churches.

Christian Youth International will remain as a centrally located leadership training center in Moscow. Its secondary purpose will be to link American churches with opportunities for church planting and regional development. In this way, the churches established by CYI student leaders may take on the flavor and ministry gifts of diverse movements as many different American churches become involved in regional development.

David Grubbs explains that this strategy is crucial to retaining the fruit that has already been cultivated. Many cities in the C.I.S. are experiencing momentous revival and there is a great need to coordinate and network the ministries and activities that are taking place.

Grubbs reported on a newspaper article which recently appeared in Russia which presented a picture of the former Soviet Union becoming the most religious and spiritual nation on earth. It stated that just as in the past the Czars and the Communists were the supreme authority in the land, so the Church must now become the supreme power. The article paints a picture of a time when unbelievers and agnostics will virtually disappear. It predicts that Russians will be transformed into the most hard working people in the world. They will surprise the whole world by a new renaissance - both in the spiritual and practical.

At the same time, Grubbs warns, CYI is encouraging churches all over America to work together and not compete against each other so that the great harvest is not lost to the huge missionary efforts of cults, such as the Mormons, Jehovah's Witnesses, and to the planned evangelistic thrust by the Muslim nations which border the C.I.S.

For more information on adopting a church in the former Soviet Union, or in taking part in upcoming CYI conferences in Moscow, contact:

Christian Youth International
P.O. Box 1799
Gainesville, FL 32602

Phone: (904) 375-4455
Fax: (904) 375-6000

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Communism on trial in Moscow

8/92

Russian President Boris Yeltsin's decrees outlawing the Communist Party and confiscating its property after the abortive coup last August have been challenged. Remaining Communists claim that Yeltsin's actions were unconstitutional. Yeltsin's followers respond by claiming that the Communists were less a political party than a criminal conspiracy armed with military power.

Initial hearings opened in July; ironically, the Communists themselves instigated the proceedings in protest of Yeltsin's decrees. Former Communist Party leaders have something personal at stake in the trials: the offering up of thousands of personal memos seized from Communist Party headquarters as evidence documenting its reign of terror. Documents already made public include a 1975 directive for the shipment of arms and ammunition to the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine - among the most violent of the PLO terrorist entities - to be used in attacks on Israelis and Americans. Although long suspected, this would be the first direct evidence of the Kremlin arming terrorist groups.

Former Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev desperately wants the proceedings stopped, noting the futility of putting "70 years of history on trial." However, evidence documenting criminal activity during Gorbachev's tenure as Communist Party chairman may be the real motive behind the former President's cries of protest. Gorbachev's plans for an attempt to return to power may already have been squelched by the following revelations: the Communist Party looted the public treasury, financed Marxist parties abroad (among them the U.S. Communist Party), and fostered various acts of oppression. Inmates of gulags and psychiatric hospitals, and the victims of KGB torture chambers may be called upon to testify in the trials.

Billed by the Russian government as a "second Nuremberg process," the trials could debunk the second totalitarian monstrosity of the 20th century, just as the first exposed the horrors of Nazism to mankind's shocked gaze, helping once and for all to disillusion its remaining followers in the Third World ... and admirers on American college faculties.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Report from Ukraine: Predvestnik's 4th press run

10/92

I've got some good news that should please you. First, the last issue of Predvestnik was the most successful from a financial perspective. We covered our expenses for printing and, in addition, made some money for salaries. I must tell you about a change in our staff. Vadim left for another job, and we found another guy, whose name is Sergei Zavgorodny. He's already written an article in the current issue, and it is going to be very successful. At the same time, we began a wide advertising campaign for Predvestnik in Russia. Also, we have started a project of printing supplemental issues devoted to different topics such as rock music, sports, etc. By the way, Predvestnik is the only [Christian] newspaper in our country that still has 16 pages; all others have reduced their size.

Beginning with this issue, we started bulk subscriptions (50 copies or more) for churches and campuses. We are receiving letters from all regions of the former USSR. We have some orders from Christian ministers to publish Christian materials who want to use Predvestnik as a base. This will also help us financially. Last thing: Praise the Lord, now I can hold the new issue [no. 4] of Predvestnik in my hands! I promise to send you copies of it soon. 11.5 tons of paper is stored in the printing house as property of Predvestnik. Our profit from the last issue was 6,000 rubles.

Alexey Salapatov
Kiev, Ukraine

Note to donors to Predvestnik: The Russian language Forerunner is registered as part of a non-profit organization in the republic of Ukraine. The fifth issue of Predvestnik is due to be printed this fall. We have enough paper stored to print the next few issues (at least 200,000 copies total).

If you have donated money to Predvestnik since April 1991 and would like a detailed summary of how The Forerunner has invested this money, write us and we will send you a financial statement.

Friends of The Forerunner

I had a dream the other night that might encourage you. I saw a Russian college student tearfully testifying of his conversion to Christ. I woke up, and these words came immediately to mind: "How beautiful are the feet of him who brings good news." I knew the dream applied to you, the Weiners, Rusty Russell, and all who have diligently labored in Russia and the Ukraine. That is why I felt God wanted me to join "Friends of The Forerunner."

Mike Wade

Spokane, Washington

Editor's note: "Friends of The Forerunner" is a support network that has arisen out of the need to support Predvestnik in the former Soviet Union. Some money raised from donors will also be used to support other projects such as translating Christian books into Russian, beginning a Russian publishing house and supporting distribution of The Forerunner on Ivy League campuses in the Northeast.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(c444627dab9fee9a1550c053ffaaaae2_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(0d7ca0919e6c47bbd874bfa0189fe22e_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Trends: Rubles to Dollars - What is your money worth in the former USSR?

By Jay Rogers

THE EXCHANGE RATE OF RUBLES FOR DOLLARS has skyrocketed from 30 rubles to the dollar at the time of the August 1991 coup to now over 500! An inflation rate of 2% a day has made it difficult for the average worker to buy enough bread, milk and meat to feed his family. The dollar, too, is losing value, but at a much lower rate. It is still possible for the Russian entrepreneur, if he has access to hard currency, to make profitable deals during the "lag time" just after the official exchange rates are raised and before the inflation rate has a chance to catch up to the raised value of the dollar.

Many people in the West are understandably concerned about making an investment in business or supporting a ministry in the former Soviet Union. Are the communist hardliners going to reassert themselves? Will the iron curtain be raised once again? When is Russia going to close up again? - These are some of the questions people ask.

The consensus of the young people in the former communist bloc say: "There is no way; the changes are irreversible. Communism is too unpopular, and the Democrats have too much support from the people to go back now." Taken that these are the future leaders of this society, we can say that the long term changes are irreversible. In addition to this piece of evidence that communism is out for good, there have been several symbolic gestures on the parts former Soviet governments:

The endorsement on the ruble only one year ago proclaimed: "Legal Tender of the USSR." Today the ruble reads: "Bank of Russia." Even the ever-present bust portrait of Lenin has been removed from new 5000 ruble note.

Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Belarus and Ukraine have declared complete independence from Moscow. Ukraine realigned their time zone to be one hour later than that of Moscow even though part of the country is on the same line of longitude. Ukraine, the Baltics and Belarus are now in the same time zone as the countries of eastern Europe. In essence, this gesture suggests that these nations consider themselves to be part of Europe and not of the Soviet bloc.

These nations display their own flag colors, have their own national anthems and have printed their own currency, (although inflation in the Ukraine has surpassed that of Russia).

Despite the symbolic gestures of freedom, life from a practical standpoint is getting worse for the common citizen. The average worker still makes between $20 - $30 a month. As government subsidies are lifted, the prices for commodities will inevitably come on line with prices in the West.

The time for Westerners take advantage of this situation is now. God himself has sovereignly created this setting so that Western Christians would be able to finance the evangelization of almost 300 million people.

The time of spiritual openness in the former Soviet Union is also short. While compared to the West there is a great hunger for Christian literature, in two or three years it will become more difficult to distribute a Christian publication among unconverted people. Two or three years ago, a Christian publication such as Predvestnik would have been a best-seller, but in a few years the novelty factor will will have all but disappeared.

The goal of a newly established Christian publishing house in Ukraine is to print and distribute at least 250,000 copies of Predvestnik in the next two years; and to translate and print 10 short paperback books (100-200 pages). In doing so, a network will be developed among Russian speaking people who will read Christian literature for many years to come. These people may be able to support the work of publishing in their own country if their economy improves. Then they will be able to support missionary efforts to surrounding nations such as the Muslim and Asian bloc.

The people in the former Soviet Union are still among the most spiritually open people in the world - especially the youth - but the time is short, we need to act in a more progressive manner to evangelize and disciple the people of the former Soviet Union through the printed word.

You may support the Russian language Forerunner and publishing books in the former Soviet Union by sending a tax-deductible donation to: The Forerunner, P.O. Box 1799, Gainesville, FL 32602

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Reaching the Former Soviet Union with the Printed Word:

A Special Report on a Recent Trip to Russia and Ukraine

By Jay Rogers

12/92

I HAVE WATCHED THE EARTH-SHAKING changes in the Soviet Union unfold with great interest in the past three years. This vast country has become completely open to the gospel; freedom of the press and freedom to openly evangelize has grown tremendously.

In the summer of 1991, I helped to establish Predvestnik: the Russian language version of The Forerunner. Thousands of copies of Predvestnik are now being ordered by Christian youth leaders in the former Soviet Union. Alexey Salapatov, Predvestnik's managing editor has received a stack of letters in response to the first five issues; all of them positive. People have never seen a newspaper like this before. Some have written to tell of dramatic conversions after having read the articles in Predvestnik.

In November, I made my fourth trip to the former Soviet Union. My purpose was to establish a publishing center which will be made available to Christian missionaries desiring to translate and print materials in the former Soviet Union. The Forerunner has established a base for this organization. This venture will provide an important source of spiritual nourishment for Russian Christians who still do not have enough literature.

Think about it: What would you do without your library of Christian books? Yet this is exactly the situation that the Russian Christians are in today; besides only a handful of books, there is virtually nothing to teach the Russian people about biblical Christianity.

Whole libraries of books were destroyed by the communists when they took power. New books teaching the gospel of Jesus Christ were banned and only a few dissident writers were brave enough to publish their own works. Many of these writers were sent to prison or institutionalized as madmen; some were even killed by the KGB. The opportunity to establish this publishing house was literally won by the blood of martyrs.

The Russian people are avid readers and admire their philosophers, poets, writers and novelists much in the same way we glamorize our Hollywood movie stars in America. Yet there has been little in the way of Christian literature printed in this country since communism has fallen. This is partly because the former USSR spans eleven time zones and is plagued by the lack of adequate transportation, distribution systems, supplies, etc.

While I was in Moscow and Kiev in November, I wanted to get a sense of what the needs are for Christian materials. In speaking with Russians and Ukrainians during a period of one week, I asked:

- * What are some of the publishing needs of the former USSR?
- * What kinds of Christian publications are already available?
- * What topics for books most need to be translated into Russian?

Everyone agreed that the needs for publishing Christian materials in the former USSR are very great. There are less than one dozen evangelical Christian publications to reach 300 million people. Most of these are published infrequently, however, as often as the editors can afford to print a new issue.

I found that Predvestnik is of great help to new Christians and unconverted people who have many questions about the Christian faith. It is the only Christian youth publication in the former USSR. There is only one other evangelical publication that is published periodically. If Predvestnik were to be published bimonthly, it would be the only 16-page Christian newspaper in the former Soviet Union that is published on a frequent basis.

When asked: "Are there many evangelical Christian books available in Russian?" most said: "Yes." But some estimated that there are not many titles available throughout the whole country. This number does not include short booklets, tracts and workbooks. Interviewees most often mentioned Josh McDowell, Watchman Nee, Reinhardt Bonnke, Billy Graham, David Wilkerson, as authors that they recognized.

The topics for needed translation were almost universally agreed upon. They ranged from: Bible study materials, inspirational books, the family and relationships, history of the church, Christian biographies, the gifts of the Holy Spirit, Creation Science, Bible exegesis, commentaries, a concordance, a Bible encyclopedia, and a good modern translation of the Bible with study notes.

Two of the most popular books were The Cross and the Switchblade (Wilkerson) and Evidence That Demands a Verdict (McDowell). The Slavic Gospel Association has translated at least a dozen books, such as Mere Christianity (Lewis) and How Should We Then Live? (Schaeffer). Although each one of these books has made a tremendous impact, it is only a drop in the bucket compared to what is needed.

For more information write: The Forerunner, P.O. Box 1799, Gainesville, FL 32602

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

What is Christian Youth International?

12/92

- * Christian Youth International (CYI) is a leadership training and church planting organization established by Bob Weiner based in Moscow, Russia.
- * CYI is training a new generation of leaders to build a revived and glorious church in the former communist bloc.
- * CYI's training conferences are a resource for the entire church in the former USSR. Youth leaders from many different cities attend.
- * CYI provides a network for Americans to sponsor churches in the former Soviet Union. Missionary teams plant churches with the cooperation of CYI's leaders.
- * CYI trains students to begin Bible studies on campuses, to begin campus groups, to hold evangelistic outreaches, and to be church planters.

How are churches planted by Christian Youth International?

Ministry team members have used the two phase approach:

- * Phase one: Training seminars were begun by Bob Weiner at the Izmaiilovo hotel in Moscow in 1991. During the first year, youth leaders traveled from all parts of the Soviet Union to be trained at bimonthly five-day seminars. These leaders were equipped with hundreds of thousands of Bible study books, Bibles, New Testaments, and a Christian youth newspaper to distribute. Leaders began Bible studies, cells groups and established churches among the youth of their city.
- * Phase two: Three day training conferences are now being held four times a year in Moscow. After each conference apostolic teams will be sent out to new cities to plant churches with CYI's leaders; other teams will be sent to established churches to strengthen young believers, build ongoing relationships, and to serve the leadership. CYI will provide a link between American and Russian "sister-churches" by matching compatible ministries and spiritual gifts between Americans and Russians. American churches help with church planting, equipping, evangelism training, and servant leadership.

Why is Christian Youth International needed?

- * Religion in the former Soviet Union is dominated by the Russian Orthodox Church, and smaller Protestant and Pentecostal churches. There are many true believers among these groups, however, there are few churches acting as "new wine skins" to hold the new wine that God is presently pouring out.

There is also the threat of the Muslims and many cults who are threatening to spoil the harvest. There is a serious need to establish new churches to reap the harvest among the new generation of believers of the current spiritual awakening.

* The Protestant Reformation did not occur in this region of the world (with the exception of the Baltic States). Therefore, a biblical worldview which was restored to the church in Europe and America during this time is unknown by Christians in the former Soviet Union. There is no vision for the reformation of society and the restoration of the New Testament Church; many believers in the former Soviet Union are hearing this aspect of the Good News for the first time in CYI's leadership training conferences and through their relationships with sister churches.

* Christian Youth International is providing an important support link between Russian churches and western ministries. Powerful ongoing missionary activity in the former USSR is being facilitated by CYI.

* Revival in the former Soviet Union has come in the wake of political and economic disintegration. The Soviet Union is now comprised of separate republics tied together only by sobering economic realities: food shortages, inflation, distribution problems, lack of adequate medical supplies, transportation, etc. Political and economic turmoil provide a unique opportunity for the Church to rise up and be a mighty deliverance force in this region of the world.

* An opportunity to establish an international youth movement is possible through reaching many "people's groups" in the former Soviet Union. There are over 150 ethnic nations that need to be reached with the gospel in the former USSR.

Why not sponsor the training of youth leaders?

A recent InterVarsity poll indicated that 60% of the people living in the vast former USSR are completely open to the gospel. A great window of opportunity lies open before us today in the former Soviet Union!

At the end of the Second World War, General Douglas MacArthur pled with the American church to rush thousands of missionaries to a humbled, defeated Japan. Shintoism had failed them. Their "god," Hirohito, had just been "dedefied." It was a classic opportunity for Christianity to walk into a colossal spiritual vacuum. Instead we hesitated. In the minds of many American Christians, the Japanese were still "the enemy." And while we stalled, Japan groped toward a new religion - shameless, often vicious materialism. Is there a consequence, other than spiritual, when missions opportunities are lost? Every American pays every day for our spiritual failure in Japan.

We must not let this become another missed opportunity. God has already given America the resources. At an exchange rate of 400-500 rubles to the dollar, a gift of only $100 can give three students the opportunity to come and be trained at a CYI conference.

Reaching the Youth of Asia

In addition to ministering extensively throughout the former Soviet Union, Bob Weiner spends about one-third of his time in Asia. Sixty percent of the world's population lives within a 2000 mile radius of Hong Kong. It has been estimated that at least fifty percent of these people are under the age of 25 years old. The objective is to reach the multitudes who have never heard the gospel in this area, especially the youth.

Preaching Jesus the Messiah to Jews Throughout the World

The messianic Jewish vision is an integral part of Bob and Rose Weiner Ministries. One-third of our time is spent working among believers of Jewish heritage who have a vision to reach Jews throughout the world. We believe that, in accordance with Romans chapters 9-11, a great number of ethnic Jews will be ingrafted into the vine: Jesus Christ.

In the former Soviet Union there are 3-1/2 million ethnic Jews. These young people have not been indoctrinated against Jesus Christ by their rabbis and are the most open Jews in the world to the gospel. Among Christian Youth International's leaders there are a number of Jewish believers who have a vision to reach their people. Our plan is to equip them to plant hundreds of congregations within the former Soviet Union. Some have been sent out to the nation of Israel; others hope to travel to other parts of the world as a witness of Jesus Christ to God's scattered people - Israel.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Subscriptions to Russian Forerunner

I am always blessed when I receive your publication. You cover such a wide range of topics and themes. Your focus on Revival and the work the Spirit is doing worldwide is informative and exciting. I especially appreciate the ministry you have in the former Soviet Union. The Lord gave Hudson Taylor a vision of the revival that is taking place there in the 1870s - God does nothing without first "revealing His plan to His servants the prophets" (Amos 3:7) - and it is thrilling to see it come to pass in our day!

I am writing to find out if it would be possible to buy subscriptions to the Russian Forerunner, Predvestnik, for three families that I correspond with in Tartarstan? It is so hard for me to find out if, at all possible, I can do anything for my brethren over there. There is a burden in my heart for the Body of Christ in the former Soviet Union, but I'm stymied as to what to do.

Tom Richardson
Pendleton, Indiana

Editor's note: Yes, subscriptions to the Russian Forerunner are available for your friends in Russia. We also have copies of two issues available for Russians living in the United States. See page 20 for more information on how to support the Russian Forerunner.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

NJ church to support Russian Forerunner

We just received our April issue of The Forerunner. It's an excellent issue! Yes, we would like to see a sample copy of the new 16-page Russian language Forerunner (Predvestnik). We're also interested in supporting that work financially. Please send us details.

John G. Heisler
Moorestown, New Jersey

Editor's note: In last month's issue we ran a special update on the Russian language Forerunner, which is now firmly established in Kiev, Ukraine. Predvestnik is doing extremely well; the Russian people are hungry for any type of literature about Christianity and this newspaper, being the largest Christian youth newspaper in this region of the world, is being received with excitement throughout the Commonwealth of Independent States. Since last August, four issues have been produced. We plan on printing a monthly edition within the year. Many readers of The Forerunner have helped us to support the printing of Predvestnik. If you are interested in seeing a sample copy of Predvestnik, or, are interested in supporting this work financially, write:

The Forerunner
P.O. Box 1799
Gainesville, FL 32602

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Russian language Forerunner available in U.S.

What if Russian speaking people here in the U.S.A. desire a Russian language subscription to The Forerunner? My good friend Jean lives in a large apartment complex in Atlanta where there are many Russian immigrants. Is there any provision made for any of them to receive the Russian language Forerunner?

Bruce Klingbeil
Atlanta, Georgia

Editor's response: Yes, we have copies of the Russian Forerunner (Predvestnik). If you are going to be supporting the Russian Forerunner, we would be happy to see that you get some copies of each issue when they are available. We have no plans to be offering subscriptions in America at this time, but we would be willing to send the issues we have available in bulk quantities. This will be done on a donation only basis.

"The Friends of The Forerunner" club is now starting for people who want to support the Russian Forerunner on an ongoing basis. (For details see page 23.) Part of the donations we receive may go toward evangelizing Russians in the United States. If you are interested in ordering copies of Predvestnik you may use the bulk order form on page . Indicate that you want to order copies of the Russian Forerunner.

Another request for the Russian Forerunner

I appreciate hearing from you, especially receiving the issues of the Russian Forerunner. I know that the Russian families who attend our church will greatly enjoy them because only several of them have learned to read English, even to a limited degree. In the future, if possible, I'd appreciate receiving a copy of the Russian Forerunner. We'd also like to contribute financially in the future.

John Heisler
Moorestown, New Jersey

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

End of ministry in former USSR?

... or just the beginning?

9/93

A reader who has supported the Russian Forerunner (Predvestnik) sent us a clipping from USA Today which reported pending legislation that would lead to restrictions of foreign missionary activity in the Russia. This supporter of ministry in the former USSR was concerned and asked:

"Does this mean the end of the ministry of The Forerunner in Russia?"

Bruce Klingbeil
Atlanta, GA

Editor's response: Boris Yeltsin never signed this bill into law. In Yeltsin's proposed constitution, there is a religious liberties clause that would prohibit such law as unconstitutional.

Many people have expressed concern about the prospect of the door closing in the former USSR. Many Christians believe that this is inevitable. Some who were brought up in the Cold War see Russia as "the enemy" and do not expect reforms in that country to be permanent. Others hold to a worldview that does not see lasting victory for the kingdom of God over the kingdoms of darkness occurring within history.

We should remember that God has opened the door in the former USSR and only He can close it. The Bible states: "For the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord as the waters cover the sea" (Habakkuk 2:14). The gospel is destined to be advanced in all of the former republics of the USSR. Our outlook should be one of victory and Christ's kingdom advancing in the nations without retreat.

However, there is the very real danger of the danger of the door closing in another sense: the people of the former USSR may not remain as spiritually open as they have been in the last few years. The government may also pass restrictions on what Christians are able to do in evangelism and church planting. Therefore, it has been an urgent priority to establish a Reformation newspaper. We acted as quickly as possible to set this up and train a staff when the opportunity arose.

The key phrase in the USA Today article was: "The law would require foreign religious leaders to gain state accreditation." Since staff members of Predvestnik are Ukrainian citizens, they ought to be able to publish their own newspaper without interference. Predvestnik has been registered under the laws of Ukraine with the purpose of distributing literature to the people of the former USSR. Predvestnik has produced three issues in 1993 with no unusual problems.

Predvestnik is published under the auspices of Media House, a Ukrainian-American joint venture in Kiev. Unless the newly established Republic of Ukraine passed a similar law, Predvestnik should not be affected.

The Forerunner will continue to raise funds for Predvestnik. We plan to use the Russian Forerunner as a base to print a newspaper to reach the millions of Muslims throughout the former USSR. We also plan to print a Chinese language newspaper: The Mandate for distribution in mainland China. See the back page for information on how you can help support these exciting international projects!

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(9c2e8d1b5bd77cb5c9f83b7a9cff79fd_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(e3275251d0893157c3584e20c81dc3ba_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Events of September 1993 in the Russian Federation

By Roman Medvid
staff editor for Predvestnik

KIEV, Ukraine, October 4, 1993 (FR) - As I see it, the conflict is over. Khasbutalov, the leading military men and the chief of the Supreme Council have surrendered to Yeltsin. The so-called "White House" is under Yeltsin's control and the conflict is over. Most of the people now support Yeltsin. Russian television has shown that the people are in high spirits. Yeltsin is being supported by the masses. However, when the elections are held it is probable that neither Yeltsin nor the communists will be supported, but a third power will arise.

Thousands of people turned out to support Yeltsin during the uprising. Russian television showed the people who came together to stand for Yeltsin even though they were not armed. "We'll stand without weapons," they said. People crowded around campfires throughout the city of Moscow and held a vigil for Yeltsin, they didn't sleep. Some people wondered why he couldn't foretell that this was coming. "Why didn't his secret intelligence know about this before it happened? Why was he caught unaware?"

There are many changes happening now in Russia and Ukraine. A new law has been introduced in Russia which would restrict the activities of American missionaries. Boris Yeltsin never signed this bill into law. In Yeltsin's proposed Russian constitution, there is a religious liberties clause that would prohibit such law as unconstitutional. However, Ukraine is a separate nation. If a similar law passes in here, then many young churches would be under pressure.

Editor's note: Sergei Zavgorodny (staff writer for Predvestnik) is writing an article which will deal with the implications of these great changes for Christians and some newly established churches in the former USSR. Sergei's article will be translated into English and published in a coming issue of The Forerunner.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Failure of Russian Legislators: A Special Report from the Russian language Forerunner

by Sergei Zavgorodny

translated by Roman Medvid

2/94

A decree passed by the Russian Parliament last summer restricts activities of western ministries in Russia. Yeltsin, though opposing the Supreme Council, did not veto this decree. The law is now valid, yet only arbitrarily enforced. The following article is a scenario of what could take place. A totalitarian system could be bred in Russia - not by atheistic communism - but by the Russian Orthodox Church working hand in hand with tyrants as she did in the time of the czars. Americans are implored by the staff of the Russian language Forerunner, Predvestnik, to pray for the reformation of Russia that religious liberty, which is a part of Yeltsin's proposed constitution, will take hold of this great nation.

KIEV, Ukraine (FR) - Of all the republics of the former Soviet Union, Russia being its successor has remained not only economically and politically the strongest state, but also a kind of "pacesetter" in democratic reformation. Any law ratified by the Russian government inevitably evokes a response in other republics. The deep crisis of the Russian legislature makes the situation more complicated. How should one consider decrees and laws ratified by the Parliament that has been dissolved? The more so, as many of them are contrary to standards of international law signed by Russian officials.

One instance of the kind is an amendment of the 14th article of Russia's law "On Religious Freedom" that was ratified on July 14, 1993 after a long and difficult discussion at the Supreme Council (Soviet) of the Russian Federation. Debates flared up that polarized the parliament into extreme positions. Resolute opponents, as well as most ardent supporters of the amendment, well understood that this step would mean a turn from the straight path of reforming the totalitarian system to narrow and dirty ways of bureaucratic pettifoggery and willfulness. But "the interests of the state" that masked a violation of the law turned out have more value - after all, which parliamentarian desires to be put forward for public view as a person not concerned about the interests of the state?

So what is the ratified amendment all about? According to the new version of the law, a person that does not possess a Russian citizenship has no right to be involved in activities of religion, missions, publicity and propaganda in Russia. Other activities, such as acts of charity, will be permitted by an authorized committee that will give exclusive permission for particular activities. Documents to regulate a work of the committee must be prepared by the Russian government. According to the amendment, any activity that is to be permitted must correspond to "the interests of the State" and "the harmony of the society." What kind of "harmony" this must be so that religious activities may meet "the interests of the State" is not known. It might only be clear to those registered religious organizations which are now applying for the right to participate in activities in Russia.

Before voting, copies of a letter by the Russian Orthodox Patriarch of Moscow and Entire Russia Alexiy II were distributed among parliamentarians. It read: "On behalf of the Russian Orthodox Church to which most Russians belong, I testify that the suggested updates and additions fully meet the hopes and necessities of the Orthodox clergy and lay people."

The patriarch expressed the hope that the parliament would decide to "put in order the activities of foreign religious organizations in Russia," and stated that "a person's choice between a religion must not be imposed from outside."

Thus the head of the Russian Orthodox Church made it clear that they desire to gain a dominate position among other denominations which would be sealed by law, in spite of the fact that over one-third of all Christians (about 15 percent of the population) are not Russian Orthodox and people professing other religions make up about 10 percent of the population of the country.

The Russian Orthodox Church appears to want to cut the ground out from under the feet of her competitors. It becomes still more obvious as militant "defenders of the Orthodox faith" expressed their delight in having the amendment ratified by explicit and artless words. For example, when speaking on the Hour of Parliament TV program, the Chief of the Foreign Policy Department of the Russian Orthodox Church, metropolitan Cyril stated that the activities of Catholic and Protestant denominations should have been restricted a long time ago and that the law should have dealt even more strongly with these other religious groups.

What some frivolous politicians and zealots of the Orthodox Church were calling for in their speeches and sermons is a reality now. All activities of foreign missionary organizations are legally banned. All denominations other than the Russian Orthodox Church may encounter difficulties in their activities. The only exception to this, ironically, is Islam. Muslim clergy supported the legislators in ratifying the new decree. The reason for this is a slowdown of Islam's spread and a great work being promoted by Protestant churches in Middle Asia, most of them begun by various foreign ministries and churches. The Islamic sects of Russia, unlike the Russian Orthodox Church which has branched out internationally and trains ministers intensively, traditionally rests on internal religious structures.

All denominations that closely collaborate with foreign missionaries are going to have considerable difficulties in making contacts. For example, the Roman Catholic Church of Russia, being led from the Vatican, is not able to receive ordained ministers from abroad. This is a hindrance since there are very few seminaries in Russia which train Catholic priests.

Protestantism in Russia, which is traditionally oriented toward ministries abroad, will have a difficult time. Most Protestant churches (especially young ones) may simply expire when no help comes from sister churches in the West. In today's difficult economy, churches are not virtually able to meet their financial needs by themselves because of inflation and a falling standard of living. Most church members receive financial aid from their churches. This type of charity would soon fade. It would become impossible to free leaders from being otherwise employed. This would restrict the amount of ministry time of a pastor. In addition, many Christians are working in offices created by foreign ministries and churches, which gives them an opportunity to give more time to the work of ministry. Closing these offices would force workers to seek employment elsewhere.

Most Protestant churches conduct evangelism together with representatives of sister churches in the West, who provide cars, musical instruments and management skill. Of course, an absence of this kind of aid will not bring the work of the Church to an end, but will considerably hinder them. The most detrimental factor would be the lack of experienced people from the West who would help with organizing both technical and spiritual aspects of these activities.

Christian literature is also in a rather complex situation. Now the Orthodox Church actually possesses a monopoly on the printing of "must" literature - New Testaments and Bibles. And most of such literature came to Protestant churches from abroad or was printed by foreign missionaries in Russia. The one significant exception is the Protestant Publishing House, an indigenous organization in Moscow run by Baptist businessmen and pastors. But one publishing house will not be able to supply all of Russia with needed Christian literature. For example, one of the largest ministries that specialized in printing and distributing Christian literature (and especially New Testaments), Terry Law Ministries, which has printed and distributed millions of pieces of Christian literature free of charge in the former USSR, now has no chance to print in Moscow as it used to in the past. Obviously, Belarus and Ukraine will become the main publishing centers soon, which will cause an expenditure on shipping to remote parts of Russia to rise.

And yet the most serious problem Protestant churches will have to encounter is that a great many churches which have been started with the aid of western ministries will have no chance to invite pastors and teachers of sister churches. This may breed various kinds of heretical teachings and delusion.

Among other religions, Judaism, which also depends on aid from Jewish communities in the West, has been injured the most. Virtually all ministers in synagogues are foreign citizens.

Of course, the attempt of any church to fence her flock off from various false teachings and heresies is understandable and good. But when a rivalry between certain denominations becomes more like an attempted genocide, being accomplished by the laws of the state, the situation becomes graver. In spite of the fact that the amendment was intended to restrict activities that could damage people physically and mentally, almost nothing has been done in this area. Rather, the state has begun to view harmless religious groups as cruel cults, such as Hasidism and an American Baptist preacher who had come to help with teaching ministers of local churches. Yet the amendment offers no resistance to national religious cults which are genuinely harmful to the health and mentality of the population, such as the "White Brethren." (See related article on page .)

Denominations other than the Russian Orthodox Church are at the mercy of an army of bureaucratic officials who have an officially given right "to punish or grant pardon." And the Orthodox Church will surely exert pressure on their decisions. Censorship will probably appear in mass media under a vague formula of "the interests of the State and the harmony of the society." Then it would be only one more step towards the persecution of those who belong to rival denominations, which would undoubtedly increase the number of emigrants from Russia.

Thus Russia, with her parliament as a mouthpiece, indirectly proclaimed the Orthodox Church as the established religion, which is to officially replace the teachings of Marx and Lenin. As a Moscow journalist put it: "Russia is not a secular state anymore." When a state violates its separate status sealed by its constitution and, contrary to the law, marks out a particular denomination, most common as it is, not only liberty of conscience, but also every right and freedom of man is in jeopardy.

This is the time for the alarm to be sounded. If the West wants to help Russia and other states with their economies, then it must sure they are willing to maintain democracy. Otherwise it may breed another totalitarian system.

Totalitarian trends are usually seen in countries that suffer from economic and political instability. People try to unify everything in the hope that it will bring stability. But this will not help; when freedoms are violated, government must be opposed and protested against. As a partner and assistant, the West must explain this to the former USSR.

Editor's note: Since the Russian language Forerunner is an indigenous publication published in Kiev, Ukraine, now an independent nation, the Russian law has little bearing on their activities. However, we urge you to pray for continued freedom for the printed word to go forth from Ukraine.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Cult group disbands after leader predicts end of world in Kiev

By Sergei Zavgorodny

2/95

KIEV, Ukraine (FR) - One example of the proliferation of religious cults in the former USSR, is the "White Brethren," a group which fuses certain tenets of Christianity with eastern religions such as Hare Krishna.

Most of the White Brethren disciples are between the ages of 13 and 20 years. Psychologists state that their followers, generally young people, suffered mentally from the fanaticism of the "Brethren."

The cult came into existence several years ago through its leader Krivonogov who is said to possess hypnotic abilities. His wife claims to be an incarnated Messiah and Living Goddess. Having mistakenly predicted the end of the world several times, they marked this year with the date of November 24.

Ukrainian officials reported that over one hundred thousand adherents of this cult were coming to Kiev in order to "celebrate" this event. The city expected a riot, but nothing serious happened. The leader and Messiah now are under arrest, their followers being dispersed.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

Be sure to check out Predvestnik the Russian language Forerunner!

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Science

"I Wisdom dwell with prudence,
And find out knowledge of witty inventions."
Proverbs 8:12

A Note on Stephen Jay Gould

Abortion and Creation

Abortion and Evolution

Case for Creation: Accountability to God

THE AGE OF THE EARTH

Another Look at Dinosaurs

Recommended Books on Origins

Creationism explains human diversity

Does Creation Science Have the Answers?

Darwinism: Fact or Faith?

Darwin's Final Recantation

The Design of the Universe - Who Holds the Patent?

Evolution and Thermodynamics

Creation Column: Evolutionary Improbabilities

Evolved From a Lesser Animal?

Large fossil graveyard discovered in Central Florida

FOSSILS AND THE GEOLOGIC COLUMN

The Debate Over Foundations

Geologist displeased with Creationist articles

How Did We Get the Races?

Creation Scientists Visit Soviet Union

Is Evolution more Scientific than Creation?

Macro vs. Micro Evolution

Medical Professional Care

The Missing Link?

THE FINGERPRINTS OF GOD: The Origin of Man

THE FINGERPRINTS OF GOD: The Origin of the Universe

Philosophical Origins of Evolution

Creation: A Reflection of the Creator

Author Ruth Nourse on "Special Science Issue"

Scientist is appalled with recent articles

Lucy Fails Test As Missing Link

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Back to The Forerunner!

A Note on Stephen Jay Gould

By Jay Rogers

He's been called "America's most well-known evolutionist" by many; he is also evolution's leading theoretician and radical thinker. This Harvard zoologist has proposed the idea of punctuated equilibrium as a response to the randomness of natural selection.

The fossil record doesn't quite bear out what Darwin said. So Gould has been telling his colleagues, "Come on, let's see what the fossil record really does show and then explain that." Instead of saying what other evolutionists have said, "We're still missing some links; we've got to dig some more to prove our theory."

According to Gould, what the record shows is that changes in evolutionary development are quite sudden. Imagine that. New models have all of a sudden appeared in fossils, rather than with a whole lot of easy, rather imperceptible, steps.

The Creator of the Universe has this reply: "He who sits in the heavens laughs" (Psalms 2:4).

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Abortion and Creation

by David Skjaerlund

God's view of life is the same as the majority of the modern medical community: life begins at conception. The Bible refers to conception as the beginning of life approximately 40 times. In the book of Genesis alone, the phrase "conceived and bore," in reference to children, is found 11 times. The close pairing of these two words clearly emphasizes that conception, and not birth, is the starting point of life.

Scripture also refers to life being passed on through "the seed." After the fall of man, the promise of redemption came - saying that Eve's "seed" would ultimately triumph over the "seed" of the Serpent. In Genesis 3:15, God did not refer to a coming child or even a future conception; the promise involved a seed. God even promised King David that an everlasting kingdom would be established "through his seed" (II Samuel 7:12-16).

The angel Gabriel, when revealing the promise of Jesus to Mary, explained, "Behold, you will conceive in your womb, and bear a son, and you shall name Him Jesus" (Luke 1:31). Jesus was considered the Messiah from conception, not at the first heartbeat, the first brain wave, or at birth. Jesus did not slowly develop into a person over time, but was recognized as the Redeemer of mankind from conception.

John the Baptist leaped within the womb of Elizabeth when Mary came to visit. Though still a fetus, John was able to recognize and respond to Jesus in the womb of Mary, who had been pregnant only a few weeks. Here we see that God recognizes both the embryo and the fetus. This demonstrates the biblical view of when life begins. A child should be respected as a living being from conception, not during its "evolutionary development."

God has a special purpose and destiny for each individual from the very beginning and sees each person uniquely created in His image. The Bible has many recorded instances of when God spoke concerning the destiny of individuals, even before they were born. Abraham had the promise of Isaac's destiny even before he was conceived. Samson's parents knew of their son's special life task before he was conceived. Elizabeth and Zechariah were told of the great call on John the Baptist prior to his conception. The messianic purpose of Jesus was not only revealed to Mary before conception, but to Eve at the very beginning of the world.

The prophet Jeremiah was told, "Before I formed you in the womb I knew you, and before you were born I consecrated you; I appointed you a prophet to the nations" (Jeremiah 1:5).

The Psalmist stated: "For thou didst form my inward parts, thou didst knit me together in my mother's womb. Thou knowest me right well; my frame was not hidden from thee, when I was being made in secret, intricately wrought in the depths of the earth. Thy eyes behold my unformed substance; in thy book were written, every one of them, the days that were formed for me, when as yet there was none of them" (Psalms. 139:13-16).

Is Man Just a Link in the Chain of Life?

When a mother decides to abort her child, it is not just the removal of non-living tissue, but rather the elimination of part of God's plan for mankind. She is directly cancelling God's purpose and call upon that child. Who are we to say that a child has no worth or value, when in God's eyes that child may be a modern John the Baptist, Jeremiah, David or Moses?

God's hatred and judgment against abortion arises from His very character and nature as the Creator of life. God hates abortion because it touches His reflected glory. In Genesis, we read that God decided to make man separate from all the animals, in His image and in His very likeness, reflecting His glory. Man was a very unique act of creation. Animals were formed out of the ground, but in order to make man, God "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and man became a living being" (Genesis 2:7, 9).

Man was also set apart from the rest of creation by being made in the image and likeness of God. God has created man "a little lower than Himself" and wants to crown man with glory and majesty. In fact, God had desired that man would partake of His nature and glory and even judge the angels (I Corinthians 6:3). God intended man to reflect His image, not simply to be a little higher than the apes. Man is the crown of creation, and even the most insignificant individual has much more worth and beauty in the eyes of God than any other living thing on the face of the earth.

Not only was man set apart from the rest of creation, but man was also set over the rest of creation. The creation and animals were to serve man, not compete with Him in an evolutionary struggle for existence. God commanded man to "be fruitful and multiply, fill the earth and subdue it and rule over every living thing that moves upon the earth" (Genesis 1:28).

Man was to be productive and multiply the glory of God over all the earth. God looks to future generations and intends for His glory to fill the earth. Man was given the responsibility to fill the earth and to be a steward of it, not just to compete with other living things and struggle for his existence. In Genesis we find that man is at the center of God's purpose. Only man had the commission to be fruitful, multiply and subdue the earth. God also created man for His fellowship, and only man has the promise of dwelling with God forever (Revelation 21:3).

What God Feels in an Abortion

God's heart is broken over the practice of abortion, and His judgment is stirred against a nation that supports the practice. When a baby is aborted, part of God's glory will never shine on earth; part of God's image will never be manifested on earth. God will not tolerate mankind touching His very represented glory.

When a baby is aborted, the very first commandment God gave is rebelliously broken. Disobedience is not taken lightly by God, especially when it interferes with the very purpose and plan that God has intended for this earth. Continual disobedience to His commandment by a nation will not go overlooked by the Creator. God has warned us that those who do not bear fruit will be cut off from the life and blessing of God (John 15:2).

When a baby is aborted, God weeps because he can no longer look forward to many days of fellowship and intimate friendship with that individual on earth. God mourns because he has just lost one of His own children - whom he had intended to love and provide for.

The abortion issue is not merely a debate over a mother's right to preserve her own career or goals by not taking the responsibility to care for a baby. Abortion deals with the sanctity of life, an issue on the very heartbeat of God. God has placed the highest value on human life, whether that life is an embryo or an adult. That price was the cost of His very own Son.

God has placed all of His effort and creativity in bringing forth each individual in His image. But even more so, God was willing to sacrifice the life of His own Son that we might have life. One cannot afford to neglect this great demonstration of God's love for human life. We should be willing to lay down our needs and desires to fulfill God's great plan and purpose for this earth - and for every individual for whom Jesus Christ died.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Abortion and Evolution

- by David Skjaerlund

The battle rages on all fronts to preserve the unborn baby. Christians are lobbying and protesting across the nation to preserve the inherent right to life. However, those in the scientific and medical community have continued to depersonalize the humanity of the unborn with supposed findings based on evolutionary philosophy.

Considered simply a "fetus," the humanity of the unborn child is often viewed today as contingent upon its full development. This concept is not governed by scientific facts, but rather by an evolutionary presupposition that assumes life is only a process, rather than the result of a special moment of creation.

This premise arose from a scientific idea that one could determine evolutionary history by studying the development of the fetus. For example, human life begins with a single cell and then multiplies in complexity. During one stage, the human fetus has so-called "gill slits" that seem to represent the "fish stage" in human development. Next, the fetus seems to have a tail segment similar to reptiles, and the yolk sac seems similar to bird evolution.

Thus, the development of the fetus has appeared to some scientists as a mere reflection of how humans supposedly developed from lower animal forms. This idea was widely taught even at the beginning of this decade. Even though this evolutionary idea of fetal development has been scientifically disproven, the notion still seems to prevail. Evolutionists argue that the fetus has not fully evolved into a baby, and thus has no need or right to life because it is not fully human.

A closer examination of this premise reveals scientific error, however. The "gill slits," or pharyngeal pouches, actually become the thymus gland, the parathyroids, and the middle ear canals. The "tail", or coccyx, is a point of muscle attachment at the tailbone, and the yolk sac produces the first blood cells. All of these morphological phenomena are necessary stages in normal human development.

Just a Higher Form of Animal?

The second scientific justification for abortion is that the life inside the womb has no special value since man is only a higher form of animal. The baby in the womb, when viewed in this manner, can easily be replaced by another whenever the desire arises to keep a child. The unborn baby has no individual worth or personality; it is simply regarded as another organism.

This has led some to judge the right to life as one based on "productive worth." Abortion is simply a removal of something that does not have any perceived value. An article written by Dr. Peter Singer in Pediatrics magazine ten years after the 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision expresses this ethic:

"If we compare a severely defective human infant with a dog or a pig ... we will often find the nonhuman to have superior capacities ... only the fact that the defective infant is a member of the species homo sapiens leads it to be treated differently from the dog or pig. But species membership alone is not relevant ... If we can put aside the obsolete and erroneous notion of the sanctity of all human life, we may start to look at human life as it really is: the quality of life that each human being has or can obtain."1

As a result of this philosophy, human life no longer seems special. We now compare our children to pigs or dogs, and whichever has the greater ability should be allowed to live. As implied by philosopher Michael L. Tooley, abortion is morally permissible since "a newborn baby does not possess the concept of a continuing self, anymore than a newborn kitten possesses such a concept."2 Winston L. Duke, a nuclear physicist, continues along the same lines: "It should be recognized that not all men are human ... It would seem to be inhumane to kill an adult chimpanzee than a newborn baby, since the chimpanzee has greater mental awareness."3

The right to life, in the minds of these men, is based on one's contribution to society and not simply on the inherent right of that individual to life. Nobel prize winning biologist Francis Crick has even gone so far as to propose that no newborn infant should be declared human until it has passed certain tests regarding its genetic endowment; if it fails, it forfeits the right to live.4

Abortion has been justified as a natural part of the struggle for existence and the survival of the fittest. Evolution propagates the notion that the world is overpopulated and that one must struggle to exist and compete against others. Our main effort should be to secure our own needs, goals and pleasures.

This is reflected in the abortionists' contention that an unwanted pregnancy hinders the mother from working and functioning in society. Why should a child be introduced to a life which would seem to consist of a constant struggle for existence and survival? Many mothers refuse to bring a child into the world because of this perception of a grim, dark future for the world. Another child would simply mean greater pressure on the human race because a population increase creates an increased competition for dwindling natural resources.

Barbara Burke wrote in Science magazine, "Among some animal species, infant killing appears to be a natural practice. Could it be natural for humans too, a trait inherited from our primate ancestors? Charles Darwin noted in The Descent of Man that infanticide has been 'probably the most important of all checks on population growth throughout most of human history.'"5 Thus, abortion has become a socially accepted means of birth control in the eyes of these "experts."

Evolution and abortion are concerned with one's own present state of survival; it destroys the idea of building for future generations. As a professor at Emory University summarized: "Unbridled self-indulgence on the part of one generation without regard to a future one is the modus operandi of biological evolution and may be regarded as rational behavior."6

Joseph Sobran summarizes: "Our civilization, until recently, agreed in imagining the unborn child on the pattern of the incarnation, which maximizes his dignity; but many people now imagine him on the pattern of evolution, as popularly understood, which minimizes his dignity."⁷

The Real Experts Speak Out

However, another segment of the scientific and medical community is no longer arguing about whether the fetus can be considered life. Most agree that life begins at conception, and not when a heartbeat is detected at 18 or 25 days, or when brain waves are recorded as early as 43 days. Life has a very distinct beginning and is not the result of a gradual process of change and evolution over time.

Jerome Lejeune, a professor of fundamental genetics in Paris and a pioneer in detecting chromosomal diseases, said to a Senate committee: "Life has a very, very long history but each individual has a very neat beginning, the moment of its conception."⁸ When the 23 chromosomes from the father and the 23 chromosomes from the mother are combined at conception, that cell now represents an entirely new individual and is not just a part of the mother's body.

Sixty prominent physicians recently presented a declaration of biological facts proving that an unborn child is conclusively a living human being. These doctors include Drs. Hofmeister and Schmidt, past presidents of the American College of Obstetrics and Gynecology; Dr. Joseph Faley, past president of the American Academy of Neurology; and Dr. Bernard Nathanson, formerly one of the leading abortionists in America.

These doctors stated: "The developing fetus is not a sub-human species with a different genetic composition. As clearly demonstrated by in vitro (dish) fertilization, so also in vivo (womb), the embryo is alive, human, and unique in the special environmental support required for that stage of human development."

Dr. Alfred M. Bongioanni, professor of pediatrics and obstetrics at the University of Pennsylvania, submits from a strictly genetic position that "human life is present throughout this entire sequence from conception to adulthood and that any interruption at any point throughout this time constitutes a termination of human life."⁹

The abortionists' evolutionary justification for the termination of human life has been completely invalidated by scientific evidence. As pro-life leader John Wilke has stated, "In truth we did not come from a single cell. Rather, each of us once was a single cell; and all we have done since then has been to grow up."¹⁰

1 Peter Singer, "Sanctity of Life, Quality of Life," Pediatrics, 1983, Vol. 72, p. 18.

2 Michael Tooley, "Abortion and Infanticide," Philosophy and Public Affairs, 1972, Vol. 2, p. 63.

3 Winston L. Duke, "The New Biology," Reason, August, 1972.

4 Francis Crick, Nature, 1968, Vol. 220, p. 429-30.

5 Barbara Burke, "Infanticide," Science, 1974, Vol. 185, p. 653.

- 6 W.H. Murdy, "Anthropocentrism - A Modern Version," Science, 1975, Vol. VIII, p. 1172.
- 7 Joseph Sobran, "The Averted Grace," Human Life Review, Spring, 1984, p. 6.
- 8 Subcommittee on Separation of Powers, printed in "The Beginning of Human Life," Studies in Law and Medicine, (Chicago: Americans United for Life, Inc., 1981), p. 2.
- 9 Dr. Alfred Bongioanni, National Right to Life News, June 15, 1981.
- 10 John Wilke, National Right to Life News, June 29, 1981, p. 5.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Case for Creation: Accountability to God

by David Skjaerlund

During the famous Scopes Trial of 1925, Clarence Darrow, the lawyer defending evolutionist John T. Scopes, stated that "it is bigotry for public schools to teach only one theory of Origins ... Let the children have their minds kept open, close no doors to their knowledge ... shut no door to them, let them have both creation and evolution ... The truth will win out in the end."

Over 60 years later, the teaching of two origins still creates a controversy, but today it is over whether we should allow any presentation of the creation position. Many organizations, such as the ACLU and the Humanist Association, are waging a war against the teaching of creationism. Their concern is not just over the impact of creationism in scientific inquiry, but with its deeper religious implications.

Part of the controversy surrounding the teaching of creation is that it naturally demands accountability to God. God, as the Creator, holds the right of ownership over His creation and thus has absolute authority. Since He is the Creator and owner of our lives, He expects us to be proper stewards and to live according to the rules which He has established to preserve His property.

Consider, for example, a work of sculpture. The sculpture first belongs to the artist because he created it. The sculpture is his property, and if he loans it to someone for display, then that person must be a responsible steward over the sculptor's property or be held accountable for any damages. The artist also may wish to sell the sculpture and the deed of ownership is then transferred to the one who pays the desired price.

Likewise, as a creation of God, we are His property and consequently are accountable for the way we live. We are His property not only because He created us, but because He paid the price for our lives. He paid the greatest price for mankind through His only Son, Jesus, who purchased us with His own blood. As we are reminded in I Corinthians 6:19-20, "do you not know that your body is a temple of the Holy Spirit who is in you, whom you have from God, and that you are not your own? For you have been bought with a price: Therefore, glorify God in your body."

God created us with a free will to make decisions, and with that free will He gave us the responsibility as stewards over our lives. Every person will stand before God at His judgment seat and render an account for every thought, word and deed (Matthew 12:36-37). Creation thus implies accountability:

Creation =

Property =

Stewardship =

ACCOUNTABILITY

God gave us guidelines in the Bible so that we might be faithful stewards over the life He entrusted to us. God established laws to preserve our liberty, and for our best interests ... not to put us under bondage. As the Creator of the universe, He is the supreme authority and knows what is right and wrong as outlined in His commandments. We are indebted to God, and our obedience is justly due Him, not a favor we perform.

Charles Montesquieu, a 16th century political philosopher, writer and jurist, wrote in his Spirit of Laws, "God is related to the universe, as Creator and Preserver; the laws by which He created all things are those by which He preserves them. He acts according to these rules because He knows them. He knows them because He made them; and He made them, because they are in relation to His wisdom and power ..."

All laws are subject to the authority of God. As Sir William Blackstone, the eminent English jurist, once summarized in his Commentaries(which were once required reading for every student of law): "Man ... must necessarily be subject to the laws of his Creator. This will of His maker is called the law of nature. This law of nature ... is of course superior to any other. No human laws are of any validity, if contrary to this; and such of them as are valid derive all their force from this original."

It was the supremacy of God's law that was the basis for justice and law as written in the U.S. Constitution. The Constitution was upheld as supreme law because its authors recognized the Creator as the supreme Law Giver, and thus based it upon biblical principles. During this century, we have seen the erosion of the Constitution as supreme law and the emergence of case law. Case law is evolutionary in nature; the primary basis for verdicts is precedent, rather than moral absolutes. As a result, we have seen the legalization of sociological trends of America.

The reason for the popularity of this evolutionary approach to law is that man now can determine what is right and wrong and can justify his own actions. Without absolute standards, as those established by the Creator, any means for survival and existence can be justified depending upon society's beliefs. The Nazi holocaust was executed in the name of social policy. Men embrace evolution because it implies that they are no longer accountable to abide by absolute moral standards.

The more evolution erodes the foundation of law and morality, the more people will resist authority and begin to set their own rules for living. In the days when there was no king in Israel, "Every man did what was right in his own eyes" (Judges 17:6). When the creationist view of origins is presented, a return to absolute standards of law and morality is the obvious conclusion of the argument. This is precisely why many refuse to accept creation: they must accept the fact that they are accountable to God for the way they live.

Men are without excuse in denying God's rulership, "because that which is known about God is evident within them; for God made it evident to them. For since the creation of the world His invisible attributes, His eternal power and divine nature, have been clearly seen, being understood through what has been made ..." (Romans 1:19-20).

Our obedience to God is demanded to ensure proper stewardship over our lives, and not just a request to follow the "Ten Suggestions." If we choose to disobey the laws of the Creator, then there are consequences to pay. The final price for disobedience of God's laws is eternal death (Romans 6:23).

The Book of Romans is an outline of the results of not acknowledging God as Creator and ultimate authority. Because people exchange the truth about God (as Creator) for a lie (evolution) and worship and serve the creature rather than the Creator, God gives them over to be totally controlled by their lusts and passions. "And since they did not see fit to acknowledge God, God gave them up to a base mind and to improper conduct ..." (Romans 1:28).

Our society is faced with many of the immoral conditions described in the first chapter of Romans. It is of little surprise that we are beginning to see the widespread effect of not acknowledging and worshipping God as the Creator. The teaching of evolution has been the first step in bringing these cultural judgments upon our society.

Acknowledging God as the Creator is essential for obeying His laws and following the teachings of Jesus. Jesus knew the correlation between creation and obedience; "For if you believed Moses, you would believe me; for he wrote of Me. But if you do not believe his writings, how will you believe my words?" (John 5:46-47). We have already been given the testimony of Jesus through creation.

As creation is presented, the call for accountability is sounded as well. Since many wish to ignore the fact that they must stand before their Creator and give an account for the way they have lived, they try to silence the case for creation. They deliberately ignore the scientific facts and labor with all their effort to prevent the evidence for creation from being presented in the classroom. Nevertheless, even as Clarence Darrow admitted, we can be sure that "the truth will win out in the end" and it is the truth of the Creator that will set men free.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

THE AGE OF THE EARTH

Time and earth history is perhaps the most debated area in the whole question of the origin of life. Everyone seems to have his own idea about how old the earth is. In a real sense time is only vitally important to the evolutionist. Evolution needs lots of time for life to have arrived on the scene. Short time periods would seriously undermine the theory. On the other hand, the creationist says that an intelligent designer outside this universe made the earth and the life on it. Whether this life was created in six days or six billion years is insignificant to the scientific view of creation. The issue of time, then, is critical for the evolutionist - not for the creationist.

This article will touch on a variety of important time measurements such as radiometric dating, oil well pressure, decay of earth's magnetic field, polonium halos, and others. Be critical of your own bias and ask questions about the standard scenario of five billion years. How does one select a time clock? How does one know if the "clock" is giving the correct time?

Frequently we hear that anyone can see this is an ancient, billion-year-old earth that we are living upon. One resource for teachers says that this whole question has no relevance because we know the earth is 4.5 billion years old. Have you asked the question, what would a young earth look like?

When we look at many geologic formations we see evidences of catastrophe. But if we see a valley with a small stream running through it, can we assume this is evidence for long time periods? To answer these questions geologists, like Dr. Steve Austin, have been carrying out valuable studies of the catastrophe at Mount St. Helens and its effect in producing geological formations. We can view his work with great interest because it also seems to relate directly to questions we have about other geological structures on planet earth.

The explosion of Mount St. Helens in Washington State on May 18, 1980 was initiated by an earthquake and rockslide involving one half cubic mile of rock. As the summit and north slope slid off the volcano that morning, pressure was released inside the volcano where super-hot liquid water immediately flashed into steam. The northward-directed steam explosion released energy equivalent to 20 million tons of TNT which toppled 150 square miles of forest in six minutes. In Spirit Lake north of the volcano, an enormous water wave initiated by one eighth cubic mile of rock slide debris stripped trees from slopes as much as 850 feet above the pre-eruption water level. The total energy output on May 18 was equivalent to 400 million tons of TNT, or approximately 20,000 Hiroshima-size atomic bombs. (Austin, 1986)

Dr. Austin points out that up to 600 feet of strata were formed since 1980 at Mount St. Helens, and this from one of the smaller catastrophes in earth history! He states that Mount St. Helens provides a rare opportunity to study transient geologic processes which produced, within a few months, changes which geologists might otherwise assume might require many thousands, or even millions of years.

How are Rocks Dated?

Hundreds of thousands and even billions of years are claimed for radiometric dating techniques. No one was there to verify the initial amount of the radioactive mineral. No one was there to watch the radiometric decay taking place. We assume that it must have been constant and unchanging from what we can measure today.

Consequently, it is very important that we consider carefully the assumptions that have to be made. If our assumptions are wrong then our results will be wrong.

Assumptions for Radiometric Dating

1. The system must have been a closed system. By this we mean that the system cannot be altered by contamination from the outside or loose material from inside the system migrating to the outside. It must be constant.
2. The system must have a starting point - a beginning. For example, there would have to be just uranium and no lead in the beginning of the Uranium 238 and Lead 206 series.
3. The rate of decay must always have been the same. If decay rates of the material vary, the resulting measured time cannot be trusted.

Is there such a thing, in nature, as a closed system? Is it possible to know if the system started at a zero point? Are we sure about the rate of decay way back in history? In addressing these questions, we will deal with generalized information and then direct you to more detailed sources if you choose to explore further.

Dating techniques are all based on certain assumptions. The true age depends entirely upon the validity of the assumptions. Let's look at these assumptions and see how they stand up to the test.

Uranium Dating Method

First, the uranium method is really a whole family of decay methods and not just one. The method depends upon uranium and its sister element thorium going through long decay chains until finally the stable element, Lead 206 is reached. In this process, alpha particles are given off. In fact, eight alpha particles are given off from each Uranium 238 atom that decays to Lead 206 .

In evaluating the uranium dating method, the fact is that uranium minerals always exist in open systems. This causes us to immediately question the validity of the method. One of the chief authorities on radioactive dating, Dr. Henry Faul, said:

Uranium and lead both migrate (in sales) in geologic time, and detailed analyses have shown that useful ages cannot be obtained with them. Similar difficulties prevail with pitchblend veins. Here again widely diverging ages can be measured on samples from the same spot. (Faul, 1966)

Remember the one criterion for valid dates is a closed system. We find all of the age dating methods (rubidium-stontium, uranium-lead and potassium argon) can give different and widely varying dates. The lead ages, for example, have given consistently older dates than the others. This very fact encouraged Dr. Leon T. Silvers of the California Institute of Technology to do an experiment that showed lead could vaporize and move out of the sample (Driscoll, 1972). A Scientist could calculate a "low" age for the sample from which the lead escaped and a "high" age for the sample where the lead migrated to.

Potassium-Argon Dating Method

This method is the most popular method for dating rocks, and is used extensively to give general dates for fossils found in some rock formations. Potassium minerals are found in igneous and in some sedimentary rocks, therefore the Potassium-Argon method isn't as restricted in its use as is uranium. Here is what happens: Potassium(40) decays into Argon(40) when its molecules capture an electron. Potassium(40) has a half life of 1.3 billion years. In other words, one half of the Potassium(40) has decayed in 1.3 billion years.

The K-Ar system behaves a little differently from the uranium series above. An amount of Potassium(40) decay (11%) will become Argon(40), instead of Calcium(40). The ratio of potassium to argon is considered in the calculations for the age factor of a particular rock. But again, we find that the ideal does not exist in nature. We don't know for sure how much potassium and argon were originally there in the sample. Furthermore, we don't have any way of knowing that the sample was not contaminated in nature or exposed to migration.

The Question of Helium

Alpha particles, which are actually helium nuclei and are positive (+) are given off by the decay of the Earth's radioactive isotopes. Eventually, the helium migrates out of rocks in the earth's crust and ends up in the atmosphere as helium gas.

Here these particles of helium gas reach their upper limits in the atmosphere where a few molecules escape. There is continuing research going on concerning the helium inventory in the atmosphere and one of the scientists investigating this problem is Dr. Larry Vardiman of Christian Heritage College and the Institute for Creation Research. Even though helium in the atmosphere does not date the rocks, it does tell us something about the earth's age.

If the earth was billions of years old, the radioactive production of helium in the earth's crust should have added a large quantity of helium to its atmosphere. Current diffusion models all indicate that helium escapes to space from the atmosphere at a rate much less than its production rate. The low concentration of helium actually measured would suggest that the earth's atmosphere must be quite young. (Vardiman, 1986)

If the low concentration of helium in the atmosphere is valid then we must consider this as a positive evidence for a young earth.

Radiocarbon Dating

Most of you will recognize this as "carbon" dating. This type of dating is confined to things that were once alive. All living things are made of molecules containing carbon. Carbon also exists in the gases of our atmosphere, such as CO, CO₂, etc. In addition to this all of our food is made up of carbon in some form. For example, our fats, sugars, and many other molecules are carbon based (organic). We can understand why Carbon(14), radioactive carbon, as well as non-radioactive carbon, (12)C, can penetrate all parts of a living plant or animal. Carbon(14) gets into a living system as some ratio of Carbon(14) to Carbon(12). Carbon(14) and Carbon(12) are continually taken in to the living system.

When the organism dies then the Carbon(14) to Carbon(12) ratio changes as the radioactive Carbon(14) begins to decay to the stable Carbon(12). We can measure the ration of Carbon(14) to Carbon(12) in living things and also measure the Carbon(14) to Carbon(12) ratio in a dead organism. Knowing the decay rate of Carbon(14), (a half-life of 5730 years) we can tell how old the organism is. Unfortunately, as with the other radiometric dating methods, there are assumptions and these must be considered.

Where does the radioactive carbon come from? Cosmic rays strike air particles (78 % nitrogen, 21% oxygen, 1% other gases) and knock the neutrons out of them. Colliding neutrons cause protons to leave the nitrogen atoms (Nitrogen(14)) which causes them to change to Carbon(14) - radioactive carbon. Any Carbon(14) atom can attach to oxygen to make carbon-dioxide (CO₂) which is one of the gases that we breathe. Therefore, they thoroughly permeate living systems. Once the living organism dies then the Carbon(14) is no longer replenished and the Carbon(14) to Carbon(12) ratio changes as the radioactive carbon decays to non-radioactive carbon.

When Carbon(14) was first suggested as a dating method, it was assumed that the earth was billions of years old. If the world were this old, the amount of Carbon(14) produced in the atmosphere would have equilibrated - it would have become a stable, predictable amount. But what if the earth is young? The amount of radioactive carbon in the past would be less than it is today. This error would mean that Carbon(14) dating methods would be more accurate for dating recently dead materials (only a few thousand years dead), but would give ages with increasingly greater error the farther back in history from which the sample comes. In other words, there is much work yet to be done to calibrate and validate this method before it becomes an accurate measure of time.

Polonium Halos

Polonium halos are perhaps the most significant evidence for a young earth. Dr. Robert Gentry's landmark study of polonium halos is published, in detail, in the book Creation's Tiny Mystery (1986).

A little history on the "radio halos" of polonium will help you understand the significance of these microscopic marks in the earth's first of "oldest" rocks. If you refer to the uranium decay series, you will see elements (isotopes) Polonium(218) and Polonium(210).

All of these isotopes are radioactive and give off radioactive particles. Now the interesting part is that the Polonium isotopes all have short half lives (the time needed for half of the Polonium to decay). Polonium(218) has a half life of 3 minutes, Polonium (214) a half life of 164 microseconds, and Polonium(210) has a half life of 138.4 days.

What does this mean? First of all, the halos (halos formed by radioactive decay) are from 218, 214, and 210 isotopes of polonium that has no connection with uranium. In other words, they exist by themselves without any uranium parent present! When they are found in the oldest rocks (granites and biotites) one has to imagine that the rocks must have solidified very quickly in order to allow the decay of the radioactive particles to make these distinct marks.

If the first rocks cooled slowly (as all evolution models demand) then in molten rock there could be no marks from the decay. The decaying particles can only make their marks after the molten rocks have solidified. Gentry concludes that this scientific evidence establishes that the age of the earth's oldest rocks cannot be more than thousands of years. Polonium halos in our oldest rocks give strong evidence as a limiting chronometer, that is, a time clock which can set an upward limit on the age of the earth's crust.

But here is the interesting part: if the evolutionist refuses to accept that the oldest rocks were instantly created, as evidences by the Polonium halos, then he must accept that decay rates are not constant! This admission then puts the third assumption of radiometric dating (constant decay rates) into disarray.

The radiometric dating methods discussed are but one type of time clock. Below are some other time clocks, which, in many cases require fewer assumptions than the radiometric methods discussed above.

Oil Well Fluid Pressures

"Oil well fluid pressures" are a limiting chronometer that speaks to young earth ages. We are told by geophysicists that the existing pressures found in these deep wells would cause the oil to seep out of the formations in which it was trapped if the true age of the earth were billions of years. (Cook, 1968)

Eroding of the Continents

Eroding of continents seems to indicate that if this process had been going on for millions of years (14 million is the present calculation) then all of the present continents, eroding at present rates, would have been eroded to sea level. (Nevins, 1978)

Decay of the Earth's Magnetic Field

Decay of the Earth's Magnetic Field can be used as a limiting chronometer. Dr. Thomas Barnes has calculated the present strength of the earth's magnetic field and extrapolated (calculated) backwards. He has concluded that the strength of the magnetic field a million years ago would have been so great that it would have torn the earth apart. This information limits what the age of the earth could be. He estimates that it took thousands of years, rather than billions of years, for the earth's magnet to have decayed to its present strength.

Now there are no questions about the existence of the magnetic field but there are many questions about how it got here and whether it has undergone numerous reversals. At this point in time Dr. Barnes has firmly refuted the various challenges that have been offered by some against this strong evidence. (Barnes, 1983)

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet! It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Another Look at Dinosaurs

By Jay Rogers

Few subjects are more thoroughly captivating to the minds of young people than dinosaurs. In an exhibit called "Dino-Mania," lifesize, animated, robotic dinosaurs shriek and growl at visitors, but most of them - including the children - are fascinated and relish the experience.

What is it about these extinct, giant lizards that captures our attention to such a degree?

The thought of giant lizards roaming the earth in vast numbers is an awesome concept. Most people have been familiarized with these creatures since childhood. Huge giants of up to 90 feet long really did exist at one time - the large number of fossil remains attest to this fact. With hundreds of species of giant reptile remains for paleontologists to examine, there are just a few dinosaurs that have been popularized in the imagination of the average person:

* Apatosaurus = Commonly referred to as a brontosaurus, until scientists discovered that the animal was not well known enough to have been reconstructed. The first "brontosaurus" was actually the body of a apatosaurus with the head of a diplodocus. Both of these animals are similar in shape. This animal reached a length of up to 90 feet and had a long neck designed to reach up high into the treetops so that it could take in lots of twigs and leaves, which would then be swallowed and stored in the massive stomach where all the goodness could be released.

* Stegosaurus = Reaching lengths of 25 feet long, this was a moderate sized animal by dinosaur standards. With a very small head, some scientists believe that the stegosaurus had another brain located in the tail, which was equipped with long pairs of 3 foot spikes, its only defense against predators. The large plates of bone running down the spine were not part of a defense system, but had more to do with regulating the body temperature. By positioning itself at the right angle, the blood filled surfaces of the plates could either be warmed by the sun or cooled in a breeze.

* Triceratops = There are many species of ceratopids, dinosaurs with large plated heads with sharp pointed horns. The most well known, the triceratops (a name meaning three-spiked head), was the first complete skull found of these animals. Reaching a length of 29 feet, the triceratops was the largest of the ceratopids. These heavy four footed animals were designed to be a match for meat eating predators such as the tyrannosaurus. This was a powerful creature that thrived in great numbers before its extinction.

* Tyrannosaurus Rex = This monster is thought to be the most terrifying creature that ever lived. It is also the best known dinosaur because it was the biggest - reaching 46 feet in length and weighing 7 tons - walking about on two powerful hind feet, it was as tall as a house (reaching heights of up to 18 feet). This meat eating dinosaur had a large head with a powerful jaw used to kill and eat smaller dinosaurs. Its teeth were like daggers of up to six inches in length. Strangely, its forelimbs were small and seemingly useless.

However, it had large powerful hind legs with claws of up to 8 inches in length. This once-great titan makes present day animals seem like dwarfs in comparison.

* Flying Reptiles = Although not true dinosaurs, these reptiles resembled giant flying lizards filling the skies of a forgotten time. The most well known of these, the pteranodon and the pterosaur, had immense wingspans. Scientists are unable to explain how featherless, flying reptiles of this size were able to remain aloft, let alone take off and land. Some have even suggested that these reptiles must have remained aloft for their entire life. To many, the existence of flying reptiles remains a mystery.

The average person will readily recognize the dinosaurs described above. Dinosaurs are the subjects of movies, children's toys and even pop up as plastic figurines in cereal boxes. It seems like dinosaurs are a familiar part of our culture. Yet none of us has ever seen a dinosaur. Perhaps this is the reason why large numbers of people flock to see exhibits such as Dino-Mania.

Age of Dinosaurs

Visitors to dinosaur exhibits like the one at Florida's Museum of Natural History are usually greeted with this introduction: "The dinosaurs reigned on the earth for 140 million years, mysteriously vanishing over 100 million years ago." Every idea imaginable has been suggested to explain their disappearance, such as destruction by volcanoes, changes in environments, eating of dinosaur eggs by mammals, a dinosaur disease epidemic, etc.

Although some scientists have proposed ideas as to why dinosaurs became extinct, none of these theories seem to explain why such a prolific and successful group of living beings could have so suddenly and completely disappeared. As one paleontologist put it: "The dinosaur story is like a mystery thriller with the last pages torn out. A most important part is missing. That is true and the paleontologist knows it. He also knows the riddle will probably never be solved."¹

The popular view that millions and millions of years passed between the emergence of these lizards and their eventual demise poses another question: "How could a group of animals with such a successful track record have so suddenly disappeared?"

A time line has been devised that puts the occurrence of dinosaurs in perspective. The following time line of geologic ages appears on the wall of most museums displaying dinosaur exhibits:

A Competing View

Some scientists disagree with this scheme of events, however, and opt for a belief in universal catastrophism. Most of these scientists have a basis of belief in the biblical account of creation and the Genesis Flood, which gives the record of a sudden and cataclysmic event in the earth's history over 5000 years ago. This was the accepted view in the field of geology for hundreds of years.

Catastrophism refers to the theory that the geological features of the earth were created suddenly by natural disasters, such as flooding, earthquakes, volcanoes, storms, etc. Uniformitarianism refers to the theory that most of the geological features of the earth were created slowly through uniform processes, such as erosion, sedimentation, continental drift, etc.

Catastrophism gave away to uniformitarianism only after the proposals of Charles Lyell were published in 1830. Lyell set up a geological time scale similar to the one above and supplied each epoch with millions of years in order to advance the theory of uniformitarianism. As anti-biblical humanism became entrenched in academic circles in the mid-1800s, Lyell's theories prospered.

When Lyell read Charles Darwin's manuscript, Origin of the Species, he wrote the young naturalist urging him to publish it, since Darwin's proposed biological uniformitarianism closely paralleled his own ideas. Lyell promoted the publication of Darwin's work and later helped to popularize it among his influential friends.

The fossil evidence buried in the earth's strata does little to confirm the idea that dinosaur fossils were formed due to uniform processes. Most paleontologists today would agree that in order to form a fossil, the remains of an animal must be buried quickly without time for the carcass to decay. Likewise, in many fossil beds, remains of numerous carcasses have been found disjointed and jumbled in an unsorted fashion. The existence of these fossils indicate that the carcasses were impounded by a great watery upheaval of catastrophic impact.

Fossil Graveyards

One feature of the deposits of the earth's strata, which is difficult to explain according to the theory of uniformitarianism, is the existence of "fossil graveyards." In many places all over the world, thousands of fossilized remains of all types of animals are found jumbled together in the same strata. Attempts to account for these vast graveyards in terms of present day processes are absurd.

A more likely explanation is that large numbers of animals were deposited by the tidal actions of a single large scale flood and then covered over suddenly with tons of sediment. The biblical view of a world wide catastrophic deluge does much to vindicate the possibility of this occurrence.

In addition to explaining the great availability of fossil remains in the earth's strata, universal catastrophism solves some of the mysteries that surround the existence and sudden disappearance of dinosaurs. This mysterious disappearance may be explained by the record of events given to us in Genesis chapter 7 which describes a universal flood catastrophe which occurred roughly 5000 years ago.

According to this account, the entire land mass of the earth was suddenly and completely engulfed by a massive deluge which came from both a vast supply of water below the earth's surface and a water vapor canopy separated by a "firmament" above the earth's atmosphere.²

Men and Dinosaurs

If the biblical view of dinosaurs is correct, then we could assume that the human population and dinosaurs lived simultaneously in the pre-flood world described in Genesis chapters 1-7. Although the evidence is often ignored by paleontologists and archaeologists, there are records of dinosaurs having lived at the same time as human beings.

First, dinosaurs are mentioned in the Bible. In Genesis chapter one, we are told "and God created the great sea monsters."³ The word for "sea monster" or "great whales" in Hebrew is tannin which is most frequently translated "dragons." Evidently this term includes all large monsters, even those now extinct.

The frequent references to dragons in the Bible, as well as in the legends of most cultures of the world, certainly should not be shrugged off as mere fairy tales. It is possible that these stories are handed down as the tribal memories of men who encountered dinosaurs before they became extinct.⁴

Serpentine Birds

Another evidence for the coexistence of men and dinosaurs are ancient Mayan relief sculptures discovered in Mexico which resemble birds with reptilian features. According to the archaeologist who discovered the sculptures, there is evidence that the serpent-birds were not intended to depict mythological animals, but were realistic representations of an animal coterminous with ancient Mayan culture.

If such flying reptiles were contemporary with Mayan culture, it would refute the belief that these creature became extinct during the Mesozoic "age of dinosaurs."⁵

A recent find which gives further credence to a more recent "age of dinosaurs" is a monster found in the nets of Japanese fishermen. In the spring of 1977, off the coast of New Zealand, a gigantic creature 30 feet long, with a husky neck about five feet long and weighing 4,000 pounds was hauled up in their nets. The fishermen photographed the creature which resembles an aquatic dinosaur known as the pleisosaur, a type of an aquatic dinosaur.⁶

Paluxy River Valley

One of the most spectacular examples of men and dinosaurs living at the same time are the fossil footprints in the Paluxy River bed in Glen Rose, Texas. Here, in limestone beds are found large numbers of both human and dinosaur footprints. In two locations the tracks cross each other, and in two cases human and dinosaur tracks actually overlap each other.

These tracks occur in supposedly cretaceous sediment and have been repeatedly documented by creationists, yet ignored by uniformitarian paleontologists. The Institute for Creation Research urges skeptics to see a film entitled Footprints in Stone before dismissing this evidence as biased.⁷

A Vapor Canopy in the Sky

If we think that the Genesis account of the pre-flood world is correct, then we should be able determine that this was the type of world that could support dinosaurs. Genesis 1:7 describes the creation of a water vapor canopy that once enveloped the earth. This, in addition to the large subterranean deposits of water, would account for the large amount of water unleashed upon the earth during the Genesis Flood.

Under this protective canopy, greater air pressure in the atmosphere supplied more oxygen to plants and animals and allowed them to grow larger. The lush vegetation of this era could have also fed large dinosaurs such as the brontosaurus.

One of the questions that we have briefly touched upon - "How did giant reptiles fly?" - is best answered by accepting the existence of this pre-flood world. Nothing of such weight and size could possibly fly in the post-flood world of today. However, if the atmospheric pressure on earth prior to the flood were twice as much as it is today, these animals would have had no problem flying.

Creation scientists theorize that this vapor canopy also acted as a protective shield for the earth blocking out large amounts of radiation from the sun. This would dramatically affect radiometric dating devices, such as Carbon-14, Uranium-238, and Potassium-Argon methods.

Scientists who accept a catastrophist model maintain that rocks, sediments and fossils formed before the Genesis Flood, would have a significantly lower amount of radioactive material and a higher rate of radioactive decay since the sun's radiation was hindered by the higher moisture environment of the earth's protective shield. The resulting dates of these rocks would be recorded as much higher than their actual age if the event of a universal deluge is not taken into account.

The dates of 300 million to 100 million years of triassic, jurassic and cretaceous sediments are erroneously supported by assumptions made in the dating process. The mistake is to assume that the amount of cosmic radiation entering the earth's atmosphere has been constant since the age of dinosaurs.

Those fascinated with dinosaurs should take joy in the discovery that according to the Bible, dinosaurs were originally a part of God's creation. The fact that men and dinosaurs once lived in the same world may explain the fact that we are enamored with these great beasts. Perhaps it is a part of an innate desire in us to return to a forgotten world - a world that God created and called "good."⁸

1 J.M. Good, T.E. White, and G.F. Stucker: "The Dinosaur Quarry," U.S. Government Printing Office, 1958, p. 26

2 Genesis 1:6,7; 7:11. 3 Genesis 1:21 The Amplified Bible

4 Henry M. Morris, The Genesis Record (Grand Rapids, Michigan: Baker Book House, 1976) p. 69

5 "Serpent-bird of the Mayans," Science Digest, Vol. 64 (November 1968), p.1.

6 Ralph Swanson, "A Recently Living Pleisosaur Found?" Creation Research Society Quarterly, v. 15:1, June 1978, p. 8.

7 Footprints in Stone, available on a rental basis from Films-for Christ Association, R.R.2, Eden Road, Elmwood, Illinois, 61529.

8 See Genesis 1:4,9,18,21,25,31.

A Bibliography

In addition to the above sources the editors of The Forerunner recommend the following books on biblical creationism.

Scientific Creationism by Henry Morris, Ph.D.

The Waters Above by Joseph Dillow

The Genesis Flood by Henry Morris, Ph.D.

The History of Evolutionary Thought by Bert Thompson, Ph.D.

Evolution: The Fossils Say No! by Duane Gish, Ph.D.

The Biblical Basis for Modern Science by Henry Morris, Ph.D.

Origins and Destiny by Dr. Robert Gange

The Biblical Flood and the Ice Epoch by Donald Wesley Patten

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Recommended Books on Origins

Compiled by LLOYD E. SUNDERLAND

1. Norman Macbeth, DARWIN RETRIED; Boston, Gambit, 1971:

Macbeth, a retired lawyer, has devoted years of study and research on the subject of Darwinism and the unpublicized writings of evolutionists about the concepts and dogmas espoused therein. He presents an objective analysis of the evidence for and against evolution from the perspective of a jurist. Macbeth doesn't reveal his personal beliefs about origins, but he appears to have "evolved" from a Darwinist to a skeptic in the course of his research on the subject. His book provides an excellent basis for student review and evaluation of evidence about origins.

2. Frances Crick, LIFE ITSELF; New York, Simon and Schuster, 1981:

Crick, co-winner of the Nobel prize for discovery of the DNA structure and an avowed evolutionist, believes that life could not have originated here on earth. His prestige as one of the foremost researchers in microbiology demands attention among evolutionists when he challenges the entire Darwinian proposition that life evolved on earth against insurmountable odds. Crick concludes that life must have evolved in outer space since it could not have happened on earth, and he does not recognize any other possibility or origin. His book presents convincing arguments against the conventional theory of evolution.

3. Michael Denton, EVOLUTION - A THEORY IN CRISIS; London, Burnett Books, 1985:

Denton, a molecular biologist with a broad background in medical science and research in England, Australia and the United States, has written a deeply penetrating book about Darwinism. His revelations about the nature of DNA, amino acids and the cytochromes have caused a real consternation among biologists. He is himself an evolutionist, but his book raises serious questions about every facet of conventional theories on evolution. He does not advance or promote any philosophy on the subject but presents a scholarly report on a purely technical basis. This book has been written for the layman, and is must reading for anyone seriously interested in the subject of origins.

4. Richard B. Bliss and Gary E. Parker, ORIGIN OF LIFE; San Diego, Creation-Life Publishers, 1979:

Bliss and Parker are creationists today, but Bliss was an active evolutionist for many years. As such, he worked on the Biological Sciences Curriculum Study team in the 1960's rewriting the biology textbooks for the nation to reflect the evolutionary dogma espoused by the National Science Foundation, and has extensive experience in molecular biology research and education. Their book is presented as a challenge to students to evaluate all available evidence against two models for the origin of life and then make decisions for themselves based on the evidence rather than blindly accepting someone else's conclusions.

This is an easy-reading book that should generate healthy discussions among thoughtful students.

5. Fred Hoyle and Chandra Wickramasinghe, EVOLUTION FROM SPACE; London, J. M. Dent & Co., 1981:

Hoyle, who has called himself an agnostic, was knighted for his outstanding work in astronomy and the steady state theory about the universe; while Wickramasinghe, a self-proclaimed atheistic Buddhist, is a renowned mathematician and astronomer. Their independent mathematical analyses showed that it was totally unlikely that life could result from time, chance and the properties of matter. Together they concluded that "it becomes sensible to think that the properties of physics on which life depends are in every respect deliberate." Findings of such eminent scientists as these which discredit evolutionary dogma are systematically censored or excluded from textbooks and libraries of public schools.

6. Luther D. Sunderland, DARWIN'S ENIGMA - Fossils and Other Problems; Santee, CA, Master Book Publishers, 1984:

Sunderland, an aerospace engineer with significant achievements in his profession, devoted many years of extracurricular study on the subject of origins. Under the auspices of the New York Board of Regents, he conducted an extensive investigation of fossil evidence through visits to major natural history museums and recorded interviews with their key paleontologists. He found no evidence for Darwin's gradualism such as transitional fossils (so-called missing links), but he did find that such information was carefully hidden from the general public. Sunderland summarized the results of his reports to the Board of Regents in Darwin's Enigma, and he conducted a worldwide crusade against censorship of negative information about origins. His motto was "truth in education," and he opposed teaching of dogmatic philosophies in public schools.

7. R.L. Wysong, THE CREATION-EVOLUTION CONTROVERSY; Midland, MI, Inquiry Press, 1976:

Wysong entered the scientific field through veterinary medicine, but his many activities include teaching human anatomy and physiology. Although he is clearly convinced of the utter improbability of life originating by chance, his book presents a fair analysis of scientific pros and cons about evolution. It is acknowledged by critics to be a serious scientific study of this controversial issue. This book is a scholarly work that provides an excellent reference for laymen.

8. A.E. Wilder-Smith, THE NATURAL SCIENCES KNOW NOTHING OF EVOLUTION; San Diego, Master Books, 1981:

Wilder-Smith has earned doctorates at three different institutions in England and Switzerland in chemistry, pharmacology and medicine. His vast scientific background includes research in chemical industries, cancer research, teaching pharmacology, and authoring over 50 scientific papers and more than 20 books published in eight languages. He has devoted much effort in the study of evidence about origin of life and species. He is clearly a critic of evolution, and gives very convincing technical arguments in support of his position. It would be difficult to challenge his scientific credentials or his intellectual integrity. This is a widely read book and an excellent reference.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(51514032c8ca341817228f39f1307b05_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(c444627dab9fee9a1550c053ffaaaae2_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Creationism explains human diversity

by David Skjaerlund

America has been dubbed "the melting pot" because so many international visitors have come to live in our nation. During a stroll down the streets of New York City or San Francisco one can meet individuals from almost every nation in the world - from Africa, Asia, South America, Australia, and Europe. Whenever we see all the distinctly unique races and nationalities represented in the world, we are reminded that the nations are a testimony of a creative God who desired individual diversity when He created man.

Some modern scientists and anthropologists believe that the diversity among the races resulted from a process of evolution rather than creative design. Evolutionists suggest that certain races gained characteristics which allowed them to develop into a "superior" race over other "inferior" people. Early 19th century evolutionists were convinced of "the evolutionary superiority of the white race and the inferiority of others, especially the Negro."¹

Charles Darwin, the father of modern evolutionary theory, was opposed to slavery on moral grounds, but he also adhered to the idea of white supremacy. He wrote, "I could show fight on natural selection having done more for the progress of civilization than you seem inclined to admit ... The more civilized, so-called Caucasian races have beaten the Turkish hollow in the struggle for existence. Looking to the world at no very distant date, what an endless number of the lower races throughout the world."²

Another leading evolutionist in the 19th century, Thomas Huxley, who was responsible for the widespread acceptance of Darwin's evolutionary ideas, wrote this shortly after the American Civil War: "No rational man, cognizant of the facts, believes that the average Negro is equal, still less the superior, of the white man."³

This problem of racism was further fueled by other scientists who based their views on evolution: "After 1859, the evolutionary schema raised additional questions, particularly whether or not the Afro-American could survive competition with their near-white relations." We are horrified to hear their answer: "no ... The African was inferior. He represented the missing link between ape and Teuton."⁴

Adolf Hitler's "social engineering" policy, which resulted in the deaths of millions, was an example of the evolutionary view of races. "Hitler believed in struggle as the Darwinian principle of human life that forced every people to try to dominate all others; without struggle they would rot and perish. Even in his own defeat in April 1945, Hitler expressed his faith in the survival of the stronger and declared the Slavic peoples to have proven themselves the stronger."⁵

Today, almost 130 years after Darwin's claim, we do not find one superior race, nor do we find particular ethnic groups becoming extinct. Instead, we find different nationalities gaining respect for their individuality and the diversity of their cultures. As we learn more about the development and diversification of man's culture, we realize that society has not evolved into its present state, but that man has used unique gifts and knowledge from God to improve living conditions.

Common Ancestors

All of us, as members of the human race, are descended from the first original family presented in the biblical narrative of Genesis - Adam and Eve. Every race and nationality is traced to this common source. This line of ancestry passed through Noah when God saved his family from the flood. Discoveries in science are providing support for this as well. Scientists recently analyzed and compared a small fragment of DNA isolated from various human placentas. According to reports in Newsweek and Discover, the genetic differences were very small and few distinctions between races were found.

One of the researchers, Berkeley biologist Mark Stonkeking, said, "We're a young species, and there are really few genetic differences among cultures. In terms of our mitochondrial DNA, we're much closely related than almost any other vertebrate or mammalian species."¹

Stephen Jay Gould, the Harvard paleontologist and a leading evolutionist, remarked on the significance of this discovery: "It makes us realize that all human beings, despite differences in external appearance, are really members of a single entity that's had a very recent origin in one place. There is a kind of biological brotherhood that's much more profound than we ever realized."²

But Where Did Races Come From?

If Adam and Eve were the parents of the human race, then how did the diversity in humans come about? The answer is really quite simple: it is the result of genetic variation that existed in Adam and Eve. It is not, as some scientists propose, the result of mutation and evolution over thousands of years.

Evolutionist Francisco Ayala has estimated that humans are heterozygous for 6.7 percent of their genes on the average. This 6.7 percent variety would enable Adam and Eve to produce 10 2017 before they would reproduce a twin identical to another born previously. Since the estimated number of particles in the universe is 10⁸⁰, nothing can compare to the potential variety within two people.

An example of this variation is skin color. We all have the same skin coloring agent, melanin, but in differing amounts. Skin color depends on two genes; let's name them genes A and B. Dark skinned people would have genes AABB as their genotype, while light skinned people would have aabb. If we started with two medium colored people (AaBb), we can theoretically produce all the variation in skin color within one generation. There have been reports of the birth of twins, one of which was light skinned and the other dark skinned. Adam and Eve, created in the perfect image of God, would have had the right genotypes to allow all the skin tone variations that we see today.

The Key Is Language

If human diversity can be explained by very small genetic distinctions between races, then the real fundamental difference between people groups is language. The basic cause of racial or tribal differences must be language, and it usually enforces segregation. However, the origin of languages is still unknown.

Evolutionists, in particular, have no explanation for the origin of languages. They've tried to explain it on the basis of gradual development of communication forms, starting with the early grunts of cavemen and, over time, resulting in our complex form of communication. However, man's unique ability for communication has always posed a problem.

Anthropologist Ralph Linton has stated: "The use of language is very closely associated with the superior thinking ability of humans. In his ability to communicate, man differs even more from other animals than he does in his learning or thinking ... However, man is the only species which has developed communication to the point where he can transmit abstract ideas. ... It is a curious fact that there is not a mammalian species other than man which imitates sounds ... In this respect, humans are truly unique. We know absolutely nothing about the early states of development of language."³

Vastly different and highly complex languages have been in existence as far back as historical evidence goes. As Linton explains, "The so-called primitive languages can throw no light on language origins since most of them are actually more complicated in grammar than the tongues spoken by civilized people."

As far as ancient languages are concerned, evolutionist George Simpson admits, "The oldest language that can reasonably be reconstructed is already modern, sophisticated, and complete from an evolutionary point of view."⁴

There is no explanation for the origins of different languages except in terms of the special purpose of the Creator. God desired that man should be fruitful and multiply in order to inhabit the entire earth, proclaiming His glory over the entire globe. However, we are told in the biblical record that, shortly after the flood of Noah, men tried to unite themselves into a very centrally located political system around the Tower of Babel (see Genesis 11). We are told that God confused their language, and that mankind was then scattered over the face of the earth.

The earliest record of the Chinese language is thought to have been around 2500 BC, the approximate time that God confused and multiplied the languages at the Tower of Babel. The Chinese people at this time were God-fearing and worshipped Shang Ti, or "the heavenly emperor." China remained a monotheistic culture until the introduction of Confucianism around 500 BC. As a result of having an accurate knowledge of early events, the written Chinese language is composed of characters uniquely adapted and containing the stories found in Genesis.

The Chinese word for tower seems to be a shorthand record of the story of the Tower of Babel. The first root is "dirt or clay," of which the bricks were made to build the tower. The people were all of one speech and united in their rebellion against God, as is seen in Figure 1. The Chinese character for tower most certainly refers to the Tower of Babel, since the Chinese built no towers or pagodas until the Buddhist era.⁵

The Chinese word for rebellion also means confusion. As seen in figure 2, the story is told in just two root words, tongue and man (right leg).⁶ When God changed the language of the rebels, the tongue was confused. The right hand part of the character portrays the right leg extended for walking. Since their tongues were speaking new languages, there was nothing left to do but to walk to a new place of their own. Once again, in the very roots of the Chinese language we see an accurate reflection of the Genesis account of the origin of languages.

The Tower of Babel demonstrates God's sovereignty over the nations. Each nation represents a unique characteristic and personality of God. In His eyes, all men are equal in stature, though perhaps different in appearance. One group of people is not superior to another as the evolutionists would try to depict on the basis of natural selection.

Even as scientists today are realizing, all nations have their origin in one family. God considers all men as from one blood: "He made from one every nation of men to live on all the face of the earth, having determined allotted periods and the boundaries of their habitation, that they should seek God, in the hope that they might seek Him and find Him" (Acts 17:26-27). God established the nations so that each one would fulfill His purposes.

Even as God has a unique destiny for each nation, so God has a purpose for each individual. We must simply seek after Him to discover that purpose for which He created us.

1 John S. Haller, Jr. Outcasts from Evolution: Scientific Attitudes of Racial Inferiority 1859-1900. (Urbana: University of Illinois Press, 1971).

2 "Charles Darwin: Life and Letters. Letter to W. Graham, July 3, 1881," p. 316: cited in Darwin and the Darwinian Revolution, by Gertrude Himmelfarb, (London: Chatto and Windus, 1959), p. 343.

3 Thomas Huxley, "Lay Sermons," Addresses and Reviews. (New York: Appleton, 1871), p. 20.

4 John C. Burnham, Science, 1972, 175:506.

5 P. Hoffman, Hitler's Personal Security, (Pergamon Press, 1979), p. 264.

1 "The Search for Adam and Eve," NewsWeek, 1/11/88.

2 Ibid.

3 Ralph Linton, The Tree of Culture, (New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 1955), p. 8 and 9.

4 George Gaylord Simpson, "The Biological Nature of Man," Science, 152:477.

5 C.H. Kang and Eythel R. Nelson, The Discovery of Genesis, (St. Louis, Concordia Publishing House, 1979), p. 106.

6 Ibid.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(dd161862f9164df98f62b726e9846241_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(758ebdf4629c903da74c2e079717ae32_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Does Creation Science Have the Answers?

By Bill Parks

You've been through the public schools.

You've heard biology teachers speak confidently of ape men and of the evolution of the peppered moth in England during the Industrial Revolution.

In earth science you've been taught about the extinction of dinosaurs 60 million years ago, and about the slow decay of radio-active elements which "proves that the earth is 4.6 billion years old (that ".6" gives it an extra dose of credibility).

If you took an astronomy class in high school or college, you learned that distant stars are billions of light years away, so the universe must have existed for billions of years in order for light from those stars to reach the earth.

You may believe the Bible and accept the Book of Genesis by faith, yet you have lingering questions from your years of indoctrination in evolution. I know the feeling. I was an evolutionist all through high school and eight years of college. After I became a Christian, I assumed that believing in the literal truth of Genesis came as part of the "package" - but I still didn't know how science squared with the Bible.

During a conversation back then a friend asked me, "Where do the ice ages fit in?" I didn't know. All I knew was, you can't sweep a seventeen-thousand-trillion-ton ice cap under the rug. So I continued to believe in the Bible, but I also continued to wonder ...

A few years later, I asked another friend of mine if he knew of any books which had been written on this subject, and he gave me his copy of Scientific Creationism by Dr. Henry Morris. I read it and was very surprised by both the amount and quality of scientific evidence supporting Genesis and opposing evolution.

Later I started reading other books on creation science, such as Morris' classic Genesis Flood and Paul Taylor's Illustrated Origins Answer Book, and I came to the joyful conclusion that there really were answers for all the evolutionism I had absorbed over the years. No longer did I need to believe the Bible while thinking, "Yes, but what about this and what about that?"

Probably the best single book I've read for answering these kinds of nagging questions is In the Beginning by Dr. Walter Brown, Jr. Even among creationist books it's unique in showing exactly how 17 major features of the earth were produced by the Flood and its after effects. If you've ever wanted a Bible-based explanation for ice ages, the extinction of dinosaurs, earthquakes, volcanoes, mountains, even the formation of the Grand Canyon - it's all there.

According to In the Beginning, the earth was originally created with a granite outer crust which completely encircled the globe. On top of this crust were the primordial seas. Beneath the crust was a layer of water under tremendous pressure from the weight of the underlying granite. This subterranean water would have constituted the "great deep" mentioned in Genesis 7:11, while the overlying granite crust with its seas may have been the "firmament" mentioned in Genesis 1:7.

According to this book's explanation of how the Flood happened, pressure was building up in the water trapped below the crust. Then, when God ordained the Flood, the pressure became so great that it caused a minute crack to open up in the granite.

Once this crack had started, tremendous concentrations of stress at its ends caused it to grow at almost the speed of sound in the rock. Just as a rip suddenly goes down the length of a piece of overstretched cloth, it raced around the whole earth at a speed of over 10,000 miles per hour.

Instantly, the superheated water from below came roaring up through the entire length of the crack with unimaginable power and violence, and in "the same day were all the fountains of the deep broken up" (Genesis 7:11).

The fountains jetted upward into awesome, towering clouds of water and mud, bursting in the upper atmosphere into a tremendous spray which violent winds carried around the earth. And "the windows of heaven were opened. And the rain was upon the earth forty days and forty nights" (Genesis 7:11-12).

Not only was there a torrential downpour of rain, but some of the water which had rushed upward reached altitudes high above the stratosphere, where it froze. It then returned to earth as massive ice dumps, instantly burying and freezing mammoths and other animals which are still preserved in the modern Arctic.

As the steam and water continued to thunder up through the crack, they tore tens of millions of cubic miles of sediment from its granite sides with erosive power thousands of times greater than that of any modern flood. Muddy water poured out across the earth's surface, uprooting plants and engulfing animals and people.

As erosion along the walls of the crack continued, it ate back hundreds of miles and started to carve outlines of the modern continents from what remained of the granite crust. Finally, in the newly-forming Atlantic basin so much of the crust had been removed that the earth's underlying mantle, until then compressed by the crust's great weight, suddenly began to expand upward like a giant compressed spring which has just been released.

As the mantle rose up, it pushed against the continents, and they began to slide away from it. Lubricated underneath by the remaining subterranean water, North and South America slid westward, while Europe, Asia and Africa went toward the east. Moving slowly at first but accelerating steadily, these massive granite juggernauts traveled a thousand miles in less than three days. Finally, as the water beneath them was depleted, they came grinding to a halt in their present positions.

As a rug pushed across a wooden floor crumples at its edges, great mountain ranges such as the Rockies and the Andes crumpled upward from the resistance which the continents encountered at their edges. The weight of these great mountains caused their granite roots to sink down part way into the mantle below. This displaced some of the molten rock, and it moved over to push up huge plateaus such as the Colorado Plateau.

At the same time, intense friction from these colossal earth movements melted great quantities of subterranean rock, which poured forth in volcanoes and lava flows. Masses of rock cracked and shifted, shaking the ground with violent earthquakes. Even today, earthquakes and volcanic eruptions occur in regions where the crust of the earth is still slowly readjusting from the effects of the Flood.

As the continents were compressed, they began to rise up out of the flood waters, which started draining into the newly-created ocean basins. Noah's Ark came to rest on Mount Ararat. When its occupants finally staggered out, they found a world far different from the one they had left behind. The pre-Flood earth had a warm, gentle landscape clothed with luxuriant vegetation. The world a half year later was torn, ravaged, almost devoid of plant life.

Noah had probably taken dinosaurs on board the ark - young ones which wouldn't occupy much room. Occasionally there have been surprising reports of dinosaurian creatures since the Flood, during the Middle Ages and even up to the present. However, most dinosaurs, with their voracious appetites, soon died out in the post-Flood world.

Even after the Flood waters had receded, the drama continued to unfold. Much water had been left behind on the continents in the form of huge lakes. Remnants of some of these, such as the Great Salt Lake in Utah, still exist today. Others, which received too much rainfall and drainage from higher elevations, eventually began overflowing their basins.

Once an overflow had started, erosion at the rim of the lake took place at an accelerating pace, and soon a new kind of flood was unleashed - water and mud thundering across the landscape as from a dam burst, concentrating into channels and carving the Grand Canyon and other canyons out of the soft sedimentary rocks recently left from the great Flood.

For many years oceans remained warm from the heat of the subterranean water. This created a moist climate with dense clouds, heavy rainfall, and, in the higher latitudes, snowfalls as much as 100 times greater than those of today. This snow accumulated into thick ice packs which finally began to flow outward - the ice age was under way.

This is only the broadest outline of how the Flood shaped the modern earth, with its mountains, volcanic peaks, glaciers, canyons and sedimentary rocks filled with the fossil remains of countless plants and animals overcome by the deluge.

In the Beginning fills in the details with scientifically precise, yet easily understandable language. This book will also tell you how light from the most distant stars could have reached the earth in only a few years ... why we can't always trust radiocarbon dating ... why the moon couldn't be billions of years old ... how the different races of people came to be ... why evolution is not only unscientific, but can't be reconciled with the Bible at all.

If you've ever had any unanswered questions about science and the Bible, In the Beginning may provide the answers you've been looking for.

In the Beginning is available at Christian bookstores through Spring Arbor Distributors, or can be ordered by sending $9.00 plus .90 shipping and handling to:

Center for Scientific Creation
5612 N. 20th Place
Phoenix, AZ 85016

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Darwinism: Fact or Faith?

by Chris Sharp

"Exposing Darwinism to possible falsification would not imply support for any other theory ... falsification is not a defeat for science, but a liberation. It removes the dead weight of prejudice, and thereby frees us to look for the truth."

- Phillip Johnson,
Professor of Law,
U.C. Berkeley.

Phillip Johnson, in his latest book Darwin on Trial, points to dogmatic scientists, rather than empirical evidence, for perpetuating the theory of evolution. Lack of an alternative theory and fear of giving in to creationist's claims are the reasons many refuse to consider the fallibility of Darwinism.

During a recent lecture at the University of Florida, Johnson argued that evolutionists fight attacks on Darwin with the fervency of a religious zealot, "because it takes more faith to believe in evolution than creation science." Based on their faith that the mechanism of evolution is a foregone conclusion, these scientists have abandoned the scientific method articulated by Karl Popper. According to Johnson, it is a strong faith and a disregard for empirical science which has enabled Darwin's theories to remain credible.

In Darwin's The Origin of the Species, the first theory he presented was that "the species are not immutable." Through mutations, Darwin contended that new species have appeared by a natural process called "descent with modification." His second proposal was that this process could account for nearly all of the diversity of life, because all living things have a common ancestor, and that this process was guided by natural selection or "survival of the fittest."

Darwin wrote that random, genetic mutations occur which allow the owner an advantage over its fellow members of the same species. This slightly superior creature then passes on the mutated gene to its offspring who, like their parent, are now somehow better suited to the environment. Eventually, these mutated specimens become more numerous than their ancestors because of their beneficial evolution. As a result of several million plus of these mutations, over millions of years we reach the pinnacle of evolution, Homo sapiens.

Aware of the need for empirical evidence, but having none, Darwin made an analogy to back up his claim. He pointed to plant and animal breeders who have been able to alter the characteristics of dogs, chicken, and sheep. On its face this explanation seems plausible until Darwin's original point is reviewed. Darwin argued against any purpose of intelligence behind the evolutionary process. However, it is only through thousands of years of careful, purposeful, and intelligent breeding that such a variety of dogs exists today. It is through intelligence and foresight, not chance, that rottweilers and terriers are discernibly different. Johnson notes that by "citing accomplishments of intelligent designers proves only that the receptive audience for his theory was highly uncritical."

Darwin's theory of mutations was accepted with an equal amount of imprudence. Darwin stated: "Natural selection can act only by the preservation and accumulation of infinitesimally small inherited modifications, each profitable to the preserved being ..." The last phrase of that theory is where the trouble begins, "each profitable to the preserved being." Supposing that birds evolved from reptiles, as many Darwinists do, one must accept that through many "small and inherited modifications" reptiles sprouted feathers and wings. Simply believing that over millions of years small mutations transformed the scaly, terrestrial, cold blooded creatures into warm blooded riders of thermal air currents is easy. Proving it is not.

How did these small mutations toward the designs of flight benefit reptiles? Arguing that a lizard somehow profited by the addition of small nubs after the first mutation toward wings is ludicrous. Yet many scientists, in an attempt to defend the second half of Darwin's statement, contend that such baggage would help an already efficient design. Considering a lizard's primary defenses, camouflage and speed, it is difficult to dream up a way these appendages would give the mutant any advantage over its siblings.

Another hurdle of the reptile to bird jump is the avian lung. Unlike any other species on the planet, a bird's lung only allows air to flow in one direction. Michael Denton, author of Evolution: A Theory in Crisis, although a devout atheist, recognizes evolution's many shortcomings:

"Just how such a different respiratory system could have evolved gradually from the standard vertebrate design is fantastically difficult to envisage, especially bearing in mind that the maintenance of respiratory function is absolutely vital to the life of an organism to the extent that the slightest malfunction leads to death within minutes. Just as the feather cannot function as an organ of flight until the hooks and barbules are co-adapted to fit together perfectly, so the avian lung cannot function as an organ of respiration until the parabronchi system which permeates it and the air sac system which guarantees the parabronchi their air supply are both highly developed and able to function together in a perfectly integrated manner."

Johnson's opinion that such mutations are an absurdity is not unique, as the atheist Denton attests. Johnson believes the most glaring evidence denouncing Darwinism is located in the fossil record. According to Darwin's descent with modification millions upon millions of micromutations, each profitable, allowed new species to form. Unfortunately for Darwin the fossil record tells a different story. While Darwin believed that "the number of intermediate and transitional links, between all living and extinct species, must have been inconceivably great," he would later state that the fossil record was "the most obvious and gravest objection which can be urged against my theory."

Faithful to his believe, Darwin later blamed the imperfections of the record for the absence of intermediates. He argued that fossil formations, being only snapshots of history, were formed when no intermediaries existed. Darwin himself realized the extent to which nature was obstinate towards his theory: "Nature may almost be said to have guarded against the frequent discovery of her transitional or linking forms."

Johnson suggests that there are no transitional forms, as the evidence to date suggests. Darwinists, however, believe otherwise, and fill in the gaps with macromutations, the likes of which Darwin himself refuted.

"If I were convinced that I required such additions to the theory of natural selection, I would reject it as rubbish ... I would give nothing for the theory of natural selection, if it requires miraculous additions at any one stage of descent."

The second major problem the fossil record poses for evolutionists are two features which characterize all findings: stasis and sudden appearance.

Stephen Jay Gould, the best known defender of Darwinism today, recognizes these findings to be inconsistent with evolution:

1. Stasis. Most species exhibit no directional change during their tenure on earth. They appear in the fossil record looking pretty much the same as when they disappear; morphological change is usually limited and directionless.

2. Sudden appearance. In any local area, a species does not arise gradually by the occurrence of mutations but is suddenly transformed.

Although Gould is an evolutionist, he sounds like a creationist when he reports the evidence of the fossil record.

Probably the most damning evidence addition to the plight of Darwinism is the "Cambrian explosion." From the rocks of this era paleontologists have found nearly every animal phyla and no evolutionary ancestors. The evidence says that during the Cambrian era nearly every animal phyla not only existed, but appeared suddenly.

Richard Dawkins, noted Oxford zoologist and atheist, attests to the sudden emergence of animals in the Cambrian record. "It is as though they were just planted there, without any evolutionary history." This is what creationists like Johnson have been saying all along.

By reporting empirical scientific findings Dawkins, Gould, and Denton are effectively wrecking Darwin's theory. The question which must be answered is why do scientists continue to develop new theories to satisfy Darwinism and the evidence? When a large body of contradictory knowledge is discovered over time, the original theory is discarded, and the search begins for a new theory, which allows for the new findings. This is not the case for evolutionary theory however. The new evidence, as Gould's colleague Niles Eldredge explains, is simply dismissed as "no results."

"Each new generation, it seems, produces a few young paleontologists eager to document examples of evolutionary change in their fossils. The changes they have always looked for have, of course, been of the gradual, progressive sort. More often than not their efforts have gone unrewarded - their fossils, rather than exhibiting the expected pattern, just seem to persist virtually unchanged ... This extraordinary conservatism looked, to the paleontologist keen on finding evolutionary change, as if no evolution had occurred. Thus studies documenting conservative persistence rather than gradual evolutionary change were considered failures, and, more often than not, were not even published. Most paleontologists were aware of the stability, their lack of change we call stasis ... But insofar as evolution itself is concerned, paleontologists usually saw stasis as 'no results' rather than as a contradiction of the prediction of gradual, progressive evolutionary change."

The time has come for the Darwinian community to stop making excuses for evolution. They should return to Popper's scientific method of analyzing the facts on hand before accepting a one hundred year old theory as a foregone conclusion.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Darwin's Final Recantation

Lady Hope, who visited Charles Darwin during his last days on earth, has the following to say regarding his views on evolution towards the end of his life:

It was on a glorious Autumn afternoon when I was asked to go and sit with Charles Darwin. He was almost bedridden for some months before he died. Propped up with pillows, his features seemed to be lit up with pleasure as I entered the room. He waved his hand towards the window as he pointed out the beautiful sunset seen beyond, while in the other he held an open Bible which he was always studying.

"What are you reading now?" I asked.

"Hebrews," he answered, "still Hebrews. The Royal Book, I call it." Then he placed his fingers on certain passages and commented upon them.

I made some allusions to the strong opinions expressed by many unbelievers on the history of the creation and then their treatment of the earlier chapters of the book of Genesis. He seemed distressed, his fingers twitched nervously and a look of agony came across his face as he said, "I was a young man with unformed ideas. I threw out queries, suggestions, wondering all the time over everything. And to my astonishment the ideas took like wildfire. People made a religion of them." Then he paused and after a few more sentences on the holiness of God and the grandeur of this Book, looking at the Bible which he was holding tenderly at the time, he said:

"I have a summer house in the garden which holds about thirty people. It is over there (pointing through the open window). I want you very much to speak here. I know you read the Bible in the villages. Tomorrow afternoon I should like the servants on the place, some tenants and a few neighbors to gather there. Will you speak to them?"

"What shall I speak about?" I asked.

"Christ Jesus," he replied in a clear emphatic voice, adding in a lower tone, "and His salvation. Is not that the best theme? And then I want you to sing some hymns with them. You lead on your small instrument, do you not?"

The look of brightness on his face I shall never forget, for he added, "If you take the meeting at 3 o'clock this window will be opened and you will know that I am joining with the singing."

Quoted from the Bombay Guardian, 25th March 1916, by Prof. H. Enoch in Evolution or Creation (Union of Evangelical Students of India, P.O. Box 486, Madras 7, India, 1966), pp. 165-167.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

The Design of the Universe - Who Holds the Patent?

by Grady McMurtry

Sir Issac Newton (1642 -1727) was a man of the most extraordinary genius. It is almost incomprehensible that the discovery of the Laws of Motion, the Law of Gravitation, the discovery of the light spectrum, and the development of Calculus could have all had their beginning in the mind of one man.

This same man, almost defied in his own lifetime by the scientific community, recognized the source of his knowledge and humbly proclaimed his appreciation by saying on more than one occasion: "Science is simply man's thinking God's thoughts after Him." (Proverbs 22:4)

A story is told about a globe that Sir Issac had a very skilled craftsman make for his study. Not only did this globe possess great beauty but it also operated as an astronomical clock, giving the time of day while, at the same time, showing the relative positions of the sun, moon, and the then known planets. One day a learned colleague of Newton's visited him in his study and his attention was soon drawn to the magnificent globe. He studied it for several minutes, noting the many weights, wheels and pulleys that all worked together in such a remarkable, synchronized way. Finally the visitor spoke: "Sir Issac, this is the most intriguing, most marvelous example of a craftsman's genius I have ever witnessed in my life. Please tell me who did this."

Newton answer in a subdued voice: "No one." The visitor still caught up in his enthusiasm, continued: "Sir Issac, surely you have noticed what a feat it has been for the craftsman to have all of those parts moving in such precise synchronization that the sun and the moon are at all times in the exactly proper position with respect to each other. Who was it that you said was the craftsman?"

"I said, 'No one', Sir," replied Newton.

The guest became a bit annoyed at this point and said: "Do you expect me to believe that this complex, detailed, mechanized model of the solar system could possibly have come into existence without a maker? Please sir, what sort of a fool do you take me for?"

Newton turned to the gentleman and replied: "My friend, please excuse my seeming impertinence, but I see nothing in my response to you that is any more foolish than your asking me to believe that the real world in which we live, with its infinite variety and complexity and yet obvious organization and interdependence, just happened into existence without a Designer. It truly puzzles me that this globe must have a maker, but the incomparable universe must have brought itself into being without a Creator." The visitor smiled, shook his head and changed the subject.

The subject of the design in nature and the universe is many times a sensitive topic of discussion between those who accept a literal interpretation of the Bible and those who have views ranging from limited acceptance to complete disregard for the Bible as God's Word.

An approach that is reasonably easy to see in spite of its seemingly formidable name, is the probabilistic approach, in which we consider the statistical probability that an event can take place. For example, we know that nitrogen and oxygen molecules comprise most of the air we breathe.

If, as you read this article, you are sitting in a room at normal room temperature, the molecules of nitrogen and oxygen are moving about you at an average speed of about 1000 miles per hour. These same molecules are also undergoing about five billion collisions per second.

It is possible, however, that at a given instant all molecules in the room could be moving in the same direction, such as right toward, and out through, an open door. While this particular molecular motion is possible, statistically it is so highly improbable that you need not worry about the room suddenly turning into a vacuum and suffocating you.

To be fair and objective, we must recognize that many, many very highly improbable events do indeed occur. Suppose you have in your wallet a dollar bill with an eight digit serial number. Since there are ten possible numbers, 0, 1, 2, ... 9, there is a probability of one in ten that the first digit of the serial number is 2.

There is a probability of one in ten that the second digit is a 7. There is one chance in one hundred (10×10) that the first two digits are 27. We do not have to go any further to see that the probability is extremely small that the eight digit number is 27516679, but you look at your dollar and sure enough this is the serial number.

Whatever the serial number is, it is by the previous thinking a highly improbable series of eight digits.

However, if we had been at the United States Mint on the day the Mint was printing the series of bills that includes our sought for serial number, the probability of our finding the bill would have been a certainty. On any day before this printing, we could have looked for this combination of numbers on every one dollar bill in the world and we would not have found it. Of course, were it not classified information, we could have called the Mint the day before the printing of our serial number, and they could have informed us that the number was to appear the following day. What we see then is that what appears from one point of view to be an improbable event not only has a possibility of occurring but from another viewpoint is virtually certain to do so.

In science, the final test of truth is direct observation. Scientists seek to replace the unknown with increased amounts of irrefutable evidence until they can be convinced, one way or the other, that the evidence provides only one reasonable conclusion. Both evolution and creation scientists proposit to be following this objective pursuit of truth, however, too many times both sides have failed to do so, due to their strong intellectual and/or spiritual basis.

In the remainder of the article you will read about some directly observed occurrences in living nature. The only accepted method for the development of all life, according to evolution scientists, is that of random mutations (accidental changes) which have evolved upward by natural selection over millions of years. Each mutation is said to have conferred an advantage to the organism, and is now producing all of the structures of living things.

According to creation scientists, the biblical record is a factual account of the design and origin of all of the major kinds of things, having been accomplished through the intelligent will and supernatural acts of an all knowing, purposeful Creator. In the paragraphs that follow, we ask you only to listen to what your conscience tells you as to how these occurrences came to be.

1. The millipede (species Apheloria corrugata) is a very clever chemist. On both sides of each segment of its body, glands produce a liquid containing a certain chemical compound, mandelonitrile. When the millipede comes under attack by enemy insects, it can cause a chemical reaction to occur involving mandelonitrile. The reaction results in the formation of a mild irritant, and a deadly gas, hydrogen cyanide, used in gas chambers to execute criminals. Yet, there the little millipede sits in a cloud of lethal fumes, while his attackers "split" in all directions.

2. Most spiders hate water, but one spider, Argyroneta, lives under the water. These creatures live in little silken diving bells about one foot under the surface of ponds and streams. At the surface they capture bubbles of air, which cling to the hairs of their bodies, and they fill their diving bells with bubbles brought down from the surface. The female lays her eggs in her diving bell, and the young spiders begin their life there beneath the surface. When they are ready to begin an independent life, they dart out into the water covered in a bubble of air taken from their mother's diving bell home.

3. The giraffe heart is probably the most powerful in the animal kingdom, because about double normal pressure is required to pump blood up that long neck to the brain. But their brain cannot stand high blood pressure. What keeps the giraffe from "blowing his mind" every time he bends down to take a drink? Three features have been found that may explain why it does not get headaches whenever it drinks. These factors act together in such a way as to prevent any sizeable increase in blood pressure on the brain during a giraffe's drinking time.

The explanation given by evolutionary scientists for the development of the complex functions listed above requires that some kind of advantage be derived from each of the many in between stages that resulted in the "completed" functions. But is this really reasonable?

What would be the selective pressure used to cause any of the above systems to evolve from partially completed stages toward the final completed system? Does the availability of millions of years for evolution to occur really help the situation?

I submit to you that the variety, complexity, and coordination seen throughout nature cannot lie in the area of chance, as suggested in the theory of evolution, but must find their origin in the intelligence of the Designer and Creator - God. (Psalms 104)

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(758ebdf4629c903da74c2e079717ae32_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(fe3aebe81acea8d45108cd2768939da7_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Evolution and Thermodynamics

One of the most personally significant questions one can ask is, "How did the universe, the world, and life begin?" Many scientists are hesitant to even ask questions concerning origins. They know that such questions generally become bound up with religious beliefs and Biblical "myths" which, in their view, only "confuse" the real issue (2 Peter 3:39).

Within the last century there has emerged what many believe is science's "salvation" for dealing with the subject of origins. It is a self-consistent philosophy commonly known as the "theory of evolution."

According to Sir Julian Huxley, one of the world's foremost evolutionists, "Evolution can be defined as a directional, essentially irreversible process, occurring in time, which in its course gives rise to an increase of variety and an increasingly high level of organization in its products. Our present knowledge forces us to the view that the whole of reality is evolution - one single process of self-transition."

It is most important to recognize in this definition that one who accepts it is accepting not just a biological theory but a worldview. Something so far-reaching in its scope and so comprehensive in its implication for us demands serious scrutiny. Such an examination can only be done in an abbreviated way in one article, but it is the intention of the author to stimulate the thinking of our readers. We must be ready to make a defense to everyone who asks us to give an account for the hope that is within us (1 Peter 3:15).

A most important aspect of Huxley's definition is the directionality of the change that he says occurs in evolution. Note also that this directional change is not brought about by an external agency, such as a God, but rather by self-transformation. In this, basic properties of matter and energy are capable of accomplishing this age-long process of increasing order and organization.

As far as Huxley was concerned, evolution had removed from the sphere of rational discussion the very idea of God as the Creator of organisms. Nature, energy and matter were capable of initiating and accomplishing the whole process. The behavior of nature becomes of critical interest to us, and it is the fundamental character of this behavior on which we shall now focus our attention.

When such patterns of behavior are recognized by scientists, and no exceptions to the patterns are ever seen, the scientist formulates a statement of the behavior.

This is descriptive, not prescriptive. The scientists are only describing the observed behavior of natural events, descriptions, which in themselves dictate and predict nothing.

Isn't the result the same? Absolutely not! The man-formulated statement may give an accurate account of the natural phenomenon, but the statement itself has no power to cause it to occur.

It is profoundly significant that the two most basic laws of science are associated with energy and order. These are the famous First and Second Laws of Thermodynamics.

The First Law, also called the Law of Energy Conservation, states that in any closed system no energy is either created or destroyed, though it can be changed from one form to another. This expressed by von Helmholtz in 1847, but it appeared in the Book of Ecclesiastes about 980 B. C. (Ecc.1:9).

The Second Law states that all spontaneous processes go in a direction of increasing disorder, or randomness. The available energy for maintaining the physical processes of the universe is seen to be decreasing; everything spontaneously tends toward disorder and wearing out. This second principle was described by Rudolf Clausius in 1850; however, Isaiah, David, and Paul wrote of it in Isaiah 51:6; Psalm 102:25-27; and Romans 8:20-21.

Evolution is the converse of the Two Laws. Logically Evolution and the Two Laws cannot both be true.

But the First and Second Laws are the two most proven generalizations of science. They pertain to all naturally-occurring events. According to these laws, natural processes are basically processes of conservation and disintegration.

For Evolution and the Laws of Thermodynamics to be compatible, evolution must incorporate mechanisms which can direct a process to a state of higher complexity and also provide for an energy conversion process. Evolutionists say this directionality and energy conversion are supplied by mutations and natural selection, yet both phenomena fail to operate in accordance with the evolutionary requirements previously stated.

The only reasonable conclusion from observable scientific laws is that the universe, with all its processes and with all its components, was brought into existence (Rom.4:17; I Cor. 15:36-41; John 1:1-3) by means of creative and ordering processes (Gen. 1:3-2:3) which no longer operate and are no longer available for direct scientific study.

It is the Christian's belief that the First Cause of creation was an intelligence-a great personality- the God of the Scriptures.

Could not this God be the coder and provide the mechanism for the evolution the evolutionary process? He could, but it is most unlikely. A tremendous intelligence is required to program the process and to devise a mechanism to do it. It seems that such a being would be too intelligent to do it by evolution.

If we are to be rightly related to this universe, we have to know God: Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. They made it and placed within us a moral consciousness which, by its presence, implies a moral responsibility to the Giver (Romans 1:18-22).

Seeking to know and fulfill this responsibility can result in the realization of the divine provision which God has offered to those who know Him as the Lord of their lives (Isaiah 40:26-31; Rev. 21:4-5).

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(51514032c8ca341817228f39f1307b05_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(c444627dab9fee9a1550c053ffaaaae2_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Creation Column: Evolutionary Improbabilities

- by David Skjaerlund

Evolutionists claim that life originated by natural processes, when one organism changed into another solely by chance. They propose that successive species of life arose over eons of time to produce the vast complexity and diversity of life we see in the world today. However, upon closer examination of these "natural processes," one finds the statistical probability of life originating by chance to be incredibly small and unlikely.

The origin of life by natural processes would involve the following steps: 1) Formation of simple building blocks such as proteins and nucleic acids; 2) Arrangement of these molecules into biologically important compounds such as proteins and DNA; 3) Assembly of these proteins into a metabolically active system, and; 4) Origin of the first completely independent, stable and self-replicating cell. The probability of each step occurring by chance has been calculated by many scientists, and their conclusion has been that life could not simply arise by chance.

The Problem with Jelly Beans

Most of the cell's important functions are carried out by compounds called proteins which are a chain of amino acids linked together. There are 20 amino acids which can be arranged in any combination and the average protein consists of over 400 amino acids linked together. The protein's characteristics and function is determined by the number and particular arrangement of amino acids. A protein can be represented by a sentence which derives its meaning from the particular arrangement of letters, or amino acids.

According to evolutionary theories, amino acids were synthesized spontaneously and then linked together to form the first protein from a generic amino acid "soup." In experiments attempting to synthesize amino acids, the products have been a mixture of right-handed and left-handed amino acids. (Amino acids, as well as other organic compounds, can exist in two forms which have the same chemical composition but are three-dimensional mirror images of each other; thus termed right and left-handed amino acids.)

One would think that the formation of amino acids into protein would randomly use both left and right-handed amino acids and result in approximately 50 percent use of each. However, every protein in a living cell is composed entirely of left-handed amino acids, even though the right-handed isomer can react in the same way. Thus, if both right and left-handed amino acids are synthesized in this primitive organic soup, we are faced with the question of how life has used only the left-handed amino acids for proteins.

We can represent this dilemma by picturing a huge container filled with millions of white (left-handed amino acids) and black (right-handed amino acids) jelly beans. What would be the probability of a blind-folded person randomly picking out 410 white jelly beans (representing the average sized protein) and no black jelly beans? The odds that the first 410 jelly beans would be all one color are one in 2^{410} or 109 123.

To put the odds in perspective, there are only about 10^{18} seconds in 4.5 billion years, the approximate claimed age of the earth, and it has been estimated that there are only 10^{30} particles in the universe. Yet the probability of choosing all left-handed amino acids, without even considering their particular order or specific arrangement, is much larger than that!

Monkeys Typing Shakespeare?

Proteins are functional because the amino acids are arranged in a specific sequence, not just a random arrangement of left-handed amino acids. The formation of functional proteins at random could be likened to a monkey trying to type a page of Shakespeare using the 26 letters of the alphabet. Anyone knows that the monkey is not capable of accomplishing the task set before him.

What is the probability of synthesizing a protein with a specific sequence? Let us simplify the situation first. For example, if there are 17 students in a class, how many possible ways exist for them to order themselves in a line? It would take the students a long time to physically try all the possibilities since there are over 355 trillion different ways. If the number of students were increased to 20, equal to the number of amino acids that exist, the number of possible ways would be over 10^{18} different ways, the number of seconds in 4.5 billion years!

Remember: this is a simple example of a specific arrangement of 20 amino acids. The probability is even greater when we consider that there are 20 possibilities for each spot. Also, in a specific protein of 100 amino acids, or in the formation of a hemoglobin molecule which has 574 amino acids arranged in a specific sequence, the probability becomes astronomical!

If only one amino acid is changed in the sixth position, the disease sickle cell anemia results. The RNA within the tobacco mosaic virus contains about 6,000 nucleotides. The probability that this molecule resulted by the random chance arrangement of the four nucleotides is 1 out of 4^{6000} or 2.3×10^{3216} !

A Trillion Years to Solve the Rubik's Cube

Life is not contained within a single protein, however. Several proteins are required for even the basic functions of the simplest living organism. Even the most simple known cell, such as the mycoplasma, may have 750 proteins. The list of proteins essential for survival may be narrowed down to 238 proteins. The probability of forming these 239 proteins from left-handed amino acids has been calculated to be 1 in $10^{29,345}$. Remember, the estimated number of particles in the universe is 10^{30} . (It seems that the evolutionists certainly believe in miracles ... but not in a Miracle Maker!)

Many times we hear evolutionists using the term "primitive cell," although we have no example of such. One of the simplest living systems, the tiny bacterial cell, is exceedingly complex. Dr. Michael Denton describes the bacterial cell, which weighs less than 10⁻¹² grams, as: "... in effect a veritable micro-miniaturized factory containing thousands of exquisitely designed pieces of intricate molecular machinery, made up of one thousand million atoms, far more complicated than any machine built by man and absolutely without parallel in the non-living world."¹

Our human body has over 200,000 types of proteins in its cells, and the odds of just one of those proteins evolving by chance is vast. Sir Fred Hoyle, still an evolutionist, likens this to a blindfolded subject trying to solve the Rubik's cube. The blindfolded man has no way of knowing whether he is getting closer to the solution or actually farther away. According to Hoyle, if the blindfolded subject were to make one random move every second, it would take him on the average three hundred times the supposed age of the earth, 1.35 trillion years, to solve the cube.²

Out of the 200,000 proteins in our body, roughly 2,000 provided the very essential function of cellular metabolism, similar to that in a bacterial cell. The odds of those essential enzymes arriving by chance is extremely large, almost improbable. As stated by Drs. Hoyle and Wickramasinghe, "the trouble is that there are about two thousand enzymes, and the chance of obtaining them all in a random trial is only one part in (10²⁰) 2000 = 10⁴⁰,000, which is an outrageously small probability that could not be faced even if the whole universe consisted of organic soup."³ This is about the same chance as throwing an uninterrupted sequence of 50,000 sixes with a pair of dice.

Hoyle described the thinking of those who leap to these improbable conclusions as a "junkyard mentality." To believe natural processes assembled a living cell is like believing a tornado could pass through a junkyard containing the bits and pieces of a airplane, and leave a Boeing 747 in its wake, fully assembled and ready to fly!

The magic ingredient in the evolutionists' model is time and chance, but it seems to take more faith to believe in chance than it does to have faith in the creative power of God. Nobel prize winner and discoverer of DNA's double helix structure, biochemist Francis Crick, concedes: "An honest man, armed with all the knowledge available to us now, could only state that in some sense, the origin of life appears at the moment to be almost a miracle, so many are the conditions which would have to have been satisfied to get it going."⁴

Dr. Hubert P. Yockey, former chief of the Reactor Branch at Aberdeen Proving Ground in England, accurately summed up our present scientific situation: "one must conclude that ... a scenario describing the genesis of life on earth by chance and natural causes which can be accepted on the basis of fact and not faith has not yet been written."

A Dead Cell Is a Dead Cell

When we gaze into the microscope of life, we observe the precision of an unparalleled system. Yet, even if we took all the proteins essential for a living cell and placed them within a test tube, we would still not succeed in producing life. A dead cell has all the essential components to function but something has offset the precision of its operation. Dead cells in a test tube will always remain dead no matter what is done to them, even though they seem to have the ingredients for life. Life does not simply consist of a mere assemblage of the right compounds or proteins.

When God created life in the beginning, He created life in its entirety - living cells, animals and plants. God imparted His life into all living things and was also the sustainer of what He made. Jesus Christ is often referred to as the source of life (John 1:4, John 14:6) and we know that all things were made through Him (John 1:30). It was through Jesus that God created the world (Hebrews 1:2) and by Him all things exist (Hebrews 2:10). The life of God is the very essence of all living things. Not only was it His infinite wisdom that assembled all the ingredients of life in perfect order, but it was His life that charged those ingredients with life itself.

1 Michael Denton, Evolution: A Theory in Crisis (Bethesda, MD: Adler & Adler, Publishers, Inc., 1985), p. 250.

2 Fred Hoyle, The Intelligent Universe (New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston, 1983), p. 12.

3 Fred Hoyle and C, Wickramasinghe, Evolution from Space. (London: J.M. Dent and Sons, 1981), p. 24.

4 Francis Crick, Life Itself (New York: Simon and Schuster, 1981), p. 88.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Evolved From a Lesser Animal?

Exploring the Question of Origins

Man's origin has always been the most intriguing question for those studying fossil evidences. How did he come on the scene? From what kind of ape did he evolve? Was he the abrupt creative act of an intelligent designer?

These are legitimate questions and worthy of exploration. Unfortunately, the information from most textbook sources is biased toward evolution only. Our objective in this article will be, once again, to bring the significant parts of the evolution and creation models into focus.

"The Missing Links"

Once some scientists believed that they evolved from ape ancestors, they began searching for fossil evidence. Unscientific approaches to this question have resulted in virtually every fossil ape discovered being touted as a discovered "missing link," an evolutionary ape ancestor of man. This approach has also resulted in frauds and faked data being accepted as "missing links."

Nebraska Man was reconstructed from what was later found to be the tooth of an extinct pig. This evidences was used by Clarence Darrow at the famous Scopes Trial to try to force the teaching of evolution in public schools in Tennessee in 1925. Another fraud, Piltdown Man, was constructed from faked fossils placed in a gravel pit. Both Nebraska Man and Piltdown Man were widely hailed as "missing links" by the scientific community.¹

If a scientist believes that men came from apes, he must imagine these "apemen" into existence. As a science writer recently admitted, "Bones say nothing about the fleshy parts of the nose, lips or ears. Artists must create something between an ape and a human being; the older the specimen is said to be, the more apelike they make it."²

The Fossil Apes

According to the scientific creation model men and apes were created as separate kinds. Biological variations occur within these created kinds, but nowhere does there exist evidence that apes evolved into humans. The creation model predicts that all ape fossils would be either fossils of living (extant) apes or fossils of extinct apes, which for some reason could not survive. What does the fossil evidence show?

Ramapithecines

Fossils classified as ramapithecines are of two types: Ramapithecus (Rama is named for a Hindu god - and Pithecus means ape) and a larger ape, Sivapithecus (Siva also being the name of a Hindu god). Until recently, only a few teeth and small fragments of fossil skulls had been found.

Based on this limited fossil evidence scientists believed they could recognize human-like characteristics in the teeth and skull fragments. In 1979 the crushed skull of Sivapithecus was discovered in the foothills of the Himalayan mountains. The new evidence resulting from the reassembled fragments suggests that the ramapithecines are very similar or identical to the modern orang-utan apes.³

Australopithecines

The extinct australopithecine apes are believed to have evolved from the ramapithecines. Now that the ramapithecines appear in the fossil orang-utans, no evolutionary ancestor for australopithecines has been found. Some scientists believe that Australopithecus, which means "southern ape," consists of a single species. They figure that the range of fossil skeletal types found can be due to normal individual differences and to differences in the sexes - a larger skeleton for the male and a smaller one for the female.⁴

The opposite view is that there were many australopithecine species. Where fossil skeletons of different sizes are found together it is suggested that the different species lived together in the same habitat. The generally accepted names following the many-species hypothesis are Australopithecus afarensis, Australopithecus robustus (also known as boisei) and Australopithecus africanus.⁵

What happened to the australopithecines? Suddenly they appear as fossils in the sediments of Africa and just as suddenly they disappear. Did they simply become extinct like the dinosaur? Did they evolve and change into humans? Or were the australopithecines ancient apes whose surviving descendants can be found among the modern apes?

The creation model affirms that apes have always been apes. Australopithecines were not gorillas or chimps. They were apes, but not the same as any modern apes. The well known fossil hunter Richard Leakey has observed that the size of the australopithecine brain was not very different from that of a chimpanzee or gorilla.⁶

The wear pattern on the teeth enamel of Australopithecines is that of a fruit-eater like modern chimpanzees.⁷ The foot bones of Australopithecus afarensis are slightly curved, i.e., a bone structure expected in a tree dwelling ape.⁸ Another famous fossil ape hunter, Donald Johanson, has recently observed that the skull of Australopithecus afarensis looks like a small female gorilla.

Homo Habilis

In 1946, a fossil australopithecine was discovered which appeared to be different from other australopithecines. It was excavated from a prehistoric butchering site. The site was littered with stone tools and animal fossils such as pig, horse, catfish and tortoise. The australopithecine fossil was scattered: foot bones were among bones of a fossil horse and hand bones were among bones of a fossil pig.

Again the evolution model insists that this butchering site must have been occupied before man evolved. Since evolutionists could not accept that the stone tools were made by the horse or the pig, the fossil ape was elected as the tool maker. This ape was named Homo habilis which means "handy man." However, more recent re-examination of the finger bones of this fossil ape has led scientists to conclude that the Homo habilis hand was "similar in overall configuration to chimpanzee and female gorillas."⁹

Man Tracks

Some scientists believe that the australopithecines walked upright like humans, rather than like chimpanzees, for example. Richard Leakey recently admitted that evolutionists do not know whether or not Australopithecus walked upright because no one has yet discovered a complete skeleton associated with an Australopithecus skull. It is necessary to know exactly how the spine is attached at the base of the skull for an accurate interpretation of upright walking. That evidence is inconclusive.¹⁰

The most convincing evidence of upright walking comes not from fossil skeletons, but from footprints. While the Great Rift Valley was opening along the eastern length of Africa, volcanic activity was increasing. A layer of ash covered the surrounding landscape with each episode of volcanic explosions. When an animal walked across the ash, it left its track. Rain cemented the ash and new ashfalls protected the tracks from further erosion. Human-like tracks occurred along with the numerous animal tracks. The footprints were of an adult and child. The site is Laetoli in northern Tanzania.¹¹

According to the evolution model these tracks were made before man had evolved. Therefore, the tracks must have been made by an ape walking upright like humans. Human fossils are found in this region, but evolutionists believe these humans must have lived much later.

A creation model would not reject the hypothesis that the Laetoli tracks could have been made by humans. Man existed during the time of the australopithecine apes. Fossil human bones and stone tools have been discovered along the Great Rift Valley and it is possible that these "human-like" tracks were actually made by humans.¹²

Human Fossils

The early evolutionists, not having any fossils showing a transition between ape and humans, still imagined what the "missing links" must have looked like. When human fossil skulls were discovered which show extended brow ridges or brain size, artists gave them apelike features and mannerisms. Human fossils labeled Homo erectus, which means "erect man," were initially thought to be the missing link. However the early Homo erectus fossils were known only from missing mystery fossils (Peking Man) and hoaxes (Java Man).

Homo Fossils

Some African and Asian human fossils are the remains of individuals whose brain size ranged from 775 to 1300 cubic centimeters (cc). This range is smaller than the average for modern humans, which is typically reported as 1450 to 1500 cc. However, the smaller brain sizes of some Homo fossils are within the range of brain sizes known for modern human populations. This range is approximately 830cc to 2300cc.¹³

An apparently normal woman with a brain size of 720cc has been documented.¹⁴ Also, caution should be used when associating brain size with intelligence. It is popular to believe that a larger brain size corresponds with greater intelligence. This assumption is incorrect. Here are several examples why brain capacity is not a satisfactory measure of intelligence:

1. Individual human brain capacities widely vary (e.g., ranges from 830cc to 2800cc in modern peoples) without a corresponding variation in intelligence;
2. Men average a larger brain capacity than women without a corresponding advantage in intelligence; and
3. Whales, dolphins and elephants all have larger brains than humans.

Some Homo fossils were small in stature averaging around 153 centimeters (5-feet) in height. There are people living whose average height is less than the height of these ancient peoples. The Negritos of Oceania have an average height of 147 centimeters and the Pygmies of highland New Guinea are 150 to 157 centimeters in height.¹⁵

Both the variation in height and variation in brain sizes observed in fossil humans can still be found in today's population. A recent Homo fossil discovery reported by Richard Leakey is that of a male youth (estimated to be twelve years old) who, when fully developed, would have been about six feet tall!¹⁶

Neanderthal

The picture of dull-witted, shambling, frowning Neanderthal was popular until recently. Now, as an evolutionist has written, "Most paleoanthropologists and the artists working under their direction have given the Neanderthals a shower and a shave and straightened up their shoulder. Neanderthal men and women no longer shuffle along on bent legs, staring vacantly. Now they stride erect and with purpose - not exactly like us in the face, but clearly a race of our own kind."¹⁷

The evolution model holds that increasing brain size is a characteristics of human evolution. The larger the fossil brain size is calculated to be, the closer it is assumed to be to modern humans.¹⁸ It is often taught that a characteristic of future man will be a larger brain size than humans of today. This story is popular, but the scientific evidence is against it.

The average brain size for modern humans is around 1500cc, but the average brain size calculated for Neanderthal-type people is larger - around 1600cc. According to the evolution model, this data would imply that Neanderthal peoples evolved from modern man. Or perhaps the human brain is actually shrinking! A better explanation is that the variation in brain size in human fossils is consistent with the variation predicted by genetics and the creation model.

What You Believe Does Matter

A model is important in that it affects the way people live and plan for the future. When a society believes that evolution is true, evolution becomes the model which people use to organize society and prepare for the future. Combining belief in evolution with powerful social institutions such as business (for example, the abortion industry) and politics (for example, racism) is especially dangerous and far reaching.

As an extreme example, there are people who believe that human development must be controlled. They argue that during human evolution from ape to man, weaker individuals either died, or in other ways were prevented from having offspring. Their weaknesses could not be passed to future generations.

Today we have developed technology and social welfare systems which prevent this "natural selection" from occurring. Therefore, society must control the lives of inferior people to prevent endangering the quality of life for future generations.¹⁹ Studies concerning the control of human heredity are called eugenics. These studies are directly related to evolution. The eugenics-evolution connection could be a force to control the lives of people that might be considered inferior or genetically weaker.

The creation model, on the other hand, provides for the sanctity of human life, and those adhering to this model strongly object to genetic manipulations. Truly, what you believe about human origins does matter!

Less than forty years ago the Nazis gained control of Germany. Believing in evolution, they wanted to produce a "Super Race." To do this they developed programs to separate this "Super Race" from the people they considered inferior. Many people considered inferior were isolated in work camps and many more were horribly murdered in death camps. What you believe about human origins does matter!

Authors and dates of the source documents noted in this article:

1 Gish, 1986. 2 Rensberger, 1981. 3 Leaky, 1982; Bleibtreu, 1985. 4 Johanson and Edey, 1981. 5 Leakey, 1981; Mahlert, 1980. 6 Gribbin and Cherfas, 1981. 7 Leakey, 1981. 8 Ibid. 9 Susman and Stern, 1982. 10 Cherfas, 1982. 11 Reader, 1981. 12 Parker and Morris, 1987. 13 Gish, 1986. 14 Mehlert, 1979. 15 Bellwood, 1979. 16 Understanding Genesis, 1987. 17 Rensberger, 1981. 18 Lewin, 1982. 19 Crow, 1966; Osborn, 1960.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(6059a5aa8b4ca7bb793408023d6c6e42_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(c50c8b7b2cc2cf9ff925edec0ee94c0d_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Large fossil graveyard discovered in Central Florida

By Jay Rogers

10/90

GAINESVILLE, Florida (FR) - A man diving in the Wekiva river in North Central Florida spotted an eight foot mammoth tusk lodged in a swampy peat deposit. This discovery has led scientists to one of the largest dicoveries of fossils in Florida history.

After discovering what he terms "the mother lode," Danny Masters and his father, George, helped paleontologists at the Florida Museum of Natural History safely remove the remains and bring them to the museum. Scientists study fossil remains in order to discover the early climate and plant life of a region.

David Webb, a paleontologist at the University of Florida, said the fossils date from the late Pleistocene Epoch and believes that the fossils are between "200,000 to 300,000" years old. Some of the animals found include the giant sloth, a species of arctic rodent, mastodon, bison and a short limbed South American llama.

"This is a major discovery because it is a very concentrated sample of Ice Age fossils - some of which are intact skeletons - that are extraordinarily well preserved," Webb said.

Many of the fossils found in the Wekiva River are thought to have been arctic animals, and yet Florida was not known to have had the cold dry winters that are often associated with these animals. The fossil site is the southernmost point where one species of arctic rodent, Microtus pennsylvanicus, has ever been found.

For a more complete discussion of flood geology, we recommend The Genesis Flood, by John C. Whitcomb and Henry M. Morris, (Grand Rapids, Michigan: Baker Book House, 1961).

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

FOSSILS AND THE GEOLOGIC COLUMN

The geologic layers of rocks and fossils they hold pose a perplexing problem to the evolutionist. Many books have been written in an attempt to address the problem of a lack of solid evidence for total organic evolution found in the geologic column. When you compare the findings of these scientists to what is being taught in the classroom, you may be surprised to find that many professors and textbook authors fail to discuss this problem at all.

An interesting part of the story about the geologic layers is how the term "geologic column" originated. Did you know that there isn't one place in the whole world where you can see this column? But virtually all textbooks in geological science show you this column from the bottom to the top without explanation that it is an imagined ordering of the rock strata.

One of the deepest surface exposures to the geologic rock layers is found in the Grand Canyon. This break in the earth's crust exposes more layers than any other place in the world; yet, less than half of the geologic systems are included! There are major gaps in the "ideal" or imagined geologic column sequence that is pictured in textbooks. If we are to understand the geologic column better, we must keep this fact of science in mind.

Index Fossils and Circular Reasoning

There are twelve major layers that form what is called the standard geologic column. Each of these layers is identified by the fossils that are found in it. But, strangely enough, most often the fossils are dated by the strata in which they are found. Can you see the faulty logic in that approach? Let us read what some evolutionary geologists say. Dr. J. E. O'Rourke, writes about this in "Pragmatism Versus Materialism in Stratigraphy," for the American Journal of Science. (1976)

"The rocks do date the fossils, but the fossils date the rocks more accurately. Stratigraphy cannot avoid this kind of reasoning ... because circularity is inherent in the derivation of time scales."

This is amazing! Fossils are used to date the rocks and the rocks date the fossils. What can be the value of such a chronology? Professor of geology, D. Ager, writes about his disappointment when physicists say that strata are dated radiometrically. He said that he could think of no cases where radiative decay methods are used to date fossils. (Ager, 1983)

This dating process for layers and fossils is called the index fossil system. For example, if a rock layer contains mostly fossils of sea animals called trilobites and lampshells, then these layers are part of the Cambrian system. Using this system, the different layers of the strata can be given a label and with this label comes a length of time that the index fossils is assumed to have evolved.

What Do Fossils Really Tell Us?

The Cambrian and the Pre-Cambrian fossils have always brought on a storm of criticism. Axelrod (1958), a paleontologist, said:

"One of the major unsolved problems of geology and evolution is the occurrence of diversified, multi-celled marine invertebrates in the lower Cambrian rocks on the continents and their absence in rocks of greater age."

Addressing the absence of fossils in rocks of greater age, he went on to say:

"However when we turn to examine the Pre-Cambrian rocks for forerunners of these early Cambrian fossils, they are nowhere to be found. Many thick (over 5,000 feet) sections of sedimentary rock are now known to lie in unbroken succession below strata containing the earliest Cambrian fossils. These sediments apparently were suitable for the preservation of fossils because they are often identical with overlying rocks which are fossiliferous, yet no fossils are found in them."

This evolutionary paleontologist was willing to ask some hard questions about transitional forms showing how one organism turned into another. Ager, an evolutionary geologist who was quoted earlier, seems to think this is a problem all the way through the fossil record. He predicted that no matter where we searched we would find "not gradual evolution, but the sudden explosion of one group at the expense of another."

This is what the creationist model predicts. Creationists are saying that if instantaneous creation took place then we should see evidence of complex, fully developed organisms in the geologic layers as a record of this explosion of life. Many scientists say that a "falsifying test" for creation and evolution lies in the fossils themselves. The fossil record as well as living organisms show no transitional forms. Does this falsify the evolutionist of the creationist claims?

The Punctuated Equilibrium Theory*

Knowing about significant gaps in the fossil record, evolutionists have come up with an explanation called "punctuated equilibrium."

Professors Stephen Gould and Niles Eldredge (1980) introduced a hypothesis which they feel could explain gaps in the fossil record. Certain species appear in the fossil record fully formed and persist for a long time; they then disappear from the record looking very much as they did in the beginning. Later, other species appear in the fossil record fully formed. The change to a different species occurred suddenly. These fossils, they say, are the offspring of the ones that had disappeared. In other words, evolution had been going on all the time, but the evidence can't be observed. (Stanley, 1979; 1981)

Assumptions are not facts of science. The gaps are there and there is no scientific principle that will help to bridge them. Creationists point out that everything we know about the genetic mechanisms excludes this idea from rational scientific thought.

Jellyfish and Fish

What is the evidence from the fossils for the origin of invertebrates (animals without backbones) and vertebrates (animals with backbones)? Evolutionists say that vertebrates evolved over 100 million years from invertebrates. This, of course, is a major jump, outside known biological processes, and one that brings strong counter arguments from the creationists. Could an organism such as a jelly fish evolve into a bony fish? The evolutionary hypothesis from this idea is somewhat complex. Evolutionists claim that the transition from invertebrate to vertebrate passed through a simple chordate (animals with a soft spine or notochord) state.

"How this earliest chordate stock evolved, what stages of development it went through to eventually give rise to truly fish-like creatures, we do not know. Between the Cambrian, when it probably originated, and the Ordovician, when the fish fossils of animals with really fish-like characteristics appeared, there is a gap of perhaps 100 million years which we will probably never be able to fill." (Ommaney 964)

It seems that even the well-known advocate and teacher of evolution, Dr. A.S. Romer, believes that all of the major fish classes are clearly and distinctly set apart from one another. There are no transitional forms. He said:

"In sediments of the late Silurian and early Devonian age, numerous fish-like vertebrates of varied types are present, and it is obvious that a long evolutionary history had taken place before that time. But of that history we are mainly ignorant." (Romer, 1966)

The conclusion - Not one single transitional form between invertebrates and fish has ever been found!

A Fish Story

According to the evolutionary scenario the fish gave rise to the amphibia (frogs, salamanders). As Carl Sagan suggested in his Cosmos television series, during a drought in the Devonian, when the swamps were drying up, some fish would have found it very convenient to have evolved feet and legs for walking overland (Sagan, 1980). This idea is that a lobe-finned fish (crossopterygian) was supposed to have evolved into an amphibian (ichthyostegid) about 500 million years ago.

Do we have any evidence of fossils that indicate such a transition between fish and amphibians? No! Not one fossil has ever been found showing part fins and part feet. The ichthyostegid amphibian had four basic amphibian limbs. When Dr. Colin Patterson, an Associate at the British Museum of Natural History, and author of the text Evolution, was asked whether he thought the crossopterygian was the ancestor of the ichthyostegid, he answered, "I have questions about that ... It is futile to be looking for answers to questions which we have no way of answering." (Sunderland, 1988)

Again there is no fossil evidence. The following are just a few of the serious flaws in the fish-to-amphibian theory:

1. The bone pattern in the lobe-finned fish appears abruptly and complete in the fossil evidence. No fossils connect this bone pattern to the fins of the other fish.
2. There is no elbow joint in the fin. No fossils of fish with jointed fins have been found.
3. The pelvic (hip) bone of the fish is small. This bone is loosely attached to muscle and does not connect to the back bone.
4. Other orders of amphibians appear in the same geologic layers.
5. The "living fossil" lobe-finned fish, coelacanth, is adapted for life in the deep sea, and does not use its fins for walking.

As we have seen, the data suggests abrupt, sudden appearance of fully developed, complex organisms. Only imagination in the realm of science fiction can create evolutionary scenarios from the fossil data.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

The Debate Over Foundations

by David Skjaerlund

The debate over the origin of life has raged for years and the creation-evolution issue has stirred much controversy on the college campus. The creation evolution issue is of vital importance because it is the foundation of what we believe and how we live. Our understanding of our origin will determine the way we think and the way we live.

The foundation of creationism is found in Genesis. In the first three chapters of Genesis, we find our purpose for living, our responsibility, our promise of salvation, and our destiny. The basis of life, culture, government, marriage, law, morality and death, are also found in Genesis. The first book of the Bible records God's judgment, faithfulness, promises and demonstration of love for people.

Genesis is also the most quoted book in the rest of the Bible. Because of its paramount and foundational importance to the rest of the Bible, it is of no surprise that Genesis is also under so much scrutiny. The most quoted book is also the most attacked, mocked and fictionalized book. This is because the question of origins is fundamental to the way we live.

Genesis is the foundation of the Lordship of Jesus Christ. Man was created in a perfect state since he was created in the image of God. Man was not merely a puppet of the Creator, but was given a free will and the ability to make decisions. God created man with a purpose: to rule over the earth. All that God required was that man enjoy His created paradise, and obey His commands.

Yet man desired to be equal with God, and began to exalt his knowledge above God. Adam and Eve wanted to obtain this knowledge through their own efforts - even though God had given them abundant wisdom for living. They wanted to be like God and to have knowledge to independently rule their own lives, an attitude which is the foundation of humanism.

Adam clearly knew the penalty for his disobedience - death. Yet despite the warning, he rebelled against God and sinned. Thus it was through one man, Adam, that death and sin entered the world. As a result, all men have sinned and fallen short of the glory of God(Romans 3:10, 23) and all are in the need of redemption.

By contrast, the theory of evolution says that no man has ever fallen to a lower state and that death is part of the natural process. By evolutionary thinking, mankind is always evolving upward, and we presently represent the highest form of evolution, "evolving into God Himself."

Even atheists recognize the important implication of creation. G. Richard Bozarth wrote in The American Atheist: "Christianity is - must be! - totally committed to the special creation as described in Genesis, and Christianity must fight with its full might against the theory of evolution. And here is why.

"In Romans we read that 'sin entered the world through one man, and through sin - death, and thus death has spread through the whole human race because everyone has sinned.'(Romans 5:12) ... the whole justification of Jesus' life and death is predicated on the existence of Adam and the forbidden fruit he and Eve ate. Without the original sin, who needs to be redeemed? Without Adam's fall into a life of constant sin terminated by death, what purpose is there to Christianity? None. Without Adam, without the original sin, Jesus Christ is reduced to a man with a mission on a wrong planet!"¹

The doctrines of evolution are the very anti-thesis of the Gospel. If the first Adam is merely an allegorical figure, maybe the last Adam [Jesus] is too (I Corinthians 15: 45-47).

The essence of the humanist position is this: if man was not created in a perfect state, or subsequently never fell, he has no real need for a Savior and is therefore the designer of his own destiny. Even as Genesis and the creationist concept are foundational to Christianity, so likewise is the evolutionary theory for humanism. Humanism is a man-centered philosophy that attempts to solve the problems of man and the world independently of God.

The evolutionary man is a product of time, chance, and environmental factors. Because there is a constant struggle for existence, each organism must exert all of its powers and abilities to survive. If man does not look out for his own interests and rely on his own power, then man will be subject to the process of natural selection for the survival of the fittest. Man, being the pinnacle of the evolutionary ladder, must be the center of his own attention. Evolution is man's attempt to be his own god and to determine his own destiny.

Sir Julian Huxley, a leading evolutionist and founder of the American Humanist Association, defined humanism in these words: "I use the word 'humanist' to mean someone who believes that man is just as much a natural phenomenon as an animal or a plant; that his body, mind and soul were not supernaturally created but are the products of evolution, and that he is not under the control or guidance of any supernatural being or beings, but has to rely on himself and his own powers."²

The Humanist Manifesto I was penned by educator and philosopher John Dewey in 1933. The Humanist Manifesto II, written in 1973, clearly documents the fundamental importance of origins:

"Religious humanists regard the universe as self existing and not created. ... We find insufficient evidence for belief in the existence of a supernatural; it is either meaningless or irrelevant to the question of survival and fulfillment of the human race. As non-theists, we begin with humans, not God, nature, not deity ... but we can discover no divine purpose or providence for the human species. While there is much that we do not know, humans are responsible for what we are or will become. No deity will save us; we must save ourselves ..."³

Why has the debate over origins created so much furor, and why has creation received so much opposition? It is certainly not over scientific evidences alone. Many evolutionists are beginning to seriously question evolution, especially Darwinian evolution, and several have written books against the scientific theory of evolution such as Dr. Michael Denton and his book Evolution: A Theory in Crisis.

The discussion of life's origins has received much publicity because it is foundational in nature to all areas of life. Creation is essential to the foundation of Christianity; yet evolution has been the scientific base of the antithesis. For many years the church has thought that the debate had only scientific implications and did not make an effort to present evidence which support the Genesis foundation.

J. Gresham Machen puts things in perspective: "Modern culture is a mighty force. It is either subservient to the gospel or else the deadliest enemy of the gospel. For making it subservient, religious emotion is not enough; intellectual labor is also necessary. And that labor is being neglected. The church has turned to easier tasks. And now she is reaping the fruits of her indolence. Now she must battle for her life."⁴

There are many qualified scientists who are now beginning to objectively consider the evidences for creation because new discoveries in science are strengthening the foundation for Christianity. As we present the scientific evidences for creation, the result will not only be the reformation of science but revival in men's hearts.

1 G. Richard Bozarth, "The Meaning of Evolution," The American Atheist, September, 1978, p. 19.

2 Sir Julian Huxley, American Humanist Association promotional brochure.

3 Humanist Manifesto I and II (Buffalo, New York: Prometheus Books, 1977).

4 Gresham Machen, "Christianity and Culture," The Banner of Truth, June 1969, No. 69.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Geologist displeased with Creationist articles

3/91

I read your article on dinosaurs in the October Forerunner ("Another Look At Dinosaurs, Oct. 1991") with considerable disappointment. I am both a practicing Christian and a geologist and have been so for over 20 years. And I have never had to compromise my beliefs in either area. The article placed a negative image on those geologists who are not strict creationists as being poor scientists and anti-Christian. I work with geologists who are both excellent scientists and true believers.

I firmly believe that we need to be telling folks about believing in Jesus Christ rather than worrying about whether or not man and dinosaurs ever co-existed on the earth. There are several misconceptions reported in your article.

First of all, the geologic record shows that dinosaurs did not all become extinct instantaneously. World-wide climate change is a perfectly logical explanation for the disappearance of those remaining dinosaurs and for the flourishing of the biologically superior mammals.

Secondly, the Paluxy River beds have been examined thoroughly by many geologists and paleontologists and no human footprints have been positively identified.

And thirdly, you erroneously state that Sir Charles Lyell set up the geological time table. He did not. He started the thought process that initiated the development of the time table, which is still being tested and adjusted today.

While geology is not an exact science and must rely on certain assumption, such as uniformitarianism, these assumptions have proven to work over the more than 150 year span of the practice of this science.

Roger V. Amato
Registered Professional Geologist
Silver Spring, Maryland

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

How Did We Get the Races?

By Dr. Walter Brown

Throughout history, many people have wondered: How did the human races develop? Technically, the term "race" should never have been applied to human beings since there is only one race - the human race. This term came into popular usage with the growing acceptance of evolutionism in the late 1800s.

One should realize that the word "race," referring to physical characteristics, hardly ever occurs in the Bible.¹ Instead, the word "nation" is used over 200 times. Common usage of the word "race" today refers to groups of people with distinguishing physical characteristics such as skin color, shape of eyes, and type of hair.

To appreciate how minor these variations are in humans, consider the large variations in the dog family. Most varieties of domestic dogs were produced during the past 300 years. Dogs may be white, black, red, yellow, tiny huge hairy, almost hairless, cute or not-so-cute. Their temperaments and abilities also vary widely. Since the domestic dog can interbreed with the wolf, the coyote, and the jackal, all are part of the dog kind.

By comparison, human variations are few and minor. We must remember that in every kind of life there are vast numbers of genes that permit these variations which allow successive generations to adapt to environmental changes. Without this design feature, extinctions would be much more common. Besides, wouldn't life be much less interesting if there were no variations within each kind?

The following three mechanisms have brought about the so-called "racial" characteristics in humans, just as in animals. It is which mechanism played the greatest role in this differentiation of human traits since the Genesis Flood, approximately 5000 years ago.

Natural Selection

This well established phenomenon is not a mechanism for macro-evolution as a century of experimentation has shown, although it is an important mechanism for micro-evolution. Natural selection filters out certain parental genes in successive generations, producing offspring with slightly different characteristics and less genetic variability. For example, a fair skinned person living near the equator is susceptible to several health risks, such as skin cancer.

Consequently, the fair-skinned person has a slightly less chance of living to reproductive age and passing on his or her genes for light skin color to a child. A similar situation exists for dark-skinned people living in the polar latitudes. Their skin screens out sunlight and tends to deprive them of vitamin D3 which forms in skin exposed to sunlight. Absence of vitamin D3 produces rickets. Therefore over many generations, dark-skinned people tend to live near the equator and light-skinned people tend to live at the higher latitudes.

There are several exceptions to this tendency. For example, Eskimos have rather dark skin and yet live in Arctic latitudes. Their diet which includes fish liver oils containing large amounts of vitamin D3, prevents rickets.

Small Isolated Populations

A population of people, or any other form of life, has a large set of genetic characteristics. If a few members of this population move to an isolated region, such as an island, they will have a different and smaller set of genetic characteristics than the entire population. As a result, subsequent generations on that island will have different traits from the original population.

This can be illustrated by a barrel that is filled with marbles - half white and half black. Let's say that each marble represents a person, and the color of the marble represents that person's skin color. If pairs of marbles are drawn at random and placed on separate islands about half the islands will end up with marbles of one color.

If each pair of marbles represented a husband and wife, this would be somewhat analogous to the dispersion and isolation that occurred after the Flood and the downfall of Babel. If a husband and wife ended up having the same genes. Each person carries genes for skin color. If a husband and wife end up having the same genes for dark and light skin color, then all their descendants would end up having dark skin or light skin. The color of the marbles could just as well represent any other genetic characteristic.

Actually, the genetics of this process are more complicated than this simple illustration. For example, there are at least 4 genes that determine skin color, not just one. Nevertheless, there are thousands of traits, each of which might cluster in an isolated geographic region if small groups broke off from the larger population. Thus, specific characteristics can easily arise as they did when the eight survivors of the flood and their descendants eventually responded to God's command to spread out and repopulate the earth.

From the listing of the descendants of Noah given in Genesis 10-11, we can see how easily the early migration patterns began. Shem's immediate descendants stayed generally near Ararat (what is now eastern Turkey) or migrated eastward. Ham's descendants migrated southward, while Japheth's descendants migrated northward. Undoubtedly, there were many other occasions where small groups colonized isolated regions and thus allowed their unique genetic characteristics to be expressed in subsequent generations.

What Did Adam and Eve Look Like?

Understanding these three mechanisms, we can now raise some interesting questions. What did Adam and Eve look like? Obviously, their genes coded for all the traits that humans have today - and probably other traits that have disappeared. Many of their genes, of course, were not visible (or expressed) because of the dominance of other genes.

People usually visualize Adam and Eve as looking as they themselves do. Undoubtedly, Adam's and Eve's skin color was not "white" or "black" but something in between. The Hebrew word for Adam carries a connotation of ruddy or reddish. An almost identical Hebrew word means "rosy" or "to show blood." It is quite likely that Adam's skin coloring was almost like that of the American Indian.

For the past 130 years, evolutionism has painted a very different picture. Man supposedly ascended from an apelike ancestor. Some early humans branched off sooner than others, and therefore, they look differently, and have different physical and mental abilities. This is racism, a highly prejudicial school of thought that tends to dehumanize fellow human beings.

One cannot say that evolutionists today are racists. Racism is unpopular today, and public acknowledgement of it is even more so. However, many evolutionists in the several generations following Darwin, and even Charles Darwin himself, were racists. The theory of evolution provides a very convincing rationale to justify racism.

Evolutionist and Harvard professor Stephen Jay Gould, although not a racist himself, sadly recounts that history of evolutionary racism: "Biological arguments against racism may have been common before 1859, but they increased by orders of magnitude following the acceptance of the theory of evolution."2

Genesis provides a quite different historical perspective. We are all descended from Adam and Eve and Noah and his wife. Consequently, we are all cousins. Think what the world would be like if all people realized that!

1. The word "race" as applied to groups of people, is never used in the King James version of the Bible and is seldom used in the more modern translations. However, the two or three usages in these modern translations come from Hebrew and Greek words that actually mean "family" or "offspring," not a variety or subspecies.

2. Stephen Jay Gould, Ontogeny and Phylogeny, (Cambridge, Massachusetts: The Belknap Press of Harvard University Press, 1977), p. 127.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Creation Scientists Visit Soviet Union

Spiritual discussions become a hot topic among Soviet intellectuals

SANTEE, California (FR) - A team of four scientists from the United States recently spent two weeks in the Soviet Union discussing their views on creation vs. evolution with many Soviet organizations.

Dr. Duane Gish, Vice-President the Institute for Creation Research, Roger Oakland, a creationist lecturer, Eugene Grossman, from the Slavic Gospel Association, and Dale Mason, from Films for Christ presented creationism to top Soviet intellectuals.

A number of Soviet groups, including the Institute of Scientific Atheism, the Institute of Science and Philosophy and the Darwin Museum, held discussions with the American creationists.

How did the Soviets receive their views?

According to Roger Oakland: "Many of the Soviet scientists were publicly willing to express that they believed Darwinian evolution was bankrupt. Many of the questions in our round-table discussions reflected their desire to know more about spiritual things, rather than scientific things.

The Soviets have invited the Americans to return before the year's end.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Is Evolution more Scientific than Creation?

- by David Skjaerlund

It is frequently stated that evolution is a "scientific theory" while creation is only a "religious belief." However, upon closer examination, we find that neither creation nor evolution should be taught as a proven scientific theory. Rather, they are models used to explain the origin of life.

Science deals with general principles or truths that are obtained and tested through experimentation and observation. Scientific principles must be based on observable, repeatable events that are subject to experimentation. Our assumptions and interpretations of the past can only be based on evidences that exist and are observed in the present.

If an idea is out of the reach of experimentation, it cannot qualify as a theory. If the theory can never be tested, then it is no longer within the realm of scientific inquiry. As evolutionist Francisco Ayala stated: "A hypothesis is empirical or scientific only if it can be tested by experience ... A hypothesis or theory which cannot be, at least in principle, falsified by empirical observations and experiments does not belong to the realm of science."¹

In the discussion of the origin of life, we find that the proof lies outside the laboratory where repeatable scientific observations are conducted. The origin of life was a one time event and cannot be replicated in a laboratory. Scientists cannot redemonstrate the evolution of an amoeba into a monkey. Likewise, we cannot expect God to reenact Genesis on the moon. Because the origin of life cannot be repeated or has never been directly observed by man, evolution cannot be established as a valid, proven law of nature such as the universal law of gravity.

Leading evolutionists Ehrlich and Birch have recognized this predicament: "Our theory of evolution has become ... one which cannot be refuted by any possible observations. It is thus outside of 'empirical science,' but not necessarily false. No one can think of ways in which to test it. Ideas, either without basis or based on a few laboratory experiments carried out in extremely simplified systems, have attained currency far beyond their validity. They have been accepted by most of us as part of our training."²

Since we cannot directly set up a series of experiments to demonstrate evolution or creation, we are left with two models that afford an explanation of the origin of life. However, we do have an accumulation of facts that we can observe in the present that would support one model or another. The best model is the one that not only correlates with all known facts without any contradictions, but also can, to the best of its ability, be able to predict future discoveries that we find in nature. The establishment of evolution is not based on tested or repeatable observations but rather on a philosophical interpretation and assumptions.

Most people outside the scientific community have been taught that evolution has been proven as a fact and law of nature. However, many scientists realize that evolution is only a model and not a proven theory. One must realize that the idea of evolution is no more a proven fact than the idea of creation. In actuality, current scientific evidences and known principles and laws of nature contradict the model of evolution. There is more scientific support for the model of creation and this model also has had a superior track record of making predictions that we find valid within nature.

Hubert P. Yockey, Chief of the Aberdeen Proving Ground Reactor Branch, neatly summarizes the situation: "One must conclude that, contrary to the established and current wisdom, a scenario describing the genesis of life on earth by chance and natural causes which can be accepted on the basis of fact and not faith has not yet been written."³

This leaves us in a position where evolution is taught as a proven fact or theory, when in actuality it is a doctrine intertwined with the philosophies of those who hold a particular humanistic world view. Evolutionist L. Harrison Matthews wrote in the Introduction of the 1971 edition of The Origin of Species, by Charles Darwin: "Evolution is the backbone of biology and biology is thus in the peculiar position of being a science founded upon an unproved theory - is it then a science of a faith?"⁴

It is unfortunate that many scientists have accepted evolution as fact because of their philosophical beliefs rather than scientific logic. Many have been subjective, rather than objective, in their approach to science as a result. Their investigations are naturally biased toward discovering facts that support only their model.

Even though the mechanism and evidences for macro-evolution (amoeba-fish-amphibian-reptile-monkey-man) has clearly never been discovered, the notion that macro-evolution could never have occurred is not given an objective consideration. Even though evolution has apparent contradictions with sound scientific principles, these are overlooked because they challenge the underlying assumption and belief that evolution of life through time and chance has occurred. As professor of physics, H.S. Lipson stated, "In fact, evolution became in a sense a scientific religion; almost all scientists have accepted it and many are prepared to 'bend' their observations to fit within it."⁵

Proponents of evolution have long misled the public into believing that their theory is a proven law of nature as valid and certain as the law of gravity. The education system has consistently taught evolution as scientific fact without ever informing the people that the very foundations, upon which the entire theory is based, are nothing more than unproven assumption. Never is the public informed that the proposed transitional forms are purely hypothetical and that we haven't found the crucial missing links. Perhaps there are missing links in the evolutionary model because evolution never occurred in the first place.

To teach assumptions and philosophical bias as scientific truth is misleading education and deprives individuals from making the choice themselves. It is important to promote sound scientific investigation that is free from philosophical bias. Evolutionists are religious in their faith in the miraculous power of nature to create life. As scientists and educators, it is vital that people are presented with the evidences and then allowed to decide for themselves which model works best.

It is perfectly legal for a public school teacher to present both the creation and evolution models to the students. In the recent 1987 U.S. Supreme Court ruling, the Court stated: "Teaching a variety of scientific theories about the origins of humankind to school children might be validly done with the clear secular intent of enhancing the effectiveness of science instruction." Enhancing the reasoning and decision making ability of a student would definitely increase the effectiveness of science instruction.

An experiment was conducted in which 119 students were taught only evolution and another 119 students were taught both the creation and evolution models.⁶ The latter experimental group seemed to develop more critical thinking habits than those with the one-model approach. These students were more highly motivated and learned more effectively with the two-model approach. The data also showed a significant increase in preference toward the creation model after examining the evidence. If the goal of education is to train individuals to think and learn for themselves, then the teaching of creation and evolution would be advantageous to the advancement of learning and education.

1 Francisco Ayala, "Biological Evolution: Natural Selection or Random Walk?" American Scientist, Nov.-Dec., 1974, p. 700.

2 Ehrlich and Birch, "Evolutionary History and Population Biology," Nature, Vol. 214, 1967, p. 352.

3 Herbert P. Yockey, "A Calculation of the Probability of Spontaneous Biogenesis by Information Theory," Journal of Theoretical Biology, Vol. 67, 1977, p. 398.

4 L. Harrison Matthews, "Introduction to Origin of Species" (London: J.M. Dent), 1971 edition of The Origin of Species.

5 H.S. Lipson, "A Physicist Looks at Evolution," Physics Bulletin, Vol. 31, 1980.

6 Richard B. Bliss, "A Comparison of Students Studying the Origin of Life from a Two-model Approach vs. Those Studying from a Single-Model Approach," ICR Impact, Article No. 60, June, 1978.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(003082e50e3009141f59bd5df831749f_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(17413706fd4997a1a4bdf85c6864eee1_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Macro vs. Micro Evolution

by David Skjaerlund

Charles Darwin sparked a revolution in scientific thought with the publication of his book, The Origin of Species, in 1859. With his concept of evolution by natural selection, Darwin attempted to render invalid the biblical idea that "every living thing produces life after its own kind."

In the first half of Species, Darwin cited evidence for "micro-evolution," or changes on a small level between species. His discovery of the several different types of finches on the Galapagos Islands with similar characteristics, derived from a common ancestor, comprised his evidence for micro-evolution. The 14 different species of finches vary according to plumage, size (from the size of a sparrow to that of a large blackbird), beak morphology, behavior and environmental habitat. They were each very different, yet closely related.

From this observation, Darwin then extrapolated his explanation for the origin of life forms from a common ancestor, or "macro-evolution." He used the evidence from the first half of his book on micro-evolution to suggest that the same mechanism could produce all life forms. However, this concept of macro-evolution is not supported by modern scientific evidence. Although we can explain and understand the mechanism behind micro-evolution, we still can only theorize about possible explanations for macro-evolution - since it has no scientifically valid occurrences.

The "Evolution" of Poodles and Chihuahuas?

The concept of micro-evolution - or diversification of species - is a fact of nature. Species do vary and change, but only on a small scale. We have many examples of Darwin's finches and even the breeding history of dogs which supports the notion of micro-evolution.

Micro-evolution was first understood when George Mendel demonstrated the variation within species based on genetic mechanisms. By Mendelian genetics we see the various dog species, which range from the St. Bernard to the chihuahua. The concept of micro-evolution is widely accepted today and supports the biblical notion of life reproducing after its own "kind." In other words, it is accepted in scientific circles that all the different types of dogs most likely descended from a common canine ancestor.

Evolutionists, however, have expanded the model to suggest the origin of the universe, the origin of life from non-life, the origin of amphibians from fishes, the origin of birds from reptiles, and so on. Scientists have many theories of the mechanisms behind macro-evolution, but none of them have any direct evidence. The theories are merely extrapolations from what can be seen on the smaller scale.

This extrapolation is scientifically unjustified. The underlying logic behind this premise is similar to plotting the fastest times man has run the mile over the years, and then predicting that someday man will run a two or three-minute mile. Anyone realizes that there are limits to valid extrapolation. Likewise, Darwinian macro-evolution is undergoing tremendous scrutiny in scientific circles because of the lack of evidence.

When Did the Fish Sprout Legs?

When one examines the historical record of life, we find the absence of transitional forms between the major life groups such as fish and amphibians or reptiles and birds. The fossil record has failed to yield the host of transitional forms demanded by the theory of macro-evolution. Rather, the fossils show an abrupt appearance of very distinct groups of animals.

Take, for example, the supposed "fish-to-amphibian" transition. The general assumption has been that the earliest amphibians evolved from the order of fish, the Rhipidistia. However, there are major differences between the earliest assumed amphibians, the Ichtyostega, and its presumed fish ancestor. The differences are not simply a few small bone changes but are enormous structural differences as can be seen in Figure 1.

The first amphibian had well-developed fore- and hind limbs which were fully capable of supporting terrestrial motion. The transitions between the two are strictly hypothetical, and no transitional fossils have ever been found ... only imagined and artistically drawn. The mechanism for the supposed macro-evolution of the fish to the amphibian is purely hypothetical.

This lack of transitional forms occurs between all major groups of life. Hypothetical transition forms are drawn to show the change from a reptile to a bird but the fossil record has no evidence that this has ever occurred. Even the closest known intermediate, the Archaeopteryx, was a fully developed bird with the capability of flight like modern birds. Darwin's idea of micro-evolution of the finches can provide no explanation or support for the notion of birds evolving from reptiles. One cannot extrapolate from micro-evolution to macro-evolution when scientific evidences do not provide any support for it.

Evolutionists realize that the fossil record challenges the very notion of macro-evolution. As leading evolutionist and paleontologist Stephen Jay Gould stated: "All paleontologists know that the fossil record contains precious little in the way of intermediate forms; transitions between major groups are characteristically abrupt. The extreme rarity of transitional forms in the fossil record persists as the trade secret of paleontology. We fancy ourselves as the only true students of life's history, yet to preserve our favored account of evolution by natural selection we view our data as so bad that we never see the very process we profess to study."¹

When looking back through the history of life as recorded in the earth, we find no evidence suggesting the change from one major group to another. The fossil record suggests micro-evolution as Darwin did, but shows no evidence for macro-evolution. We do not have any fossil group which can claim to belong to the ancestor of another major group. Each fossil group has retained its unique and distinct structural and physiological characteristics throughout its life history.

The origin of life has long been described by the tree of evolution, with major groups branching off from common ancestors. Unfortunately, the branches and gaps between kinds of life are so vast and great that they cannot be considered part of the same tree. The description of the fossil record could be more accurately summarized by a forest of trees rather than just one tree of life. We observe the abrupt appearance of different life forms and have witnessed the diversification of life within those kinds. We can observe micro-evolution taking place from the first organisms within each kind. But the genetic variation we see occurring today occurs only in narrow limits.

The fossil record actually supports the model of creation. The Genesis account of creation states that God created the various kinds of plants, birds, fishes and animals on earth. From the creation model, one would expect to see an abrupt appearance of life forms as well as distinct and separate groups. The fossil record shows exactly that, not a history of gradual change from one major kind of life to another.

The entire theme throughout the book of Genesis is that life reproduces after its own kind. Darwin's finches still reproduce finches. It is a testimony to the creativity of God that He has created so many different forms of life, and even placed the great genetic potential for variation within the first creatures. Natural selection over the years has only drawn upon that great genetic potential as Charles Darwin observed. Natural selection brings out the diversity of life but cannot create new major groups of life as macro-evolution would postulate.

1 Stephen Jay Gould, Natural History, 1977, 86:14.

A seal and one of its closest terrestrial relatives. Drawing taken from Michael Denton, Evolution: A Theory in Crisis (Adler & Adler, Publishers Inc., 1985).

The earliest known amphibian alongside a Rhipidistian fish. Drawing taken from Michael Denton, Evolution: A Theory in Crisis (Adler & Adler, Publishers Inc., 1985).

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Medical Professional Care

3/89

SAN FRANCISCO, CA (EP) - Prayer for recovery may help the healing process, according to a study published in the Journal of the American Medical Association. A scientific study found that hospitalized heart patients had fewer complications when others prayed for their recovery.

The 1982-83 study was conducted by Dr. Randolph Byrd at San Francisco General Medical Center's coronary care unit. Byrd's study randomly assigned half of 393 patients to a control group and half to an experimental group. Members of the experimental group were prayed for by groups of three to seven born-again Christians, while members of the control group were not on the prayer lists.

Patients were not told which group they were in, and had no contact with the praying Christians. Byrd himself did not know which patients were in which group until after he evaluated their progress.

The study found that while the two groups were equally sick when they entered the hospital, patients in the experimental group had fewer complications during their stay, and were less likely to need antibiotics, diuretics, or the insertion of tubes for feeding or breathing.

Past studies have examined the efficacy of prayer by people who know the patient; this is the first controlled study in which strangers prayed for strangers.

Byrd noted that family and friends were probably praying for most of the patients in the study, blurring the distinction between the two groups. He wrote that this "may have resulted in smaller differences between the two groups."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

The Missing Link?

2/92

NEANDERTHAL MAN - At the Int'l. Congress of Zoology (1958) Dr. A.J.E. Cave said his examination showed that the famous Neanderthal skeleton found in France over 50 years ago is that of an old man who suffered from arthritis.

NEW GUINEA MAN - Dates away back to 1970 . . . This species has been found in the region just north of Australia.

CRO-MAGNON MAN - One of the earliest and best established fossils is at least equal in physique and brain capacity to modern man . . . so what's the difference?

MODERN MAN - This genius is still searching for the missing link.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

THE FINGERPRINTS OF GOD: The Origin of Man

By Dr. Robert Gange

Perhaps of all the creatures on earth, nothing is more unique than human life. In some senses, human life is unique in a self-evident way. But there is another sense in which man has been called a social animal and has been relegated to the status of being simply a more sophisticated, but otherwise, comparable animal to other forms of life that walk the earth.

Is man truly unique in a separate, distinctive way? Or - is man simply one step up, or some evolutionary graduation above typical animal life?

When we look at the things that man does on the planet, it is clear that he is in control. It is clear that it is man who sends radio signals through space while apes make sounds to a jungle. There is a clear distinction between man and all other forms of animal. But yet, there are clearly parallels between man and other life forms that suggest common origin. This has given rise to the idea that perhaps man and ape evolved from some common ancestor.

When we pursue some of the scientific evidence and some of the competing ideas that suggest man is not simply a graduation above other animals, we find that he is truly a regal creature, with uniqueness and distinction set apart from everything else.

If we take a look at man in an anatomical sense, we find that we have a superlative engineering structure whose specifications few of us appreciate. Consider the brain - the world's most sophisticated computer is slower by a factor of a hundred to a thousand than any one human brain - one of the most sophisticated, incredibly complex organs of the body. It performs feats of engineering impossibilities that are absolutely beyond our comprehension.

The simplest explanation for the origin of man's intelligence and capabilities is that he proceeded from a supreme intelligence, an intellect of unfathomable magnitude, a vast reservoir of cognitive capabilities.

There is to my knowledge only one source of explanation for human intelligence that I am aware of - the Bible. To my knowledge, it is the only book that offers an explanation for the existence of this world, for the existence of evil within the world, and of man's condition of need, desire and free will. What does the Bible say? How does the Bible explain the origin of human life? Let's look at how the Bible talks about the origin of human life.

"In the beginning ..." is the opening phrase of every Bible. And certainly today's scientists believe that the world that we live in had a beginning. "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth. And the earth was in disarray and unfurnished," to use the language of the ancient Jews. "And darkness was on the face of the deep. And the Spirit of God hovered over the face of the waters."

In a sense what we have here is the picture in the Hebrew of a hen brooding over a egg. "And God said, 'Let there be light,' and there was light." There was closure over what had been accomplished and there was a plowing open or a breaking forth ... "Bahach" in the Hebrew, into something new.

What follows is a sequence of events - each of which involving a separation. For example, on the first day God separated light from the darkness - an act of separation. On the second day, He separated waters from waters, putting an expanse or a firmament in between.

On the third day, He separated land and sea, drawing all the land to one side and sea to the other. Incidentally, few of us recognize that the Bible actually teaches that the world began with one land mass and that modern geologists have merely caught up with that idea. On the third day also, the Bible teaches that plant life was created and separated, "each after its kind."

On the fourth day, God separated time into seasons and days and years. It is here that the sun, according to the Bible, begins to function as a time keeper. On day five, God separates life after its kind in the sea and He separates life in the air after its kind. On day six, He does three things - three acts of separation. He separates life out of the land; He separates man from dust; He separates woman from man.

Theism vs. Materialism

The secular world view pictures man as a mechanistic, machine-like creature. He is mechanical, in fact, a dollar and so much cents worth of chemicals. This picture of human life - mechanistic, materialistic, machine-like - is in stark contrast to the biblical perspective. One has at play two competing philosophies - Theism and Materialism. The secular world view on the origin of man is that somehow a change gradually occurs in chemicals starting with some fortunate accident and finally producing some living object which eventually, gradually evolves into man.

Somehow there was some spectacular event that created the universe, that created a living object, that eventually produced you and me. Yet somehow there is something missing in this scenario, that is, the details of change and their explanation.

I do not mean to fault the concept of evolution. The concept of evolution as a working hypothesis to attempt to synthesize 11 million species of life is an elegant idea. But we have to be careful when we get into this question of the advent of human life on the basis of this gradual change.

Now you might have noticed that I keep using the word concept and not theory. The theory of evolution is dead. The foundation of the theory of evolution was natural selection and it is clear today in all the literature that this foundation has been swept away.

For example, R.H. Brady wrote some very eloquent things in 1979 in Systematic Zoology, and again in 1982 in the Biological Journal of the Linnean Society, documenting why the theory of evolution is no longer viable. The whole foundation of the theory of evolution was to explain the production of construction change using natural selection. Years and years of work in this area and many millions of dollars in research programs have failed to operationalize the Darwinian concept of fitness.

When Charles Darwin proposed the concept of natural selection all the way back in 1859, implicit in Darwin's proposal was the fundamental presupposition that all life is deterministic. Determinism can be explained in the case of a tiny insect. Determinism is seen in the idea that by drawing a circle around an insect and specifying all the inputs to the insect, and then by observing the behavior or the output of that insect as specifiable.

However, because the organizational complexity of the brain of the smallest insect is now recognized as vastly exceeding all of the causal relationships possible on earth today, we no longer accept that these creatures are deterministic. As a result there has been a failure to operationalize the Darwinian concept of fitness and in the last analysis you are in a circle of reasoning - a tautology.

Where is the evidence that says that man walked the evolutionary ladder?

Much of this "evidence" comes from the eastern, southern portion of Africa and some of the northern portion as well. The Olduvai Gorge is a popular place to find fossil evidence. Approximately 25 miles long, maybe 320 feet deep, there are lake beds with sedimentation which preserve fossils and also volcanic rock, so the age of these fossils can be dated with the potassium argon system of radioactive dating.

The anthropologists then get into the act trying to analyze the actual the fossils that are found. This might be a typical reconstruction of all these different bones. They try and make sense by asking what scenarios of assembly are most likely to account for what they have found.

Now out of this work has come an idea: modern man (all the way on the right) has come from Neanderthal (who is in the center) who comes from an archaic form of Sapiens. Then this archaic Sapiens comes from a form known as Erectus. He comes from Habilis the fellow just before. And he in turn comes from Boise. Then you have Australopithecus robustus. And finally they come from Africanus and then Afarensis. So that's the scenario.

Beginning with ape-like creatures and moving forward with this scenario, I want to show that the concept of evolution is not to be found in the bones discovered in these excavations. Rather it is to be found in the minds of the people who have a concept of evolution. Evolutionists create pictures and models in order to communicate this gradual scenario so that it is sensible and logical that such a flow could have taken place.

I was interviewed on television a while ago, and was asked "Are you a creationist?" I said, "Well, if being a creationist means that the earth is 6,000 years old, I'm going to have to say no. I'm not a creationist." Then the interviewer asked me, "Are you an evolutionist?" I said, "Well, if being an evolutionist means that nature produced all of the information that ultimately ended up in these complex structures we know as human life, I would have to say no." And they asked, "What are you?" I said, "I'm a realist."

I want to encourage you to be a realist. Look at the actual data and the source literature. Don't believe what somebody else has said. Go to the original papers and the original work and evaluate it firsthand. It's enlightening as to what you will learn when you do that.

We need to examine a scenario: a sequence of skulls that gradually change and the question, "Do they really become human?" Is there evidence here that says that we can show that from apes in whatever form? Can we somehow show that these lead to human life?

What do the fossils really tell us?

Here is as I say an early skull dated in Kenya 17 million years, in southern China about 8 million years, Sivapithecus.

This is the lower jaw bone of Australopithecus afarensis, dated at about 3.8 million years old, affectionately called Lucy. It was found in Hadar and it was speculated to be a brand new species dubbed Afarensis. So we have this partial skeleton of Afarensis dated at about 3.8 million years. This later became known as Australopithecus africanus.

The skull on the right is dated about 3 million years old. It is Australopithecus africanus. It's an ape, make no mistake about that. Its cranial capacity is typically 300-400 cc.

When a skull is found, you cannot distribute this skull to everybody, because it would get damaged. Obviously, if someone were to start picking that skull up, it would start to get scratches in it that weren't originally there (you'd be amazed as to what an anthropologist can do with a little scratch). Therefore, plastic casts are typically made and it is the plastic replication that would be distributed.

The procedure is to make casts of these plastic replications and then distribute those to other anthropologists for examination and for analysis. The problem, however, is that when you make the plastic replication you lose the detail in the original. Now obviously, some of the detail is retained but a good part of it is lost.

Above is a partial skeleton of Australopithecus africanus, dated about 3 million years old. In other words, this is that particular skull put on the top of the bones that are believed to go with it. This is a very unusual skull. This was dated originally at about 3.5 million years and then the date was changed and changed. It finally settled down at about 2.8 million years.

Australopithicus habilis, is dated at about 2.2 million years, (We are coming into the present more and more with this time scenario).

Another skull is also dated roughly at the same time period Australopithicus robustus.

It is commonly held by a number of evolutionists that there was a branch at this point and that the human race allegedly followed the Habilis line whereas the apes followed the Robustus line. Both are found to be roughly 2.2 million years old.

I want to insist in the strongest possible terms that, as a physical scientist, I find these conclusions an intellectual abomination! The scarcity of data is totally inadequate and incomplete to warrant such sweeping conclusions. But this does not stop anthropologists (a field which is dominated by strong personalities) from making these sweeping statements. In this particular case, the statements were based on just two skulls!

This is Homo erectus dated at 1.6 million years. This is a skeleton contrived to make Erectus look as human-like as possible. I assure you that that is so. I have a number of different orientations of this and this is the only one that really looks human-like. If you look at it head on, it's anything but human. It's a fantastically different head on as opposed to viewing it on an angle.

And then this is Neanderthalensis, or commonly known as Neanderthal man. Neanderthal dates at approximately 135 thousand years ago and mysteriously disappeared off the earth about 40,000 years ago. He mysteriously appears and he mysteriously disappears. Some people like to push Neanderthal back to perhaps 200,000 years. But the data for supporting this assertion is very meager. Neanderthal man is dated at 135,000 to 40,000 years ago.

Finally, we have modern man, known as Cro-Magnon. Modern man appears suddenly and abruptly in the fossil record 26,000 years ago. Now note this: 40,000 years ago Neanderthal man mysteriously disappears off the earth; you have a 14,000 years gap where no fossils are found (one of the hidden pieces of laundry in the anthropological literature) and then 26,000 years ago, suddenly and abruptly as though a stamper comes down out of the blue, modern man appears.

Let me illustrate another thing: There are seven different concepts of how the evolutionary branching occurred! Seven different theories really by seven different anthropologists. You have for each anthropologist a separate theory. What I try to illustrate by this, is that there is no harmony or unity such as there is in physical science. In anthropology, you can argue for 20 years and still keep going at it.

I am not critical of anthropology, but I am critical of anthropologists that make sweeping conclusions beyond the proper warrant of the data. And what we need to do is keep our feet on the ground and try and understand that if you're going to draw a conclusion, there should be facts to back it up. And I want to suggest that the facts that back this up are not definitive as illustrated by the fact that we have seven theories, at least roughly five years ago, there were seven theories by seven anthropologists, and today as I read the current literature there are all kinds of discussions.

Now there is no problem with discussion, no problem with disagreement, no problem with hypothesis; the problem comes in when materialistically oriented people who are not scientists wander beyond what their data actually can support and make sweeping conclusions that are not warranted. That I find a problem.

Are reconstructions accurate?

Now these two skulls are dated at about 1.8 million years and their a little bit fascinating in several respects. I want you to take a look at these two and take a look back at these two. You see the difference is that an artist has begun to put certain features on the skull based upon input from an anthropologist. In other words you are looking at the same skull. But the skull on the left is where we start, this is what we find and the skull on the right is reconstruction that an artist has begun to do.

Eyes are added on the left and ligaments on the right and finally this is the conclusion. Now I want to point something out to you. The artist did this at a time when the anthropologists were convinced it was human. Now it's known to be an ape. I want to suggest that it was pure philosophical bias that produced that kind of a face coming from that particular skull on the left as opposed to almost anything else that could have occurred - pure philosophical bias.

There was tremendous discussion as to whether or not the skull on the left, known as Boise, and the skull on the right Robustus, constituted two different species or one species. An artist got into the act and began to do a reconstruction to resolve the issue. Now a slight problem developed in that one of the artists worked for one anthropologist and another artist worked for another anthropologist. One artist caused it to become human-like; the other caused it to become ape-like simply because the two anthropologists had different philosophical assumptions

Did a superior intelligence design life?

How is one to explain the differences between of a Chimp, Australopithicus afarensis, and a modern human? Can you distinguish a human skull from an ape skull? Absolutely, I personally went through 140 source papers. All you have to do is measure the cranial index. If it is 38%, it is human; if it is 58%, it is an ape, (plus or minus 7% in both cases). There are other tests also. For example, you find V-shaped jaws and U-shaped jaws in some of these creatures. Man has a parabolic U-shaped jaw. Skeletal structures that allow for bipedal locomotion (walking upright) is another test.

Material culture and language are unique to man. Man has another thing that animals do not have. He is able to pray, he has a spiritual dimension. Man alone ferrets out questions of origin and questions of destiny.

The Bible teaches that man is made in the image of God. The one unique distinctive of man over all animals is that he is capable of the word. He is capable of knowledge recorded, transmitted, added to and given to a future generation. He has the capacity of the word. I find it fascinating because the Gospel of John opens up with the phrase: "In the Beginning was the word, and the word was with God and the word was God." In other words, the word is identified with the image of God.

Genesis 1:26, says that man was made in the image of God, and was given dominion all over the earth. Because what allows man to have dominion over the earth except the capacity of language, the capacity to absorb all of the knowledge of a previous generation and add and transmit it to a future generation.

It was once widely speculated that Neanderthal was an advanced form of human type of some kind. The more recent evidence shows that man and Neanderthal now seem to have been coterminous. It turns out that modern man seems to have been around along with Neanderthal.

We live in an age when the scientific knowledge, once alleged to have destroyed the validity of the Bible, is now vindicating it. 100 years ago, the French Academy of Science published 51 facts given to prove that the Bible was wrong, yet today every one of those facts today has been disproven.

Thomas Payne's Age of Reason Part II, a laundry list of 150 things known to be wrong with the Bible, has been discredited by archaeological finds in the last 50-60 years. The Bible, attacked by every generation of mankind, continues to survive only to have the next generation show that the attacks were without credibility.

Man is unique, but with all of his wonder and all of his uniqueness, unless his spiritual dimension is recognized, unless the spiritual laws that regulate success versus failure in the arena of human activity are recognized applied, he can only get deeper into problems.

There is an answer and there is a way out, but it means that I need to reconsider walking underneath an authority Whose intelligence and Whose fingerprint seems to absolutely everywhere. From the vast expanse of the stars where the universe was tuned to better than 50 decimal places at inception, to the incredible blueprint of information contained in a DNA molecule, man himself is unique of all God's creation.

Man alone has the capacity to absorb, through the vehicle of language, a moral code and to make moral decisions in alignment with the moral pronouncements of this book, the Bible, that has survived all the attacks and continues to be the one shining light in an otherwise darkened arena of endeavor where humans seek to better themselves only to find themselves worse off.

True wisdom is to consider what the Bible is saying. When all is said and done, modern knowledge is showing that it is the most trustworthy book in the world. In fact, the real problem with the Bible is that it came before us and we are just now starting to catch up to it.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(cf531ed27e91483460120fcc057b3901_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(d3102649f02e825ddb76dc3de0190154_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

THE FINGERPRINTS OF GOD: The Origin of the Universe

By Dr. Robert Gange

The origin of the universe is a difficult topic. It is difficult because given the information we have to work with no one can really know for certain the conclusions we can draw.

There are certain things in life that we say we almost know with certainty. If we say two and two is four, all of us agree basically because the labels ($2+2=4$) constitute definitions. We call that analytic knowledge. But when we talk about the question of origins, the universe, life and man, these are topics that lie outside analytic knowledge. They embrace events in space and in time. And any time we deal with events in space and time, we are dealing with what is known as synthetic knowledge and we never know with 100% certainty if the conclusions that we draw are correct, that they are true. We only know these to a certain level of confidence.

There are three basic kinds of events in the world. There are reproducible events, unpredictable events and singular events. If an event is, for example, reproducible it lends itself to scientific inquiry. You can take an apple, drop it off a tree, pick it up, and repeat that over and over again and make measurements over the distance and the time it falls. Reproducible events lend themselves to scientific inquiry. Unpredictable events lend themselves to statistical inquiry. These are sometimes called chance events.

But the topic of today concerns itself with a singular event, for example, the origin of the universe, the origin of life, or the origin of man. Unlike reproducible events that lend themselves to scientific inquiry and unpredictable events that lend themselves to statistic inquiry, singular events lend themselves to legal inquiry. In the statistic sense of the term, science has no jurisdiction in a question of origin or a question of destiny. So one might ask, what role does science play?

Science gathers evidence to support or reject the hypothesis of a theory that would deal with origins. So the role science plays is as an objective evidence gatherer. Now all of us have pondered, at one time or another in our lives, the question of origins. For example, who hasn't gazed into a starlit sky and wondered: "Where did it all come from?"

What comes out of the heavens is energy. Man has created observatories to measure, to quantify and to analyze the energy that comes to Earth. For example, optical energy is coming to earth all the time. That is energy that we can see with our eyes. We call it visible light. But there are other kinds of energy. We have special telescopes that pick up this kind of energy. In a sense, energy has different colors. For example, there are antennae that would pick up radiowaves and microwaves. And we even orbit satellites out in space to pick up X-rays. Different kinds of energy are constantly being monitored from the heavens in an attempt to try and understand what's out there.

We have very sophisticated computers to analyze this data and a number of different theories that make predictions. These predictions inspire further data gathering and this is applied to other theories and so we make new predictions and we constantly are in a system, in science, of making predictions, of testing the predictions against a hypothesis, and then of gathering the data.

This is the process of science. The job of science is to gather data, but the data has to be reproducible. And then on the basis of that data, science makes predictions; but the predictions need to be logical. And these are tested against a hypothesis in a way that allows us to reject it if it no longer can be modified to fit the incoming data.

Now out in the heavens we have a number of different gases. Many scientists believe that gathered data teaches us that the universe exploded into existence billions of years ago; that space and time came into existence as one fabric. Now that's a difficult concept. But scientists today, when we speak about the universe exploding into existence, don't ordinarily mean that space by itself - or time by itself - came into existence.

Instead, we mean that space and time - both of them together - came into existence at the same time. We cannot have space without time and we cannot have time without space.

The question is: "How could such an unfathomable structure such as the universe with all of its resplendent beauty and majesty come into existence by itself?" One of the deepest questions we ponder is: "What's behind all that?" - "Is it true that there is an intelligence of unfathomable dimension that designed and produced it?" - or - "Is it that some quantum accident produced what we see?"

The present understanding is that after this explosion of space time, there was abundant gas - a number of different gases - that began to coalesce into what we call stars. And there are certain kinds of events in the heavens which we call Super Nova. And we believe that these explosions or heavy elements ultimately coalesce into objects out in space.

There's quite a bit of speculation as to what the nature of those objects are. Most scientists are in agreement that stars form this way. There is considerable controversy over whether planets can form this way. Now one of the ways that scientists are able to test their data and make the measurements is by measuring the time it would take light to reach us from a distant star.

Light, for example, travels at approximately the speed of 186,000 miles per second. Now, if light was to travel around the Earth, it would take approximately one second to circle 7 times around the Earth. Can you imagine how far light travels in a year? Scientists call that a light year and it's typically just under six thousand billion miles.

Out in the heavens we have what we call "nebula." Nebula are believed to have been produced by one of those Super Novas, that explosion I mentioned earlier, approximately 50,000 years ago. Now one particular nebula, the Veil Nebula, is about 2,500 light years away from the Earth. It would take light from that particular nebula 2,500 years to reach us, if it started out at this moment, before it reached Earth. And so we measure distance in terms of a light year, namely the distance light would travel in a year, and multiply that by certain distance measurements and we conclude that the Veil Nebula is approximately 2,500 light years from the Earth. In other words, 2,500 times approximately 6000 billion miles.

- * A globular cluster in the constellation Hercules is believed to be about 26,700 light years away from the Earth.
- * The Andromeda Galaxy is believed to be about two million light years away from the Earth, meaning that it would take two million years for light to reach us.
- * One of the closest radio sources to us, Centaurus A, is 12 million light years distant from the Earth.
- * The Whirlpool Galaxy, is believed to be approximately 35 million light years distant from the Earth.
- * The Sombrero Hat Galaxy is 41 million light years distant from the Earth.
- * There are other objects that scientists calculate in the billions of light years distant from the Earth.

Scientists start to conclude that the universe is billions of years old because they are finding objects whose light is reaching us now, which must have taken one to four billions of years to reach us. Is the universe said to be billions of years old only on the basis of light reaching us from space? The answer to that is "No." There are other ways that scientists measure the age of the universe.

The Expanding Universe and The Doppler Shift

In a sense, the universe is like a gigantic pink balloon, with black spots on the surface. It is as though this balloon is getting larger and larger and larger. You can imagine that if the balloon gets larger and larger, the black spots on its surface are all moving away from a common center. The universe acts as though long ago it was at one point in space and it has been expanding ever since. As the black spots on the surface of this balloon move away from the common center, and as the balloon gets bigger and bigger, another event is happening. The black dots are moving away from each other along the surface. The black spots correspond to galaxies. A galaxy is simply a collection of stars.

Scientists really believe that the universe is getting larger and larger and its space is expanding. We also say time is advancing. This is true because the two are coterminal; the expansion of space and the advance of time are happening together. In measuring how fast one star might be moving away from another, scientists believe that the faster a star would move away from the Earth, the more its light would shift toward the red end of the spectrum.

This is known as Doppler Red Shift. It is a phenomena which we measure routinely on Earth and it has to do with a shift in the color of starlight depending upon the direction of the star and how fast it is moving. The faster something would be moving away from us, the more its light would shift toward the red end of the spectrum and scientists use the Doppler Red Shift to calculate how old the universe is by calculating back to a time when one of these stars would appear to have been at one place in the universe.

The number that scientists calculate for Doppler Red Shift measurements lies between nine and eighteen billion years. This is known as the Doppler Red Shift measurement. Is it the only measurement that scientists make? The answer is to that is "No."

Hertzsprung-Russel Diagrams

There is another measurement that we make. We take a look at the brightness and the temperature on the surface of the star. And we create what are called Hertzsprung-Russel diagrams. In a sense, all we're really doing is plotting, or comparing temperature and brightness.

In the upper left corner of one of these diagrams are the stars that are the brightest and the hottest and in the lower right corner, would be the stars that are less bright and the coolest. These stars lie along what is called a main sequence. That main sequence appears as a band running across the diagram. When you take a look at different parts of the universe, you find that the stars leave the main sequence at different places.

For example, in the upper right corner are the stars that are the youngest. They are the brightest; they are the hottest, and so they are burning out the fastest. They leave the main sequence sooner than the stars in the lower right corner. The stars in the lower right corner are burning with less brightness, with cooler temperatures and so they're older and they're hanging around more. The point where these stars leave the main sequence tells scientists how old they are. These are known as globular clusters and scientists are able to measure the age of the universe by using this technique. The typical range here is between 10 billion and 17 billion years.

Nucleus Pronometers

There is a third way that scientists use to measure the age of the universe. This is by using nucleus pronometers as radioactive clocks. It turns out that atoms of certain materials are radioactive and unstable. That means that the center of the atom is emitting particles all the time and changing its composition. So by measuring how fast these particles are coming out, how many are coming out, and what kind of particles are coming out, scientists are able to draw certain fundamental conclusions. Typical materials that do this might be thorium 232, uranium U238, and iodine 127. There are radioactive substances that occur naturally in the universe.

Now scientists are able to integrate what is called the weighted average. In other words, they put all of these different processes together in an effective way to calculate the total range of age. The conclusion is typically 7 billion to 10 billion years.

When you take a look at these 3 independent techniques: the Doppler Red Shift, with all of the galaxies moving away from each other; globular clusters, where the stars leave the main sequence on a chart; and nuclear pronometers, these radioactive clocks based on the emission of particles from the center of atoms, they all roughly give us a range between ten billion and fifteen billion years.

Three independent techniques date the universe at approximately 10 to 15 billion years. Is this a problem with respect to the Bible as some Christians seem to feel it may be? The answer to that is certainly "No."

The Bible does not speak in any way whatsoever as to the age of the universe. The Bible is primarily concerned with genealogies, particularly Genesis 5 and Genesis 11, with respect to man. But a genealogy is not a chronology. What some people have done, for example, Bishop Usher back in the 1600's; is to say that this is a continuity in what we would call a chronology of time. It is not. So the Bible is silent on age.

The Theory of Special Relativity

There is another aspect to consider: the theory of special relativity published by Albert Einstein in 1905. This theory declares that time is like an elastic band; and that clocks tick differently depending upon the curvature of that space/time fabric mentioned earlier. You might think of space/time fabric as a great, big sheet. If you bent that sheet, you would have a model of curved space/time. When clocks are in a curved space/time, they tick much slower than if they were in a space/time fabric that were flat.

There is another thing to consider about the time when the universe came into existence. Some of our cosmological models describe the advent of the universe as highly curved space/time fabric. A clock ticking in that kind of environment would have ticked off an interval of time that would have been several hours of time back then; whereas today it could be billions of years. In other words, a clock today doesn't tick the same way as it would have ticked at the time when the universe came into existence.

Geological Measurements of Age

What about the planet Earth? The Earth is an entirely different physical system from the universe. If the universe is of the order of ten to 15 billion years, does that mean that the Earth is that old? Certainly not. The Earth is an entirely separate system. How old is the Earth? How would we go about trying to find the age of the Earth? There are several ways to try to find out the age of the Earth.

For example, there are certain geologic processes that occur on the Earth. Different processes typically give ages between tens of millions of years and hundreds of millions of years. In other words, if only geologic processes are examined, the Earth becomes tens to hundreds of millions of years old.

However, in the crust of the Earth, there are certain natural radioactive materials that I mentioned earlier.

These materials that are found in the crust of the Earth are approximately 4.65 billion years old. Some people have speculated (in fact, assumed!) that because a handful of materials in the crust of the earth is 4.65 billion years old, therefore the earth is 4.65 billion years old.

That is really a nonessential argument for many, many reasons.

For example, let's suppose that I had an automobile that was fabricated last week. But let's suppose that the steel I used to make this automobile was in a warehouse and that the steel had been stored there for 300 thousand years. So now I have steel that's 300 thousand years old, in other words, material that is quite old and last week I manufactured an automobile from it.

I drive up to a traffic light and I'm stopped at a red light, and somebody comes up to the car, puts his fingers on the fender of the car and says to me "My goodness, the material, the steel, that's in the fender of your car is 300 thousands years old; therefore, your automobile is 300 thousand years old." That is precisely the logic that is used to date the earth at 4.65 billion years; because a handful of materials in its crust are many billions of years old, the presumption is, therefore, that this highly complex life-support system called earth is as old as the handful of materials.

Now, obviously, we have independent techniques which I've mentioned, the Doppler Red Shift; globular clusters; nuclear pronometers; the speed of light; and light distances from different galaxies, that teach that the universe is billions of years old. But if the Earth were made at a much more recent time - if the earth were made much more recently than billions of years ago and the raw material of the universe was used in the earth's construction much in the same way that the steel from the factory was used in the construction of the car - you would expect to find material in the Earth's crust that was billions of years old.

This would not teach that the highly complex, organized life-support system that we know as Earth would be, necessarily, billions of years old. So that is clearly a blind presupposition, to say that the Earth is billions of years old simply because a handful of materials are that old.

How Did It All Begin?

Some believe that non-living rocks, or non-living matter, produced all that we see and are. Others however, see sacred writing as revealing the fingerprint of a divine intellect of unfathomable magnitude. In the midst of this debate, scientists in our day have come full-swing to an unbelievable conclusion. The conclusion is that the universe actually had a beginning!

This is unbelievable because for several hundred years all of the scientists around the world were essentially unanimous in their conviction that the world, the universe was eternally existing. They had a simple reason for that. The citadel of our science is called the first law of thermodynamics. The first law simply put, says that a natural process can not bring into existence something from nothing.

Since a natural process can not bring something into existence out of nothing, the conclusion is that whatever it is ultimately made of, must have been in existence forever. This was known as the steady state theory of the universe. And virtually every scientist around the world was convinced that it had to be true for several hundred years.

Yet if we go to the Bible, its opening three words are: "In the beginning..." So if you were to compare the knowledge of science against the first 3 words of the Bible, you have a violent contradiction. How could you have a beginning when scientists were absolutely certain that natural process can not bring anything into existence from nothing? Things are in existence, so according to natural laws, the universe has to be eternally existing. But just within the past 10 to 15 years, the cosmologists of the world came to the conclusion that the universe indeed had a beginning.

First, it was called the Big Bang theory, then it was refined by a professor at MIT into what is called the new inflationary theory of the universe. What is so impressive is that the new inflationary theory of the universe is consistent with the interpretation that all that we see in the universe came into existence out of nothing.

Significantly, theologians before the turn of the century were interpreting the first verse of every Bible, "In the beginning, God created the heaven and the earth," as an Exneno creation. In other words, a creation of something out of nothing. The new inflationary theory of the universe is approximately 10 years old and has mathematical equations whose interpretation is consistent with that understanding.

But perhaps what is even more staggering is the fact that all of our cosmological models differ in degrees, but are all unified with respect to one conclusion. When the universe came into existence, it should have almost immediately thereafter gone out of existence. As a matter of fact, it should have gone out of the existence in a time interval so short that it would be one-tenth millionth of a billionth, of a billionth, of a billionth, of a billionth of a second - a decimal point followed by 43 zeroes and then a one. This is called a plank time. The universe should have gone out of existence virtually, instantaneously, after it came into existence.

Why did it not do so? Why do scientists measure it today to be 13 billion years old? There are no natural processes to explain how the universe came into existence nor to explain how the Earth came into being as such a precariously balanced system that it is able to support life.

There are no natural processes that even approach that degree of precision. So it is fair to say that that kind of tuning could rationally be called a supernatural tuning; the inorganic fingerprint of an intelligence of unfathomable dimension and intelligence, which the Bible identifies not only as the God who created the universe, but as the God who designed and created people for His own purpose.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Philosophical Origins of Evolution

by David Skjaerlund

The concept of evolution had its origin long before Charles Darwin published his book, Origin of Species, in 1859. All of history just set the stage for the 19th century scientist. As one investigates the past, one will find the predominant influence of philosophy, not scientific discoveries, in the development of evolutionary thought.

The idea of evolution first developed as a philosophical explanation for our existence. Later, attempts were made to justify that belief with science. However, as new scientific discoveries proved those explanations false, men postulated newer theories on a more microscopic scale that had not yet been discovered by scientific technology. Throughout history, the concept of life spontaneously arising from smaller non-living molecules prevailed.

Evolution, the idea that life has arisen from simpler forms of life, had its beginnings with the Greeks about 700 B.C. Before this time, origins were normally explained in terms of the gods of Greek mythology. As scientific observations were developed and recorded by the Greeks, the question of origins, originally philosophical in nature, now appeared to be justified by naturalistic and materialistic explanations.

Thales of Miletus (640-546 B.C.) first originated the idea of a cycle of development. He believed that all of life began with a single element - water - from which all other elements arose. From these developed plants, animals and finally man. Thales broke away from mythological explanations and believed that all life arose out of the seas.

Anaximander (611-547 B.C.) modified Thales theory, believing that the source of life began with a "primordial mass" and that the earth basically consisted of mud. This mud or primordial mass eventually broke off to form plants, animals and organisms of higher complexity. Anaximander thought that man arose from the fishes and that everything would eventually revert back to its primordial mass.

Anaximenes, a student of Anaximander, followed his beliefs except that the primordial mass was air. Since it was observed that air could expand and contract, he thought this could be the animate source of life. Heraclitus of Ephesus (540-475 B.C.) proposed that individuals were in a struggle to preserve themselves against a constant force of change and decay. The "weeping philosopher" also proposed that the original matter for all forms of life was fire.

Empedocles (490-435 B.C.) incorporated all previous thought into the idea that the essential elements were water, earth, air, and fire. These elements formed bodies when drawn together, and the most successful were capable of reproduction. He believed that chance alone was responsible for the entire process and that man had developed from prior plant life.

Spontaneous Generation

The Greek notion that life arose from essentially nothing, or from simple matter, prevailed into the Middle Ages and was known as spontaneous generation. The Egyptians saw frogs, snails, toads and worms appear on the river bank after a high flood. The Chinese found tiny aphids suddenly appearing on leaves when there was no sign of aphids on the previous day. They assumed that these creatures "evolved" out of matter!

Jan Baptista van Helmont (1577-1644 A.D.) developed the scientific recipe for the generation of mice: one simply needed to wrap wheat kernels and cheese curds in a sweat-soaked shirt and leave the bundle in an open container for 20 days. Twenty days later, as a result of the combination of sweat and wheat, baby mice appeared! The idea of spontaneous generation became very popular and it was the popularity of the idea that kept many prominent scientists from seeing the error of their reasoning.

However, men were unwilling to give up the concept that life could arise from non-living things. The next step was the proposition that micro-organisms were the first living organisms that could arise spontaneously. Englishman John Needham (1713-1781) had heated gravy and sealed the flasks with corks. He later discovered putrefaction and thus proposed support for the spontaneous generation of micro-organisms.

Louis Pasteur (1822-1895) put the notion of spontaneous generation to rest once and for all. Pasteur boiled a broth in special long neck tubes and thus had created sterile conditions. Micro-organisms were prevented from entering the flasks even though they were still open to the air. His discoveries and research revolutionized the sanitation practices of man and introduced the vital techniques of sterilization and pasteurization.

Pasteur's experiments confirmed that life reproduces only after its own kind and that even micro-organisms, at that time unseen by the human eye, need micro-organisms as parents. For the first time, evolutionary reasoning was refuted by sound scientific inquiry that was not first influenced by philosophical thought. Pasteur, a devoted Christian, could have been approaching the problem from the biblical viewpoint of reproduction after kinds (Genesis 1), thereby understanding how to test the idea of spontaneous generation.

The history of evolutionary thought has a long record of theories that would attempt to explain the existence of life merely on the properties of matter. Modern scientists are now in the position of trying to prove that all the elements are derived from one element - hydrogen. They are also trying to show that subatomic particles have arisen from nothing. One might think that science would learn from history, but the notion of spontaneous generation still lingers in the minds of some, due to the evolutionary bent of its reasoning.

The historical roots of evolutionary thought lie within philosophical speculations about the origins of life.

As science has discredited each theory, man has speculated ahead of the frontiers of scientific capabilities in an effort to explain the origin of life. Yet science only seems to destroy those lofty philosophical speculations while upholding the biblical concept of life arising from life. Perhaps scientists will come to accept this truth and then realize that the true source of all life is Jesus Christ, (John 11:25, John 14:6).

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(758ebdf4629c903da74c2e079717ae32_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(fe3aebe81acea8d45108cd2768939da7_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Creation: A Reflection of the Creator

By Christine Doherty, 10th grade
New Testament School, Plymouth, Mass
12/92

Quite often, we observe an aspect of nature that inspires us to more fully appreciate God and His Creation. Mountains, oceans, lakes, rivers or trees, can also help us to know more about the Almighty Creator, whose wisdom goes far beyond human knowledge. Let us now examine some aspects of Creation so that we might more fully understand Him.

Only through divine revelation, faith and Scripture, which are the basis for Christianity, can we understand and accept the doctrine of Creation. God can give us the comprehension of Creation through His divine revelation, but along with this we must believe it through faith in an all-powerful Creator. Also, we must read and accept the Scripture, which tells us in detail the story of Creation. In itself, Creation reflects the nature and eternal power of the Triune God (Romans 1:20).

Through all of the magnificent Creation, we can see the character and attributes of its Creator. In the strong oak trees we can see His strength. Through the majestic mountains, we can see His glory and majesty. Through the creation of the human body, we observe His creativity and intricacy. These examples are just a minute fraction of what we can learn of God through His Creation.

When we view the wonder of His Creation, we stand in awe because of the power and other characteristics which are so evident. We also stand in humility. The more we see of the beauty of Creation, the more we can humble ourselves before our great God who, in His omnipotence, sent His precious Son to die so that we, all unworthy sinners, might have the chance to spend eternity with Him in His awesome presence. Just thinking about that makes one feel so small and unworthy compared to God's terrific power.

This power is seen in the fact that God created the entire universe out of nothing, ex nihilo. He had nothing to work with, but spoke everything into existence. He turned the void into the beauty of the universe with just words. If His words are that powerful, the power of His actual being is completely incomprehensible! He created everything that is now on the earth in six days. Nothing has been, nor ever will be, created since.

It is also incomprehensible how anyone can believe that everything was created by chance. There is too much evidence, both logically and scientifically, to believe that all that we know as the universe just came together by accident. There isn't even a remote possibility of that happening.

For example, the Big Bang theory states that all of a sudden with a bang the universe came into existence out of nothing. Thus out of chaos came order. But if you took apart a watch into all of its intricate pieces, placed it in a box, closed the lid, and shook it around, would the watch be put back together again? Of course not! The absurdity of this statement compares very well with the Big Bang theory. The universe must be the creation of a Triune God, with the Father as the Creator, the Son as the agent or instrument of Creation, and the Holy Spirit as the energizer or executor of the Creative acts.

The Triune God performed creation through a series of creative acts. He created the universe and the earth, then the living creatures, and then His masterpiece, man. The six "days" in which he created the universe could be literal days, or else each day could be an age. Everything is fixed in creation according to kinds. But within these kinds there is also variety, or micro-evolution. We can see God's orderliness and creativity through this, as well.

As can be easily seen, Creation was definitely an awesome act. It had to be performed by a great force. Though powerful, it is also beautiful and wonderful, and is, in effect, a mirror image of its Creator.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!

It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Author Ruth Nourse on "Special Science Issue"

The "Special Science Issue" of The Forerunner was very well done. The section on Darwin might have been planned for the spot. Introducing the liberal definition of "truth" may have triggered thought as to the unscientific motivation of a whole class of evolutionists.

While the National Endowment for the Arts, the monstrous education monopoly, and such legal and political subtrefuges as "separation of church and state" dump out contempt, we innocently go about trying to destroy rotten fruit produced by this inconceivably evil tree.

Eastern Europeans know the source of repression and have arisen enmasse. It would be a good time for Americans to do the same thing, but many are unable to imagine that the same forces are at work here. The trappings of freedom are illusory when the very source of truth is banned from halls of learning and American children are forbidden to carry Bibles to school or to pray.

We who stand against pornography, abortion, and other godless activity should become spiritually militant enough to occupy American campuses and demand the return of academic freedom. Can't we see that loss of freedom is the root of all the other decay?

Your paper is on the cutting edge and it has been a privilege to share with your readers. May God bless and guide you as you continue the battle of ideas.

Ruth Nourse
Avondale, Arizona

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Scientist is appalled with recent articles

10/90

I recently received the April 1990 issue of The Forerunner. I was appalled with two articles. First, the quote concerning Charles Darwin recanting his position in the belief of the Theory of Evolution is a total fabrication as has been proven many times. Second, Dr. Gange's article was rambling and almost incoherent. There are over 200 solid geochronometers which indicate that the earth is young, most indicating an age of less than 10,000 years. Why didn't he write on polonium halos, fallacies of radiometric dating techniques, or implications of the First, Second and Third Laws of Thermodynamics?

I was educated as an evolutionist but became a creation scientist over 15 years ago. It is difficult for me to understand your printing of the article on Darwin without checking on whether it was true or not and now you have helped to perpetuate a lie. In addition, with so many strong scientific creationist writers available, why put such a weak article, basically a theistic evolutionary one, in your paper?

Grady McMurty
Winter Park, Florida

Editor's response: Ruth Nourse, the author of a manuscript describing the politics behind the adoption of the theory of evolution in America's academic curriculum, has done extensive research on the life of Charles Darwin. According to Miss Nourse, the story of "Darwin's Final Recantation" has been widely published as a true incident.

Miss Nourse has found an instance in Darwin's journals which indicates that he had a profound interest in the spread of the gospel in the world. On his expedition to the Galapagos from the HMS Beagle, Darwin wrote, "The march of improvement, consequent on the introduction of Christianity throughout the South Sea, probably stands by itself in the records of history."

Darwin's later writings indicate that he had no inner motivation to publish his Origin of Species, but did so reluctantly under the urging of Charles Lyell and Sir Joseph Hooker. The main point behind this article was that Darwinism has been taken as Truth by many who are unaware of the political motivations of the people who first accepted and promoted these ideas.

(The Forerunner will furnish a copy of this portion of Miss Nourse's manuscript to anyone who would like to study our sources.)

Dr. Robert Gange's article "The Fingerprints of God: The Origin of the Universe" was taken from the transcript of a lecture given at Princeton University. Any perceived incoherence in the article is the fault of the editor and not Dr. Gange.

Dr. Gange, a research scientist, asserted in his lecture that although the earth could be understood to be young, the universe may be understood to be billions of years old. Gange speculates that due to the elasticity of time, explained by Einstein's theory of relativity, nucleus pronometers and other dating methods would detect billions of years passing very quickly during the first moments of the creation of the universe (otherwise known as the "Big Bang" by some scientists).

Dr. Gange would not describe himself as a "theistic evolutionist." To the contrary, in the June issue of The Forerunner, Dr. Gange's article on "The Origin of Man" appeared. This article refutes hominid evolution by giving a detailed explanation of the fossil evidence which has been misused by anthropologists to support evolutionary hypotheses on the origin of man.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Lucy Fails Test As Missing Link

by Lane Anderson with Steve Snyder

The science of finding and identifying man's "prehistoric ancestors" runs in a predictable pattern. A press conference is announced, the discovery of an ape-like "ancestor" revealed with an artist's impression of what the creature looks like, and the discoverer becomes famous, earning money on lecture tours. The actual fossil bones are scanty and the imagination runs wild. Later, when more evidence is found, the "ancestor" turns out to be totally human or totally ape. The Neanderthal man is an example of one find that turns out to be totally human. Once this find is removed as an intermediate form, you can expect another great discovery to save the day. The latest discovery is "Lucy."

If you are of the impression that there are many intermediate ancestors to man, take notice of the following statement by an expert in the field: "The fossils that decorate our family tree are so scarce that there are still more scientists than specimens. The remarkable fact is that all the physical evidence we have for human evolution can still be placed with room to spare inside a single coffin."¹

This is still an exaggeration since it concedes that various specimens are part of human evolution. Australopithecines, for example, are not considered transitional forms anymore, but a branch of the primate evolutionary tree. True transitional forms are still missing. ("Transitional forms" refer to those creatures which represent intermediate states of development for a supposed ape-like ancestor down to man.)

But what about Lucy? This most recent discovery in Africa is being heralded by many as a true transitional form, typically a replacement for the outmoded australopithecines. Could this be hasty judgment? Let's examine the evidence. Lucy is a partial fossil skeleton, about the size of a chimpanzee, supposedly female, discovered by paleontologist Dr. Donald Johanson on November 30, 1974, in Hadar, Ethiopia. It is more complete than most fossil finds in that about 40 percent of the bones of the body have been recovered.

The age is "estimated" to be 3.2 million years. The find includes a V-shaped jaw, part of hip and large bones, and other assorted bones with very little skull fragments.² There were other finds at the same location, other skulls and U-shaped jawbones.

What evidence makes this creature a transitional form? According to Dr. Johanson, she walked upright! Her brain size is still small, ape-like in proportion, and most of the other features are predominantly ape-like. Some say that anatomically it is not different than a modern chimpanzee. The jaw, in particular, is distinct in that it is V-shaped, totally unlike human jaws.

And what evidence supports the idea that this creature walked upright? The angle that the upper leg bone makes with the lower leg bone at the knee. Looking head on, chimpanzee and gorilla legs have an angle of 0 degrees. Humans have an angle of about 9 degrees. If the angle is much greater it gives a "knocked kneed" condition in humans. Lucy and the australopithecines have a larger angle of about 15 degrees.³

Does this make her an upright walker? Present day orangutan and spider monkeys have the same angle as humans yet are extremely adept tree climbers. Some experts argue that the higher angle makes her a better climber.⁴ This appears to be a knee-jerk reaction rather than clear scientific thinking.

But hold on, the story gets better. Dr. Johanson gave a lecture at the University of Missouri in Kansas City, Nov. 20, 1986, on Lucy and why he thinks she is our ancestor. It included the ideas already mentioned and that Lucy's femur and pelvis were more robust than most chimps and therefore, "could have" walked upright. After the lecture he opened the meeting for questions. The audience of approximately 800 was quiet so some creationists asked questions. Roy Holt asked; "How far away from Lucy did you find the knee?" (The knee bones were actually discovered about a year earlier than the rest of Lucy). Dr. Johanson answered (reluctantly) about 200 feet lower (!) and two to three kilometers away (about 1.5 miles!). Continuing, Holt asked, "Then why are you sure it belonged to Lucy?" Dr. Johanson: "Anatomical similarity." (Bears and dogs have anatomical similarities).

After the meeting, the creationists talked with Dr. Johanson and continued the questions. Dr. Johanson argued that homology (particularly DNA homology) is good proof for evolution. Tom Willis responded that "similar structures nearly always have similar plans, (like) similar bridges have similar blue prints." After more discussion along this line, Dr. Johanson gave this amazing reply: "If you don't believe homology, then you don't believe evolution, and evolution is a fact!"⁵

What about Lucy? Just another partial find of some primate, put together to look like a human ancestor? Could the wide separation of Lucy's bones (200 feet by 1 mile) better point to a catastrophic scenario - such as a world wide flood?

What about Dr. Johanson's credibility? To his credit, he does talk about the tentative nature of this type of science. But another evolutionary writer says this about the search for humanlike (homonid) bones; "When it comes to finding a new 'star' as our animal ancestor, there is no business like bone business."⁶

Tom Willis, the creationist who attended the U. of Missouri lecture puts it this way, "By any reasonable standards, Johanson misrepresented the evidence and he did so for money! A businessman who made claims like those to sell his products would be charged with fraud rather than be paid an honorarium."⁷ Regardless of the motives involved for finding our evolutionary "ancestor", we can be sure that when Lucy is acknowledged as an evolutionary dead end, there will be another press conference with another knee-jerk explanation.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Sports

A.C. Green

Bill Gunter Miami University

Champion Water Skier

Clarissa Davis

Daniel Spicks - USC All-Star Describes Former Life in Mafia

An interview with Barry Sanders

Dave Dravecky's Comeback

Kurt Barber, USC - Outside linebacker

Magic Johnson Talks to Youth:

Magic's New Tune On "Safe Sex"

Marathon Miracle

A "New Breed" of Athlete is catching America's attention

Olympics 1988

Olympics - Carl Lewis

One-On-One With A.C. Green - Have you answered the call?

Paul Wylie: A Champion for Christ

Pio Goudinets - University of Southern California Linebacker

REBOUND!

Roller Derby Teen

Superbowl Surprise 1988!

Suzanne Eagye at U. Hawaii

William & Mary's Harry Mehre

U. Texas' Wimbish Picked for Olympic Trials

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Back to The Forerunner!

A.C. Green

by Leilani Corpus

LOS ANGELES, CA (FR) - A.C. Green's playing style is not the only thing about him that has made headlines in the sports media. This "Power Forward" for the Los Angeles Lakers - the 1988 NBA champions for the second consecutive year - is not your typical highly paid professional athlete in the celebrity/pleasure mecca of America. Instead of partying until the wee hours of the morning in any of L.A.'s hotspots, Green spends much of his free time praying, reading his Bible, and sharing with others about his Christian faith.

He's been dubbed the Lakers' "resident straight arrow" by a local columnist. This past season, with an unprecedented three seven-game-series NBA championship victory, has obviously been a successful season for the team, but also a hard one for Green. One of his darkest moments was when forward Kurt Rambis replaced him on the starting lineup half-way through the season.

"The media really played that up," Green said. "They would ask me, 'Why aren't you guarding? Why aren't you playing?' They tried to spark animosity between us. But I didn't give into it." Moments such as these usually reveal if a person's beliefs are only skin deep; Green obviously passed the test.

"I could have complained," he continued. "I could have gotten angry, but I decided to see what was best for the whole team." In retrospect, the move has worked to his advantage; he was back on the court by the time the playoffs began - and he was dubbed "the enforcer" at the end of the season.

What kept the team going through the tiring three seven-game-series? Green says it was "a lot of heart. We usually play 82 games during a regular season, and when you get far into the season, you don't have that much physical strength. It was a lot of heart and determination. We saw the goal and the opportunity at hand. We might never be able to do it again, but there was a lot of fire in the whole team."

Coach Pat Riley had opened up the 1987-88 season with a pledge to recapture the championship. Green said, "The guys were surprised to hear it, but the pressure was really more on the coach than on us." Besides improving his game throughout the last season, he says many of his teammates have asked questions about his relationship with Jesus Christ. "A lot of them come up to me and tell me what they believe, and I just share with them what happened to me."

Green was able to hold Bible studies with the players while they were on the road. "My teammates are very respectful of what I stand for. I don't have to say anything ... but there is a greater awareness of what Jesus means to them."

Sports reporters have asked Green how he reconciles his aggressive playing on the court with his "turn the other cheek" Christianity. "God wants his people to be warriors," he told a journalist with The Los Angeles Herald. "And I don't mean waging literal warfare or getting into fights. What I mean in being a fighter is doing your best in your chosen profession. I don't think any Christian should be a passive kind of person. If he is, then he's going to be headed for a lot of problems in his spiritual walk."

"I'm ready to battle when I step on a court. I expect to fight - not a physical fight when people exchange punches, but a fight to get rebounds and to score points. Just look at God's warriors in the Bible. They were always ready to fight, to destroy their enemies, and possess their land. It's that spirit of might that moves me. I don't start anything, but I won't back down from anybody, either."

At the end of the 1988 playoffs, during the Detroit games, Green says he was reading in the Bible how Jesus' life affected so many people. "I later explained this to the assistant coach," said A.C., "and explained to him how the One affected the many." Ever since then, during the intense moments of the game, the assistant coach would stick one finger up to signify "the One affecting the many." After the final game, he told Green, "You're right, A.C. one person can affect the many."

Green says he believes the Lakers can repeat last season's victory, but it won't be easy. For the next season, he wants this season's performance to be a springboard; "I usually shoot for 15 points per game or 10 rebounds. I was happy with this past season's performance, but not satisfied," he commented.

His goal is also to see athletes come to a relationship with Jesus. He wants to see men that aren't influenced by the world of entertainment but who will be humble in the midst of publicity: "I want to see guys who won't be egotistical or prideful but submissive to Jesus. That's where real power comes from."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Bill Gunter Miami University

by Leilani Corpus
3/89

GAINESVILLE, FL (FR) - He was called the "beer boogieman" in the Florida beach community of Bradenton. Bill Gunter would run into convenience stores at night and steal two to three cases of beer, along with some potato chips. "I did this every night one summer until I got caught," he admitted.

"I was on my way out of this one store with a couple of cases of beer. It was the sixth time that summer I had done this ... and it was in broad daylight. Before I knew it, I was arrested and charged with petty larceny."

When he was 15-years-old, Bill was well-known around town in the bar scene - and was well on his way to becoming an alcoholic. "I would be sleeping in class and all of a sudden I would get a craving for a beer. I was a borderline alcoholic and came to school stoned all the time." He was 15-years-old when he was arrested for the first time. The second arrest came at age 16. That began what he called a "three-week fight" with his parents. "Then everything went downhill," he said.

Drugs and alcohol had been a part of Bill's life since his childhood. He smoked his first joint when he was in the 5th grade. From marijuana, he went onto LSD, reds, valium and speed. Although he played football, he never trained or lifted weights, but stayed stoned most of the time. "My parents found pot and rolling papers in my laundry," he added. "I smoked pot in my room, and pretty much did what I wanted to do because my parents were scared of me."

Along with drugs, Bill also got into fights: "One night I beat up six guys and kicked in someone's door. I went home and cried myself to sleep. I felt out of control because of my temper. I thought I was going crazy." He would often "black out" after hitting the person the first few times. "One night I had a fight with this other guy, and I blacked out. I regained consciousness when they took him in the ambulance. My lips were busted and people told me that I kicked him. But I didn't remember a thing."

That year, Bill contracted pneumonia and went into the hospital with a 105 degree fever. While in the intensive care unit, a friend's father brought a Bible for him to read. Bill began to read it through the ensuing years of drugs and violence.

The fights and drugs came to a climax during his senior year in high school when his friends would leave parties because he was there. "Everyone was afraid of Bill," said Jim Smith, his best friend. "They would leave the party because of him. I told him I thought he was insane." Bill began to get desperate: "People thought I was crazy, and I thought about suicide. One night I prayed, 'Lord I need help.'"

A scholarship to play football at a major university was Bill's dream. But if a scholarship didn't work out,

Bill had already planned his alternative occupation: to work with a cocaine dealer as a thug. "I was on my way to it already. I was hired once - I drove by and shot at a man's house and broke his windows. I told the dealer that if I didn't get a football scholarship, I wanted to work for him."

Several scholarship offers did come, however. "I was committed to go to Miami University, but I changed my mind and decided to go to the University of Florida. I believe I was directed by God, even though I didn't know it." The month before he left for Gainesville, Bill pulled a gun on a man and told him, "I'm going to blow your brains out if you don't quit messing around with my girlfriend." Two girls jumped on him, and he beat them up. However, he says, "If it weren't for them, I think I would have killed him."

When Bill arrived at the University of Florida, his father had a stroke and went into the hospital. "My father was supposed to die," he related. "I was really hurt because I remembered the way I treated him. I had never ever told him that I loved him. I got so sick that I could barely eat for a week."

The emotional turmoil over his father's illness, coupled with his own personal desperation, began to bring Bill to his knees. Two weeks later, he received a dinner invitation from a young man in the Maranatha Church at the University of Florida. After hearing about the love of Jesus, Bill became a Christian. "Out of the depths of my sin, God could answer my prayer!" he said. "And there was an automatic change. The Lord put me in the right place because I had worn out my welcome in hell. All I wanted to do was die." After he became a Christian, he immediately returned to his dorm and shared with his best friend Jim.

"I flipped out when he told me he got saved," admitted Jim. "I thought, 'If God can change Bill, then He can change me.'" Before the day was over, Jim had also become a Christian.

A national racquetball champion, Jim said that he and Bill then decided to return to Bradenton for a visit: "People just sat there and shook their heads when we told them that we loved them and we loved Jesus! When we walked into the parties our friends would try to put a beer into our hands. But we always walked in with milk and would share with them about Jesus. Now they're calling Bill a 'Christian Weirdo,' and expecting it to last no longer than a month. But I know it's going to last for life."

Today, Bill Gunter is a new man. Besides playing defensive tackle for the University of Florida Gators, he preaches open-air on the campus about the life-changing power of Jesus Christ. He tells students passing in front of the Turlington Hall classroom building, "I would have killed myself if I hadn't found God. I praise the Lord for snatching me from hell!"

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Champion Water Skier

Jett Segal
11/88

GAINESVILLE, FL (FR) - A championship water skier who won the national title for slalom skiing in August of this year says she finds more fulfillment in her relationship with Jesus Christ than in the fame and excitement of athletic competitions.

The August tournament in Palm Beach, Florida, was the second that Jett Segal has participated in since she became a Christian. "I never skied so well. I wasn't the typical competitor who is arrogant and unapproachable. I served my competitors," she related. Besides the excitement of skiing, Jett was able to encourage the other skiers with her faith in Christ.

Accustomed to severe pressure and expectations from coaches, sponsors, and parents, Segal began skiing at 7-years-old with her father - who has served as her coach throughout her athletic career. "At 5 a.m. we got out on the water and skied until 11 a.m. Then we were back on the lake at 4 p.m. until dark."

The hard work paid off when she turned pro at 17-years-old. Ranked as the #3 skier in the world in 1976, she began living a celebrity lifestyle. "People wanted my autograph, and I traveled to Australia, France, England, and all over the world and received superstar treatment," said Jett. "It was fun, but very empty."

In 1981, she was one of ten skiers invited to compete in the most prestigious tournament in the world, the U.S. Masters at Pine Mountain, Georgia. But Jett's performance there turned out to be a major disappointment: "I bombed out. I did so bad, and began wondering, 'Why do I ski?' " After the defeat, she said her father asked what she would do for an encore. "I started crying out to God, and this was the beginning of a search," said Segal. "To most people it didn't look like that because I was basically living a life of fame and fortune.

"I was skiing for everyone else, and I was constantly trying to prove myself and perform for others," she admitted. Shortly after the defeat, while in Las Vegas, Jett bought a book called "The Positive Power of Jesus." Raised in an Orthodox Jewish family, Segal winced everytime she read the word "Jesus" because it was never said at home. But something seemed to draw her to pursue the search.

Jett then went to Dallas, Texas, to study at the University of Texas. Her father called and apologized for pressuring her after the previous defeat at the tournament. At that time she was also working with her boyfriend, an orthopedic surgeon, and continuing to ski. It was a year later that she became a Christian while attending a Messianic Jewish fellowship. This was the major turning point in her life, Segal explained. Her discovery brought unexplainable personal fulfillment, and released her from the constant drive to achieve acceptance.

After a brief time at home with her parents in New Jersey in 1985, Segal moved to the Orlando area and began to attend the Orlando Christian Center. At that time she ranked as one of the top skiers, but had never won a major title.

"That summer, after I found out who I was in Christ, not for my father, or any other coach, I could go for it and ski in the next tournament." For the first time in 19 years she won three out of four national titles. Said Segal: "It was a glory to God and a direct result of my new relationship with God."

This past summer's victory was the second time she captured three out of four national titles. Her greatest dream now, she said, is to move to Israel to help start a Christian ministry.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Clarissa Davis

3/89

AUSTIN, TX (FR) - A sprained ankle didn't keep University of Texas basketball player Clarissa Davis in bed during the fight of the season against No. 2-ranked University of Tennessee. The Lady Longhorn star sprained her ankle during practice in late January of this year, but after receiving prayer for healing she returned to the court and made headlines by scoring an unprecedented 38 points against the rival team.

"That seems to be the trend for me," Davis told a reporter from the local daily paper. "I get hurt, get prayed for, and I'm O.K." Dr. Jesse DeLee initially told Davis that it would take 10 days for her to recover, and cautioned her not to return to the court as soon as she felt like it. He performed surgery on her knee last year, and warned her of the consequences of favoring her right ankle since she already had seriously damaged her left knee.

Without her cast Davis was able to test her foot and felt no pain. Lady Longhorn coach Judy Conradt did not expect her at practice, but when Davis arrived on the court she didn't say anything. "I didn't want to talk to anyone," Conradt said. "I was afraid it was a mistake." This capped a 24-hour period in which Davis went from believing she would be off the court for six weeks, to learning she could play.

After the upset victory for Texas, Tennessee coach Pat Summitt said, "When was Clarissa hurt? I saw no sign Clarissa was hurt." Tennessee center Sheila Frost told reporters, "(Clarissa) carried that team; she was almost unstoppable. I was jumping as high as I could and they were still going in."

Summitt agreed, adding, "You have to look at her and say she took the game in her hands." The rest of the Lady Longhorns scored 16 points compared to Davis' 38. "We were prepared to play without her," said Longhorn Vicki Hall. "That's the way you have to look at it. When Clarissa's on the floor, it's a lot easier for everyone. And a lot harder for the other team."

This is the second miraculous comeback in the All-American's basketball career. In late 1987 the athletic community assumed her career was finished when she was injured on the court. Sports reporters predicted that Davis, a member of Maranatha Christian Church in Austin, would not be able to compete in the summer Olympic games in Seoul; yet Davis upset those dire forecasts by a speedy recovery and tried out for the Olympics after receiving prayer for healing.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Daniel Spicks - USC All-Star Describes Former Life in Mafia

LOS ANGELES, CA (FR) - During the day he was an all-star football player, student and peer counselor at Claremont High School. At night he was the right-hand man of a top assassin in an international mafia network. From his sophomore year until his senior year he successfully lived a double life of athlete and assassin's accomplice until he met an evangelist in the cafeteria at the University of Southern California.

Daniel Spicks, a 19-year-old defensive lineman for USC, said, "During the day I would go to school, play football and come home. At night I would go out with him (the assassin) and help with his deals. I would spend whole weekends with him." Sparks he needed to be friends with the assassin so his best friend who had been kidnapped could be returned.

Sparks says he got involved in the mafia through his best friend, Frank, a Pakistani. He met him while playing tennis in gym class. "We were close friends. He had a girlfriend, Sandra, in Portland, Oregon, who had connections in the mafia. Frank's father owned a business in Pakistan, and was already involved in the mafia, but Frank didn't know it."

Sandra sent Sparks letters advising him who to look for when they went out to protect Frank. Frank's father was taking money out of the business, and depositing it in his personal account. When the mafia found out, Sparks said, they came looking for Frank because he was supposed to inherit the business. "I hung around Frank to protect him," said Sparks. "But one night when I left his house they ended up catching him. He was kidnapped and he called to let me know, but I didn't know where he was."

Frank was "replaced," Sparks explained, by "Buddy" a hired assassin assigned to Los Angeles for one year who had the company signed over to the mafia. "I hung out with Buddy to get Frank back. Soon I found out that Frank was in Portland. I was devastated by the kidnapping." Sparks was asked to join, but he would have had to "disappear" and give up his family. "I knew if I got fully involved that I would eventually be killed because they were asking me to kill Buddy. They considered me valuable on the outside as well as on the inside."

During those years, Daniel said that his parents, coaches and friends were unaware of his involvement. And although he had witnessed several murders and was dealing drugs, he was never caught by police. "The only thing I got busted for was riding a bike down the wrong side of the street."

During his senior year, Buddy moved back to Pakistan, along with Frank, who decided to join the mafia. Buddy continued sending tapes and letters to Sparks. "I had everything crumble around me. I was looking for excitement but was never satisfied. I was disgusted with what I was doing. All my so-called friends were being killed."

Said Daniel of his emotional struggle: "I used to stay up until 2 or 3 AM just driving around feeling that empty, bleeding darkness in my soul. I was searching for something but I didn't know where to look. The grip I had on my emotions was slowly ebbing away. The walls I had built around myself were coming in. I felt I would explode from the pressure that was building inside."

He was an all-star athlete and model student, yet the double life he was leading was now taking its toll. His mother hinted one night that she might know about him selling drugs but didn't pursue it, he said. Secretly, he wondered if he was going to survive his next "job."

A sudden change in his course of life came when Daniel met Tom Sirotnak, Director of Champions for Christ, at the University of Southern California. Tom immediately sensed Daniel's despair and reached out to him in a gesture of compassion. On the outside Daniel was respected as an all-star athlete on a football scholarship, but Sirotnak let him understand that in order to be a true champion, he needed to be totally committed to Jesus Christ.

Daniel's eyes were opened soon after that. He began to see that material possessions did not amount to lasting satisfaction, especially when he was always wondering how much longer he could stay alive. "For 19 years I thought that you were measured by how smart you were, how rich you could get, and how tough you could be. What I didn't realize was that I was already dead without Jesus Christ."

The turning point for Daniel came when he first visited Tom at his apartment. The warmth and care that was shown to Daniel through Tom and other Christians convinced him. "The people I met there carried a spirit that pervaded their lives and everything around them." Daniel realized that this was the Spirit of Christ, and he was soon delivered from his life of violence, drugs and self-destruction.

Today, Daniel is a radically changed man. "I am so thankful for the Lord's mercy. Now I am alive in Christ and I have come to understand that a true man is not measured by his worldly possessions."

The tapes and letters from his mafia connection in Pakistan stopped abruptly when Daniel became a Christian. "What I gave up was sin; what the Lord gave me was the knowledge, peace and the joy of His salvation."

Daniel Spicks is still faithfully serving the Lord as a campus minister.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

An interview with Barry Sanders

By Jay Rogers
10/91

Starting tailback for the Detroit Lions, Barry Sanders recently scored three touchdowns in the third game of the NFL season leading his team to victory. "The Barry Sanders' Show" - one news network called it, but this kind of performance should come as no surprise to those who are already familiar with his career.

Barry was the Heisman Award winner of 1988, while playing for Oklahoma State, yet was surprisingly overlooked at Wichita North High School by most college recruiters, possibly because of his height - 5'8". But it was his speed and notorious vertical leap that helped him set 13 NCAA season records in his junior year. His numbers are especially impressive since he often sat out the 4th quarter of many of OSU's most dominant games. Barry's college coach - Pat Jones - described his running ability as "explosive." Barry's kickoff touchdown returns of 100 yards plus in OSU's first possession in each of the opening games of the 1987 and 1988 seasons is a remarkable feat. Says Coach Jones, "He takes your breath away."

Barry was drafted by the NFL in his Junior year at OSU, and was picked up by the Detroit Lions in the first round for the following season. After earning Rookie of the Year honors in 1989 and coming within 10 yards of the rushing title, he won the rushing title outright in his second season. Last year, Barry rushed for 1,304 yards and scored a league leading 16 touchdowns.

FR: Can you tell a little bit about your family background?

Barry Sanders: I was one of eleven kids, eight sisters and two brothers. We were a close knit family. My mother is a Christian and we went to church every Sunday. She was hard working and a great inspiration for me to work hard. After all the kids were grown, she went back to school to get her degree because she always wanted to be an RN. So she went to nursing school.

FR: What about your Christian testimony? You grew up in church, but was there ever a time when you made a deeper commitment to God?

Barry Sanders: Yes, after college. Like I said, I grew up in church; I was baptized in the eighth grade, but I didn't really understand what it meant. Then it was in college that I really had my faith tested. It was there I found out how lacking my faith was. I reached a kind of breaking point. Then I met some people who challenged me to a greater commitment - people who really loved God and were walking with God with no compromise. They weren't afraid to get in my face and challenge me. That's the point when I was saved.

I was really influenced through my upbringing, but then I came to a point where I had to repent for a lot of things. This happened after my last year of college, before I began playing in the NFL.

FR: Do you feel that this experience has affected your success in playing football?

Barry Sanders: Yes, of course! Christianity affects your whole life. I feel I'm more competitive, a better player, but off the field is where there is always a battle. That's where the power came. I was always successful on the field, but now I'm successful off the field too.

FR: There has been a growing interest in Christian athletes by the media recently. I just saw a Nightline show recently featuring Reggie White (of the Philadelphia Eagles). What's behind the new interest?

Barry Sanders: I think they're curious. They want to know what it is. Some have bad intentions; they want to criticize us. Some have good intentions; they're looking for something positive. All in all they're looking for something to sell papers and magazines, and not to preach the gospel. Most are sincere; they admire us and want to portray a man who has something good.

FR: You've set a lot of records in the past few years. Do you have any goals for the 1991 season?

Barry Sanders: Yes, a team goal - to go to the playoffs. The Lions haven't been to the playoffs in the last two years. This year though we have a winning mentality.

FR: Who are the teams to beat this year?

Barry Sanders: We have a tough schedule. There are a lot of good teams to beat, Minnesota, the Bears, the Bills, Dallas, and of course, the '49ers, but I think we can win.

FR: You said that your mother was a great influence in your life. Are there any other people who have influenced you, like your coaches? What does the name Wayne Fontes mean to you?

Barry Sanders: Coach Fontes? He's a comfortable guy to play for. He doesn't apply a lot of pressure. He's a guy that's easy to talk to. He doesn't have an ego problem. He's open.

FR: Who else has influenced you?

Barry Sanders: Well there's Greg Ball (of Champions for Christ) whose been discipling me. He's a person I can confide in and he's helped me in keeping on track. There are a lot of people who have spoken words of correction and have prayed for me. Lakita Garth is a good friend; she has ministered to me a lot. And there's Tom Sirotnak - he always has a good word. He is always encouraging me. I really like him - he's on fire, man! He's got a big heart and is a real man of God.

Editor's note: One of the most striking aspects you will notice in talking with Barry Sanders is his humility. In the professional sports arena - a world full of big egos - Barry seems to exemplify the type of character anyone would admire. Lion's coach Wayne Fontes is one person who has been impressed by his humble personality. On the final game of the 1989 season, Barry was within ten yards of the NFL rushing title. Coach Fontes asked Barry if he wanted to come off the bench and try to surpass the 1,480-yard record held by Christian Okoye of the Kansas City Chiefs.

Barry Sanders declined. "Let's just win it and go home," he said.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Dave Dravecky's Comeback

11/90

By the rude bridge that arched the flood,
Their flag to April's breeze unfurled,
Here once the embattled farmers stood,
And fired the shot heard round the world.

Ralph Waldo Emerson's immortal words gave birth to the hymn our forbears sang on July 4, 1837, at the completion of the battle monument in Concord. I have stood at the Old Concord Bridge and mentally replayed that epochal moment. All who have done so can almost hear the initial blast of gunpowder and see the the burst of fire explode from the farmer's musket.

Little did the unnamed hero realize the far reaching impact his shot would make when he squeezed the trigger. Nothing would ever be the same. What was to him merely his duty as a patriot has become the point on which our country's history pivots. His was indeed "the shot heard round the world."

Comeback is the true account of another history making event ... not brought about by guns and soldiers, but quietly modeled in the life of a man whose name is now well known because of his courageous faith. Dave Dravecky's story is not just another athlete's story, because Dave is not just another athlete. His major struggles have not been limited to locker rooms and pitcher's mounds.

And though he has known the thrill of playing a vital role on a championship major league baseball team, his greatest victories have not been won in public ballparks. His most significant conquests have come deep within his own life as he refused to surrender to the same enemies that plague us all: fear and disappointment, pain and death.

A curious swelling no larger than a quarter on Dave's pitching arm was diagnosed as a malignant tumor. Yet his determination mixed with optimism following the surgery and therapy got him back into the game. The whole sports world watched in amazement as the all-star hurler returned to the mound, confident and sure as ever. Many called it a miracle as he was reunited with his team, the San Francisco Giants.

In early August of '89, amid repeated, thunderous applause, he earned a decisive win against the Cincinnati Reds. As he lifted his cap for a final bow following that incredible achievement, he received his twelfth standing ovation of the day. Everybody who was anybody in the world of news had his name on their lips. Dave Dravecky was suddenly a synonym for comeback.

His next game was in Montreal. Excitement was at an all-time high. Throwing with a strange tingling sensation in his arm, Dave pitched well enough through five innings to be ahead 3-0, a nice cushion to enjoy. In the bottom of the sixth, he faced a tough batter at the plate, Tim Lincecum. Dave took his wet, stared at first base to restrain a runner, pivoted, and, kicking high, he pushed off the rubber and let fly. He didn't realize that it would be the last pitch of his life.

A dull, sickening crack could be heard across the unusually quiet stadium. The humerus bone in his pitching arm literally snapped as he delivered with full force. In Dave's own words, "My arm felt like I'd been hit with a meat axe." He grabbed his arm to keep it from flying toward home plate as he screamed, tumbling headfirst to the ground.

It was enough to devastate the strongest of the strong. Not Dave Dravecky. Remarkable though it may seem today, his thoughts were not full of bitterness or self-pity. Rather, he found himself overflowing with gratitude, confident that God was writing another chapter in his life. Something more, something amazing was about to be revealed. At the time he had no idea what it was. Little did he realize, as he writhed in pain upon the ground, that he had delivered "the pitch heard round the world."

Now he does. And that's why Comeback has been written.

- Chuck Swindoll, Pastor

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Kurt Barber, USC - Outside linebacker

A graduate of Tilghman High School in Paducah, Kentucky, Kurt Barber was listed as one of the top 20 football recruits in the nation. Kurt was a "good teenager" who attended church every Sunday and was excelling socially, but knew he was missing something in life.

"I went to church every Sunday but found no lasting fulfillment," he said. "I had a girlfriend, but there was still an empty place in my heart that wasn't being satisfied. There was an empty void in my life but I couldn't find out what would fill it."

About that time he was faced with the big decision of which school he was going to attend, and decided to go to the University of Southern California where he kept hearing about a group called Champions for Christ. "I knew about the Lord to a degree and continued to grow distant in my relationship with Jesus. Finally in the spring semester I got fed up with my counterfeit Christianity. I decided I wasn't going to live in anymore compromise or backsliding."

Even Kurt's Christian friends noticed a big change. Driving back from a ministry outreach, Kurt excitedly told Tom Sirotnak, "Tom, I know I'm called to preach! ... I know the Lord is calling me to preach!" Kurt's newfound fire became a public attraction, as he began sharing his faith in a dynamic way at a local high school hangout.

"I'm not the same man you used to know," Kurt later told his friends. "Today, I'm a new man in Christ. Jesus has changed my life."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Magic Johnson Talks to Youth:

"Save sex until you're married"

By James T. Fairfield

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Magic Johnson recently spoke to almost 1,000 students at Cardozo High School in Washington, D.C. Magic challenged the students to responsibility - in their studies and in their relationships.

He urged them to put as much energy into their academic work as into sports, and to save sex until after marriage.

Johnson now brings a strong message to students and young people across the country on sexual responsibility. He told the assembled students at Cardozo High that although some students would not take his advice, he urged them: "You shouldn't have it [sex] until you're married."

One female student created a stir in the audience when she questioned Johnson why he wasn't "responsible" in his many sexual encounters with women during his basketball career.

"That was my mistake," Johnson responded. "I was not responsible. I didn't do what I was supposed to do.

"It was wrong first of all for me to do the thing I was doing. I can't correct that. All I can do is try and save your lives."

The incidence of AIDS is increasing among heterosexuals. The most recent figures indicate it took 8 years to reach the first 100,000 cases of AIDS in the United States but only a little more than two years to add the next 100,000 cases.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Magic's New Tune On "Safe Sex"

By Steve Beard

2/92

Who made the following comment?

"Young people especially have to think more carefully about the decision to have sex, because the 'safest sex' is no sex and that is the most responsible choice."

- A. Vice President Dan Quayle
- B. Political activist Beverly LaHaye
- C. Earvin "Magic" Johnson
- D. Catholic Cardinal John O'Connor

While it could have easily been choice A, B, or D, these are the words of former Laker superstar Magic Johnson, two weeks after announcing that he had contracted the HIV virus and his intentions to promote "safe sex." Where the term was once associated with getting married, our new-age social dictionaries have redefined "safe-sex" to mean virtually any act performed with a condom.

On Wall Street, Johnson's initial declaration literally caused the stock in condom manufacturers to rise the morning after. On Capital Hill, Magic Johnson was immediately asked to fill a vacancy on the AIDS Commission To Unleash Power (ACT-UP) invited Magic to join their mob of terrorists. All in all, a rather pathetic list of reactions.

If you did not hear about Magic's new tune, don't take it personally either. With a few notable exceptions, the national media lent this dramatic conversion a deaf ear and puny coverage. After all, advocating condom distribution is a sure fire way to get invited to a Hollywood cocktail party, while preaching abstinence will only garner a few thank-you notes from grateful parents. Who in the press wanted to devalue Magic's social standing?

Vice President Dan Quayle was one of the first to advocate abstinence after Magic's announcement: "That's a sure cure, and we ought to be talking about it." In turn, he was resoundingly ridiculed by keen social ethicists such as talk show host Arsenio Hall and his dimwitted guests. "Is Quayle serious?" they mocked.

With Magic now on the abstinence bandwagon, Arsenio, the late-night Prince of Hipness and one of Magic's close friends, is looking like a bewildered emperor with no clothes.

It would be interesting to know exactly what caused Magic's change of mind and message. A minister? One of his teammates? Interestingly enough, the same weekend that Magic issued his new and improved statement, the Los Angeles Times and the Orange County Register reported on the Sunday sermon of the Rev. John Nix-McReynolds, pastor of one of the area's largest black churches. After excusing children under 12, the preacher launched into an unusually explicit sermon.

"My friends," he said, "please allow me to declare that the message that has been given to Magic, though noble as it may be in its attempt and appeal, is indeed tragic. The message of 'safe sex' is not the answer, it is still 'death sex.'"

Condom distribution "may be the message of the world, the Gay Liberation Front, ACT-UP, and Queer Nation," he preached. "But that is not the message of the Bible."

According to the Times, "Black preachers around the nation have been moved to break their silence on the delicate issue" ever since Magic's announcement. Black preachers led this nation to a better understanding of civil rights in the 1960s, perhaps they will lead us to a better understanding of civil righteousness in the 1990s.

The preacher's wisdom is still considered foolish in many social circles. Observing that too many good young men are dying before they reach 40, Anna Quindlen, columnist for the New York Times, wrote, "I'm far less concerned about my kids' lifestyles than I am about their lives." Quindlen's columns are notoriously well-known for their spasms of wishful thinking. For today, at least, we are not afforded the luxury of separating our lifestyles from our lives.

A recent poll found more Americans who think that Magic Johnson is paying the price for sexual promiscuity than believe that he was an "unfortunate victim of chance." For millions of Americans, including myself, Magic was a hero. But heroism is not found in boundless sexual encounters.

We foolishly tinker with our future when our public schools provide condoms-on-demand. The truth is that condoms have a failure rate of 15.7 percent, and that's on a good day.

Dr. Theresa Crenshaw, a member of the National AIDS Commission, once asked a conference of sexologists if they had available the partner of their dreams, and knew that person carried the HIV virus, would they have sex, depending on a condom for protection? No hand was raised.

Dr. Crenshaw chastised the group for giving advice to others that they would not follow themselves. "The point is putting a mere balloon between a healthy body and a deadly disease is not safe."

Where once condoms were promoted to avoid pregnancy, today they are being touted as the latest health tip. How we evolved from an-apple-a-day to bran muffins to condoms, I will never know. Unfortunately, we'll believe anything if it will help us sin more safely.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(6bb0e4f14c4133b37d2887cb37e67ddd_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(47734e4656765d20df4fdbd5b7aff048_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Marathon Miracle

By Jay Rogers

2/92

"As I raced the last few yards down Boston's Boylston Street, beyond exhaustion, drenched, each step a creation of agony, I barely heard the sounds that enveloped me. TV cameras, video and still cameras clicked and whirred. After I had nearly collapsed across the finish line, I was amazed to discover that amid the competition of Olympic and professional runners I had finished in the top 20 percent.

"I sent a prayer of thanks heavenward, also remembering that I had hit the wall before and survived."

CHICO, California (FR) - A car crash left him hanging between life and death; the doctors said he would never walk or talk again, but Richard Sprenkle, is alive today and has since completed the Boston Marathon. This spring, he plans to "Race Across America" on a 3-4 week bicycle tour of the United States.

Six years ago, while driving his jeep in Chico, California, Rich swerved to avoid hitting a dog. The jeep overturned ejecting three other passengers, but Rich was the one most critically injured. He slammed into a curb breaking his neck in four places; the jeep hit a tree and bounced back landing on Rich, crushing his pelvis and skull. He was rushed to the hospital and doctors did not expect him to live through the night.

Miraculously, Rich lived, but slipped into a coma. Immediately his parents and friends began a prayer vigil throughout the state. They understood that it would take more than medical science to save Rich's life. The family believes that it was prayer that made the difference. The runner's father, Rich Sprenkle, Sr., stayed at the hospital and often prayed by his son's side. "The next morning one doctor came in and looked at us kind of strange," Sprenkle, Sr. said. "He said, 'Things are looking better. Whatever you're doing keep it up.'"

Another crisis arose two weeks into the coma. Rich developed a blood clot in his brain which was operated on, but again doctors could not guarantee that he would ever regain consciousness. Even if he survived, Rich's family was told, he would be unable to walk or talk ever again. But after a month long coma, Rich emerged both talking and thinking clearly.

Doctors were astounded. Doug Kelly, Director of Chico Community Hospital Rehabilitation Center, said, "It's very rare to see someone come out of a coma after 28 days, very rare."

Rich learned to walk and feed himself again after the brain surgery and, after a 60 day rehabilitation period, he walked away from the hospital. 90 days later, Rich competed in a triathlon.

Says Dr. Kelly: "Never have I seen someone come out of a coma, and progress as quickly and as far as Rich has ... Never."

Having survived these traumas, Rich now turned toward God. He had been profoundly affected by Jesus Christ and the reality of His salvation during his early life, but in his early adult years, God was placed on a back burner. "With God's help, much prayer and determination, I was walking within a few weeks," remembers Rich.

"Finally, the doctors allowed me to run. Prior to the accident, I had not taken running seriously, but now I began to run competitively." Rich began by racing in several triathlons, marathons, 10Ks and long distance races. In 1989, he ran in the Chico Bidwell Classic Marathon and finished with a time of 2.59 hours which qualified him for the "race of races" - the Boston Marathon.

Rich is proud of the fact that he finished in the top 20%, competing against professional and Olympic runners and displays his medal as a testimony to the healing power of Jesus Christ.

"I had to rely on God's Word and believe for the complete healing of my body. The X-rays showed that my spine was severed in three places. The blood clot in my brain was right where my speech center is. They said my speech would be garbled, but there is no impairment - nothing but two little scars on my forehead."

Today, Rich is an artist of beautiful water color paintings. His finishing time in the upcoming Columbus Ohio Marathon will determine his qualification for the Summer 1992 Olympics. "I am now planning my RAAM - 'Race Across America.' This is a love motivated race. The event is to glorify God's name and not mine."

The race will take him from Santa Monica pier beginning on April 15 to Washington, D.C. in about three weeks. If you would like a listing of cities that Rich will be travelling through, write: 2605 Cactus Avenue, Chico, CA, 95926. (916) 345-5440.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

A "New Breed" of Athlete is catching America's attention

By Jay Rogers

10/91

* ABC's Nightline recently featured a special report on Christian athletes featuring Philadelphia Eagle's defensive end Reggie White.

* M magazine ran a cover story on L.A. Dodger's Hershisier, Butler, Strawberry and Carter - dubbing them "God's All Stars."

Suddenly, the American media seems to be interested in the spiritual life of some of the most well known superstars in sports. Some journalists have raised criticism and some have asked, "Is the playing field the place for preaching the gospel?"

Even so, evangelical Christianity has become a dominant force in the sport's world. Baseball, hockey, football and basketball each have their own ministries dedicated to evangelizing the players and ministering to the spiritual needs of the players on every team.

For the last six years Athlete's International Ministries has sponsored a Prayer and Praise conference in Phoenix, Arizona. According to executive director Larry Kerychuk, "Over 2,700 athletes and family members have been touched by this ministry." The Phoenix '91 conference featured well known sports personalities such as Rosey Grier, Ernie Shavers and Meadowlark Lemon, as well as Chicago Bears' Mike Singletary, KC Chiefs' Christian Okoye, L.A. Lakers' A.C. Green and Philadelphia Eagles' Reggie White.

Greg Ball, National Director for Champions for Christ, was formerly a full-contact karate kick boxer. Now he ministers to some of the most well known sports personalities in the country. According to Ball, "About seven years ago, there were so many athletes on university campuses giving their lives to the Lord that we saw a need for these men to be discipled, trained and given the real message of the kingdom of God. Many of them have now become effective preachers."

Ball tells the story of how he and some other campus evangelists led A.C. Green to the Lord while he was a student at Oregon State. "A.C. was reached at the university level. He was discipled as a part of a local church there. As he went into the NBA playing with the Lakers, there was another church in the L.A. area which was networked with the church at Oregon State. It was a big adjustment to make but because of the church, he was able to continue to grow."

Professional sports have always produced fiery preachers - partially due to the similarity of discipline required in training the body of an athlete to the type of spiritual training needed to be an effective witness for Christ. In the past, baseball players such as Billy Sunday and Tony Kubek were outspoken proponents of the faith. Yet they suffered ridicule by the press and were called "opportunists."

Today, because of the input of more mature leadership provided by ministries such as Athletes International, Christian ballplayers have been getting more respect from the press and the television media. Although more widely accepted than ever before, outspoken Christian athletes are still criticized for their public preaching or their display of faith on the field. Some are merely letting their character, performance and drive on the field do the preaching. Off the field they are letting their lifestyle and character be a witness for Christ.

According to Dodger's pitching ace Orel Hershiser, "I don't preach. I have to play on this team, with these guys, so I just don't do that. But I do let my pitching be an example and an influence for Jesus Christ."

Some Christian superstars have even been criticized for their aggressive style of play, being thought of as a contradiction to the meek obedience taught by Jesus Christ. Says Philadelphia's Eagle Reggie White, "A lot of people look at what I do and say, 'That's not Christian.' A lot of people think that being a Christian means you've got to be a wimp. I think Christians should be the toughest athletes in the world. I think we should go all out at all times."

L.A. Laker A.C. Green echoes this belief: "God wants his people to be warriors - to be battlers and fighters. And I don't mean waging war or getting into fights ... but a fight to get the rebounds and to score points. It's that spirit of might that moves me. I don't start anything, but I won't back down, either."

But whether they are criticized for preaching or their style of aggressive play, these men and women are living faithfully in simple obedience to Christ's command: "Go into all the world and preach the gospel to all creation" (Mark 16:15).

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Olympics 1988

10/88

SEOUL, Korea (EP) - Seoul, capital of South Korea and the host city of the 1988 Olympic Games, received heightened media attention from around the world which focused on development since the Korean War: developments in the economy, culture, and religion. One focal point has been the Yoido Full Gospel Church, the largest church in the world, with over half a million members.

Pastor Paul Yonggi Cho, a resident of Seoul, was born in a small village, like many of his fellow Korean citizens. And like them, he moved to the city during the last three decades when the population, three-quarters rural in 1955, became three-quarters urban today.

That move toward urbanization has been a major factor in the conversion of hundreds of thousands of Koreans from Buddhism or Confucianism to Christianity, says Cho. "People, once they move to the city, are more or less free of their obligations and traditions, so they can freely come to church," Cho told the Washington Post. He also listed the Korean War, the continuing social upheavals because of changes of governments and the intimidation of impending communist attack as factors that have contributed to the great growth of the church.

The Yoido Full Gospel Church has seven Sunday services; about 25,000 attend each, another 25,000 watch on closed-circuit television in 15 auxiliary chapels. There are two more sessions on Saturdays, and three on Wednesdays. The church also sponsors a television show and various publications.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Olympics - Carl Lewis

11/88

SEOUL, Korea (EP) - On the day that Carl Lewis found out he was the Olympic gold medal winner for the 100-meter sprint - the second time in a row he has won the gold for that event - the U.S. track star appeared at the largest church in the world to share his saving faith in Christ.

At the Yoido Full Gospel Church in Seoul, Lewis was the star attraction of the televised "Evening with the Olympians," sponsored by Lay Witnesses for Christ. With the help of an interpreter, Lewis told the 15,000 evangelical Koreans who were present that his faith in Christ has been his source of strength through the challenging and trying times of his life, including the death of his father 18 months ago.

"Eighteen months ago, my father passed away from cancer," Lewis explained. His father, Bill Lewis, was a high school teacher and coach in Willingboro, New Jersey. "We were extremely close and it was a very, very, very difficult time. I would not have been able to handle it without faith ... When my father died, I buried the 100-meter gold from the 1984 Olympics with him. He inspired me to go on and become the best I could be in the '88 Olympics."

Lewis, 27, became the recipient of the 1988 gold medal when Ben Johnson, the Canadian athlete who finished first in the 100-meter sprint event, tested positive for steroids, a banned substance for Olympic athletes. In a prepared statement, Lewis said "I feel sorry for Ben and for the Canadian people. Ben is a great competitor and I hope he is able to straighten out his life and return to competition."

Because of Johnson's expulsion from the Olympic Games, Lewis became the first sprinter in history to successfully defend a 100-meter Olympic victory, just as he became the first long jumper to win two Olympic gold medals in a row.

Lewis said that after the 1988 100-meter event, when he placed second after Johnson, "I was satisfied because I'd given my best effort. We know the Lord speaks to us in many ways." Then he recounted a dream his mother had about the event. In the dream, Lewis' father told his mother to tell the younger Lewis that whatever the outcome of the race, "to not worry about it because the Lord said everything's going to be all right."

"So today we found out that it was," he said.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

One-On-One With A.C. Green - Have you answered the call?

By Tom Sirotnak

10/92

L.A. LAKER POWER GUARD A.C. GREEN is one example of a man who will stand for the truth at all costs.

I knew A.C. during his rookie season with the Lakers. Like all rookies, he had to endure harassment and practical jokes. As he started to practice one day, a teammate came up to him and told him he had a phone call.

Later he told me, "Tommy, I knew if I got that call, I would be late to practice. That phone was a long way away, and if I were late to practice, I'd be in big trouble."

Trouble meant extra laps after practice. But being a naive rookie, he thought, "Well, maybe I'd better get it."

Off he ran to answer the call. He picked up the receiver ... sure enough ... nothing but a dial tone. Sprinting back, A.C. said to himself, "They got me. I can't believe it. They got me good."

When he burst through the door, practice had already started. The players laughed, "Ha, ha, ha, look at the rookie!"

"Hey, A.C.! Did you get the call?"

"Yeah," he nodded, embarrassed. "I got it all right."

Magic Johnson chimed in, "Oh yeah, Ace, who called?"

After a momentary silence, A.C. blurted out, "It's my Father and He wants to talk to you!"

All season, A.C. kept going back to Magic to challenge him, "Hey Earvin, have you answered the Call?"

That's my question to you as well. Will you answer the Father's call?

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(cf531ed27e91483460120fcc057b3901_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(d3102649f02e825ddb76dc3de0190154_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Paul Wylie: A Champion for Christ

1/88

BOSTON, MA (FR) - A figure skater competing in the Winter Olympics in Calgary, Canada, said besides the opportunity to skate in a world-class event, he is looking forward to sharing the Gospel with athletes from Eastern-bloc countries.

Paul Wylie, a 23-year-old sophomore in International Relations at Harvard University, says his greatest desire is to glorify God in his skating. "He was the one that got me out of the 5th place rating," Wylie said. "I think I placed 5th more than anybody I know."

"I kept making mistakes in strange places even though I trained really hard," he went on to explain. Prayer and lots of support from friends helped him rise from that ranking. Now, he said, he feels a peace that was never there during previous competitions. "You go out there knowing that you've done everything you can do, and that it's in God's hands."

This year, Wylie placed first in the New England Regional Competition. According to the U.S. Figure Skating Association, he is one of the only men to gain the U.S. National title in the men's singles division and pairs. He was an alternate to the 1987 World Team, and he was the Men's World Junior Champion in 1981.

Although he gives credit to his relationship with God for his successful skating, he trains five to six hours a day, six days a week. "Everybody knows I'm a Christian," he said, "but I don't shove it down their throats." Wylie joined the Maranatha Christian Church in Boston last summer.

Skating is not a key for more trophies, fame or glory, he said, but a platform to share the Gospel with athletes from countries with political and legal barriers to Christianity. "God has given me a burden for Eastern Europeans," he said.

"I believe I'm going to have a lot of opportunities to share with athletes from behind the Iron Curtain during the games."

After the realization of one of his dreams - to compete in the Olympics - Wylie plans to stay at Harvard to finish his degree. After graduation, he has no definite plans.

His advice to aspiring Olympic athletes is to be diligent and to keep their lives focused on Jesus. "He is the author and perfecter of your sport," he said, "and you need to have faith and be patient."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(870f5d5e9c0d57485634be3ecf52f3ca_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(4fe57c3593bf1b21d272ae7ac8dfaf77_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Pio Goudinets - University of Southern California Linebacker

6/89

"I grew up in church and was faithfully attending Bible studies. But I was also faithfully getting drunk, doing drugs, and sleeping around. To sum it all up, I was basically still living in sin. I had no idea of what the word 'Christian' meant.

"I came to realize my sin and selfishness when I was confronted on campus by a true believer in Jesus. David Soto, a campus minister, shared with me about the importance of commitment and faith in Jesus Christ, our Lord and Savior. I thought I was still a Christian, but after that I knew I wasn't.

"That spring semester I became a Christian. I found out what Christianity meant ... to have a personal relationship with Jesus, to be Christ-like, to walk as Jesus walked, and to be holy, pure and blameless in his sight. The following fall semester I played third string linebacker. But at the start of the season, I ended up starting the first game and the last eight games of the season.

"While I was honored twice for being the Defensive Player of the Year by the Big West conference officials and my coaches, I shared about my faith in Jesus Christ. I realized that God used me in a mighty way as a result of being faithful and knowing that all things are possible in Jesus Christ."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

REBOUND!

by Leilani Corpus
5/88

AUSTIN, TX (FR) -When University of Texas women's basketball star Clarissa Davis was injured on the court in late 1987, the athletic community assumed that her career was finished. "Tuesday night, the best player in women's college basketball became the latest Lady Longhorn to have her dreams collapse in a heap," wrote one columnist for the Austin American Statesman. "A lot of hopes went down with her."

The sports page reports on the day after her injury certainly sounded hopeless. A medical illustration accompanied one news article which detailed the serious tears in Clarissa's knee ligaments. An orthopedic surgeon explained that she would most definitely be off the court for at least a year.

Head Coach Jody Conradt was visibly upset by the ordeal that occurred that night in Miami's Knight Center. "I haven't had too many disappointments in coaching," Conradt told reporters, "but when you see people lose something they love so much and are so good at, the normal question arises. Is it worth it? I don't know."

But Clarissa Davis is a unique lady in several ways ... and has surprised not only the athletic community in Austin but the medical community as well. She is now experiencing a recovery which she calls "miraculous" and is also preparing for the Olympic Trials in Colorado Springs. "I haven't even been playing and the Olympic Committee invited me to try out - that's pretty good!" she said enthusiastically. After her injury in December, an Austin sports reporter predicted that the torn ligaments would knock her out of a chance at going to Seoul this summer.

Davis' supposed last game occurred during the Orange Bowl/Burger King Classic against Rutgers University, when she fell after an interception. "Thirty days after the surgery I walked," said Davis, "and I wasn't supposed to play for a year." By her third month, she was running, shooting, and beginning to do some cutting. "The doctors don't know how to handle it, because I'm already doing things that I'm not supposed to be doing," she added.

Coach Conradt thought she had lost her top player. Davis has been described as "unquestionably the best player in women's basketball today," and was last season's winner of the Naismith Award - the top honor in women's basketball. Her injury rocked the women's athletic world, and drew sympathetic comments from many of her opponents. Iowa Coach Vivian Stringer was quoted as saying, "I've never been so hurt in seeing an athlete get hurt. It's sickening. We need her - I'm just heartbroken."

But Conradt is now encouraged about Davis' quick recovery. "She's been doing very well in developing and progress," she said. "Its been better than anyone I've seen recovering from a serious injury. She's far ahead of schedule than the norm."

Those people who know Clarissa Davis intimately, however, are not really surprised by her fast progress. Davis is an outspoken Christian, and a member of the Maranatha Campus Ministry at the University of Texas. On the evening of the injury, while waiting with her teammates to go to the hospital, she signed autographs for her fans. On each piece of paper she wrote, "Honor Him Always, John 3:16."

While recovering from surgery, she received 200 to 300 letters from fans and a tape made by a KLBJ-AM talk show host, which contained an hour's worth of get well messages called in by listeners. According to the host, Paul Pryor, about 80 percent of the callers mentioned Davis' Christian faith and offered encouragement to her that faith would pull her through the difficult times ahead.

She attributes her speedy recovery to her faith in God. "I told people that I really believed God was going to heal me and they would say, 'you're thinking positive,' or 'you have a good attitude,'" said Clarissa. But the skeptics are more apt to listen to Davis now that she is heading for the Olympics.

Davis said she believes she has a good chance to be on the 1988 Olympic team since she has played with the team the past three summers. Coach Conradt agreed, saying, "She'll give it her best effort."

"The next two months will be the most intense," said Davis, "as I'll do things I'm not supposed to be doing. I have to work harder to discipline myself. Its not going to be as easy."

Despite the popularity and accolades from winning every award that a college basketball player could win, including two gold medals, Davis considers her trust to be in God and not her athletic ability. A junior in Broadcast Journalism, she wants to go into full-time Christian ministry after she graduates.

Davis sees basketball as an avenue for her to share the gospel with fellow players and fans. She has even been able to share her faith with President Reagan. While at the White House for a special Women's Day in Sports event, Davis said she wanted to encourage him: "He was just standing around, and I went over to him and said, 'You really have a hard job and I want to let you know that I'm praying for you and standing with you.' He almost cried," she said.

Most Lady Longhorn fans were disappointed and upset by Davis' devastating injury in December, and it was most assuredly a painful experience for this All American athlete. But Clarissa Davis has pulled the ultimate rebound - and thousands of people are now watching how she is going to play during these next few months before the 1988 Olympic Games. If Clarissa Davis keeps up her current record, you can expect a miracle.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Roller Derby Teen

Testimony of Julie Helliwell

1/89

At 16-years-old, Julie Helliwell was somewhat of a legend at Schurr High School in Montebello, California, a suburb of Los Angeles. She was the only teenage roller skater on the renowned Los Angeles Thunderbirds roller derby team. Notes from her fans, and requests for autographs after an evening session of bruises and bumps, were some of the highlights Julie remembers during her skating days.

Not just another "sweet sixteen teeny-bopper," according to her high school paper, Julie was someone who stood out from the crowd. However, a year later the State Labor Board discovered she was "under age, working in a hazardous occupation." Without the rigorous training schedule of roller games and glamor to occupy her time, Julie said she began to dive into the L.A. punk scene.

"One morning in 1981 I went to see Atila at Genesis Hair Company on Melrose Avenue in Hollywood," she related. "As I slid into his chair I said, 'Do whatever you want.' Within hours my hair was a half-inch long, cut into stripes, each dyed a different color. I was ecstatic. Surely this marked the end of boredom. Surely now my independence from the status quo was displayed for all to see."

When her mother saw the striped, dyed hair, Julie said she gasped. "She thought it was just a passing phase, and she was relieved that I had been removed from the Los Angeles Thunderbirds." With a new tattoo and nose ring, Julie hit the L.A. punk club circuit and became totally immersed in the new culture, the new music, and the new friends. However, when rioting erupted at some of the biggest punk concerts, Julie says she remembers "wondering what I was doing there in the midst of all the police brutality."

After six years of parties, heavy drinking, and punk morality, Julie said she became bored with the gigs and burnt out on all the parties. "I wanted to get out of the scene, but I didn't know where to go from there. Now, six years later, all of my friends were punks as well, and I just wasn't interested in leaving them to venture into something else that would probably go stale in a matter of time anyway."

With the growing dissatisfaction, Julie explained that she had lost hope of finding fulfillment in any kind of relationships. She became apathetic about her future. "I'd lost the expectancy that makes life exciting. Soon I was in despair thinking, 'What's the use of living? What good is there?'"

As she pondered suicide, she also began to think about God. "I'd heard that He was a good God - a loving Father - that knew me and was concerned about me. Supposedly He even knew how many hairs were on my head, however short or colored! I'd heard He'd created me with a plan and a purpose in mind."

Since the world hadn't offered much of a plan, and I'd heard that committing suicide meant going straight to hell, there was only one truth I knew: I desperately needed God." She began praying and asking God to reveal Himself to her. "I prayed that He would place me in a church where people really loved Him and weren't playing some kind of a religious game."

Two weeks later Julie was invited to a Bible study at the Maranatha Christian Church of West Los Angeles, near the UCLA campus. "When the invitation was given to accept Jesus Christ as my personal savior, I stood up and went forward ... 'This is it,' I told God, 'there is no turning back!' Undaunted by the nose ring and the knife in my pocket, they prayed for me."

Now Julie says God has restored her hope for the future. "He's given me an exciting vision to share the hope of the Good News, and I'd like to go to Ireland to see churches started on the campuses there. His plans for us are far greater than anything we could dream up for ourselves, and he delights in revealing those plans to those who are willing to pay the price and live for Him."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Superbowl Surprise 1988!

3/88

SAN DIEGO, CA (FR) - The 1988 Superbowl brought a few surprises to the NFL world, and the unprecedented Washington Redskins victory over the Denver Broncos was just one of them. The fact that the first joint pre-game chapel service occurred during the Superbowl festivities was also big news.

Before the game, the Broncos and the Redskins met together for the sole purpose of prayer and spiritual inspiration. About 2,500 people gathered in a San Diego hotel to hear popular Christian radio personality Chuck Swindoll. Redskins cornerback Darrel Green, an outspoken Christian, also gave his testimony. As a result, 15 people gave their lives to Jesus Christ. The Redskins also had their own chapel services the night before the game, in which fifty friends and family members attended.

"We were praying about the Superbowl all year," said Darrel Green during his talk, "and felt that God really honored us." After the Superbowl victory, Green also played two quarters in the Pro Bowl game in Honolulu, Hawaii.

The day after the Superbowl win, Redskins Coach Joe Gibbs gave thanks to God for the phenomenal 42-10 win. "The ballplayers believed they were a team of destiny because they honored God this year," said Brett Fuller, regional director of Champions for Christ - a ministry to athletes sponsored by Maranatha Campus Ministries. Fuller conducted a Bible study with several of the Redskins during the last season, which he said was "unprecedented in NFL circles."

"For the last two seasons the Redskins had been playing minimal," said Fuller, "but they have emerged to win the Superbowl." He added that the men who prayed with him during the season felt that God was going to honor the team in a special way.

It was Darrel Green's second time to play in the Superbowl. "I just went in and played hard." During his first Superbowl attempt, the Redskins were defeated. "I had just come from college and it happened so fast," he related. Since that loss, however, he says he learned to lose and still "be in peace." But Green was definitely enthusiastic about the recent victory over the Broncos.

Green played a strategic role in taking the Redskins to the Superbowl game in San Diego this year - and he paid a high price for his efforts. During the play-offs, he jumped over his opponent and ran to make a touchdown, in spite of the fact that he was suffering from a painful rib injury. As a result of the sacrificial play, the Redskins won the game and were on their way to the NFL championship. "Some people may have thought I was a nut for making that play," Green laughed. But looking back now, its obvious that it was worth it all.

Green has now hit his fifth year landmark with the Redskins. "I wouldn't trade my five years here for anything," he admitted. "These coaches, these people have built a lot of character in my life." When Green came to the Redskins, he was considered small by NFL standards. However, his skill at covering Chicago speedster Gault and Minnesota's Anthony Carter reaffirmed his standing as one of NFL's better cornerbacks.

Despite his NFL celebrity status, Green makes time to talk to people and has a desire to emulate the characteristics of Jesus Christ. "You wouldn't think Darrel plays ball at all," said Green's wife Jewell in the USA Today interview. "We're a very spiritual family and everything revolves around that." When the Redskins flew to Honolulu for the Pro-Bowl, the local newspaper's society column reported on the activities of players who were carousing among partiers in Waikiki. At that same time, Green was preaching to students at the University of Hawaii about his faith in Jesus Christ.

Although he was dubbed 'MX Missile' and '10 Speed' as a rookie because of his early prominence - due to his tackling of fast players such as Eric Dickerson and Tony Dorsett - Green insists on giving glory to God for his NFL achievements.

Green insists on giving glory to God for his hurdle over a six-foot-three-inch tackler, for his 52-yard punt return against Chicago, and for his capture of the NFL "Fastest Man" title in 1986 - despite a 105 degree temperature and a virus. "It was a totally spiritual experience, " Green told USA Today. "If God is for you, who can be against you?"

Before playing professional football, 170-pound, five-foot-eight-inch Green was fighting off attempts to turn him into a track star. Eventually he ran and won Division II national titles in the 100 and 200 meters as a junior at Texas A & I. His time was second in the nation to Carl Lewis. Green also ran the 100 in 10.08 seconds, the 40 in 4.2 seconds, and covered 60 yards in 6.12 seconds.

Green graduated from Houston Jones High School weighing 120 pounds. "My mother, bless her heart, did not want me to play football," he told USA Today. "My father said I could be the best player out there. But he was concerned about my size."

After professional football, when most players go back into the closet of obscurity holding onto memories of NFL victories, Green's confidence is in God's guidance. "If you're sincere, it takes no genius to see what God is doing," he said. Green told USA Today that the most admired man in his life was his pastor, Brett Fuller. His reason for admiring Fuller, he says, is because Fuller is "a good example of a godly man."

We became friends three years ago," said Fuller. "I prayed with him at 6 a.m. in the morning once a week, and had a Bible study with him." Green said when Fuller prayed with him, "it showed me that he was willing to lay down his life for me. I'm following someone who is following something that is eternal."

Green's aspiration after playing professional football is to go into the ministry. "I'm in a position where I can touch a lot of hearts, reach a lot of people. I'm a key," Green said in a USA Today interview before the Superbowl. "And because of all I've been given, as much as I've been blessed, I have to open a big door."

Green said that before he met Fuller, he tried his best to be a Christian but was doing it in his own strength. "I was a great guy, but I was also a great phony. Now I'm walking out my commitment to Jesus Christ." Today, Darrel Green hopes to demonstrate the reason for that commitment to the millions of people who are watching professional football.

Sidebar Article on Chandler Gailey

DENVER, CO (FR) - The 'male athlete' mindset, in which a man believes he can fight any opponent by 'toughing it out' and fighting harder, is a myth, says Denver Broncos Assistant Coach Chandler Gailey.

After serving as assistant coach for the Air Force Academy for two years, and two years at the University of Florida, Gailey said he realized that he was never going to solve all his problems and make all his goals. "I was just trying to do too much by myself," he said. "You're not going to beat Satan by yourself. The only way to have victory is with Jesus." In 1980, he dedicated his life to Christ.

Since that significant year, he coached Troy State University in Alabama, and then made the move to the Denver Broncos. The most important thing in successful sportsmanship, he believes, is commitment. And his primary example of commitment is Jesus Christ. "He was totally committed. He didn't just go halfway to the cross. In football we function week to week as far as emotions go. If we win, we are heroes; if we lose, we're hated," Gailey said. "But I've learned that God is always in control."

After dedicating his life to Jesus Christ, he said he experiences more strength and peace in the face of adversity and problems. "I have more strength to face problems, adversity, and the things that happen in day-to-day life. I'm better able to deal with rude people, people who are trying to con you."

I have a peace I didn't have before, and nothing upsets me like it used to. I don't hate like I used to. I don't envy like I used to. It is amazing how content I am with what God has given - both blessings and burdens ... When the stock market fell, it wasn't the end of the world."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Suzanne Eagye at U. Hawaii

6/88

HONOLULU, HI (FR) - She has a 4.0 grade point average, takes 18 credits, works part-time at a TV station, and speaks at high schools and churches throughout Hawaii. But despite the heavy load, University of Hawaii volleyball player Suzanne Eagye was able to pick up one of the most prestigious honors in collegiate sports - the Broderick Award - which goes to the top female athlete in the nation in each represented sport.

Eagye was also one of the key players that brought her team its first national title at the "Final Four" NCAA Championship in Indianapolis in December. Volleyball Monthly dubbed her as one of Hawaii's legendary athletes.

Every university in the country nominates a woman athlete in 12 different intercollegiate sports, and a ballot of the nominees is sent to every women's athletic director in the nation. Female athletes are selected on the basis of academic excellence, sportsmanship and extra-curricular activities. Eagye was the second female athlete at UH to win the award; her predecessor was former volleyball star Dietre Collins, who is now heading up the 1988 Olympic team.

Eagye commented about her expectations to win: "I was walking down the hall at school a few days before I found out I won it, and I saw a poster with the 1987 winners. I thought, 'it would be so neat to win an award like that.'"

When she found that she won the Broderick Award, her teammates and coaches gave her a standing ovation at the Spring Athletic Banquet in April. "I was stunned and felt like it all happened because of God's favor ... I couldn't take the credit for myself," she said.

"The award has given me a lot of exposure. I'm doing a lot of speaking at high schools," she added. What does she speak on? It isn't the dynamics of volleyball playing. Instead, she eagerly shares about an experience that changed her life - her relationship with Jesus Christ.

Fellow teammates are very aware of Eagye's devotion to Christ. Honolulu's daily newspaper, the Star-Bulletin, recently published her testimony on the sports page. Entitled, "It wasn't easy but I made it," the story chronicled her faith in God and His influence upon her academics and athletic development.

"How am I going to survive this semester? With 16 credits on my pink slip and a possible title on the line, I was faced with the challenge of coming up a winner in two arenas: on the court and in the classroom," Eagye wrote in the daily paper.

"When people ask me what is it that keeps me going, I think, 'Is it pride?' (Because although I dislike homework, I loath the label 'dumb jock' even more!) Is it determination? (Because I always strive to finish what I begin). Or is it faith? (Because I know that God will provide a way!) Of the three, the latter is my driving force.

"The stress and pressure last semester would have at one time put me '6 feet under.' (Or should I say 6'3" under?) But now, with my faith placed in God and not my own abilities, and with the support of my church, family, and friends behind me, I don't doubt I will survive!"

Eagye concludes by saying: "My two highest points of last semester were one, finishing my last final exam (at last), and two, blocking the final point of the championship game. It was at these points I thought, 'Yes, it wasn't easy, but I made it, and it was worth it.' And then I added, 'Thanks God.'"

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

William & Mary's Harry Mehre

WILLIAMSBURG, VA (FR) - Considered one of the most feared receivers in Division I-AA by The Sporting News, Harry Mehre is making his mark on collegiate football in an "unassuming manner." He's a fast runner whose style is different from what people are used to because he appears to not be running hard when he's actually blasting across the field at 4.5 seconds per 40 yards.

William & Mary's arch rival, James Madison University Coach Joe Purzycki, says 6-foot, 180-pound Mehre requires one and one half men on him from the opposition. "Mehre's presence is enough," he said.

Despite the possibility of playing pro after finishing up his senior year with a big bang, Mehre says the one thing he wants people to say about him is: "There is a man who loves God." Mehre became a Christian last January after hearing evangelist Rice Brooks speak on his campus.

"From a very young age, I had an awareness of God and I knew right from wrong," Mehre said. "I come from a stable loving family background and have had excellent training, discipline and upbringing. Although I recognized Jesus as my saviour, I had never made Him my Lord.

"Basically, I tried to live a good life. I thought moderation was the key. As long as I didn't do anything to an excess, I would be okay," he explained. "Yet a scripture kept coming to mind: 'I know your deeds, that you are neither cold nor hot; I would that you were cold or hot. So because you are lukewarm, and neither hot nor cold, I will spit you out of My mouth.'"

Mehre says he realized that living a good, upright, moral life wasn't enough. "I wasn't okay with God. I thought, 'Maybe He is requiring more of my life, perhaps all of my life.'" While driving home to Georgia from Virginia during Christmas break, he began listening to tapes that Rice Brooks had given to him. "I began to reflect on how many chances God had given me to repent.

"I thought about the awful predicament I would be in if He stopped calling me to serve Him. I began to count the cost of serving God. I realized that only good could come from such a decision. I could see that the decisions I had made up to this point had only been leading me to evil and not good.

"So even though I knew it would be tough to return to school in January as a Christian, I knew it was the right thing to do. God was gracious to me because when I returned to school, one of my closest friends had decided to become a Christian as well."

Mehre said his whole life had changed. "My eyes had been opened to just how much darkness I was engulfed in. I am so thankful that God showed me the truth. I want to live wholeheartedly for Him and make Him known to others."

In the close of his college football career, Mehre is not anxious about where he is going to be after graduation. Although he's been looked at by NFL scouts, he plans to go out with a big bang, even if they don't call him. "I'd really like to try it," he said. "But I'm not going to be devastated if I find it is not God's choice for my life."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(758ebdf4629c903da74c2e079717ae32_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(fe3aebe81acea8d45108cd2768939da7_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

U. Texas' Wimbish Picked for Olympic Trials

5/88

AUSTIN, TX (FR) - Yulonda Wimbish, the quiet, 22-year-old guard for the University of Texas Lady Longhorns basketball team, has just picked up the "Most Outstanding Player of the Year of the Southwest Conference" award and has been invited to the 1988 Olympic Trials. Wimbish exuberantly said, "All of a sudden I have these leadership qualities and more confidence in myself."

Wimbish won both of these honors for the first time in her collegiate basketball career. "Winning the award and making the tournament team was far from my mind," she said. "I wasn't focusing on getting it, it just happened. The Lord enabled me to play as well as I did."

In 1987 she played on the USA Select Team in Korea for the summer pre-trials and the team took second place. Her first international basketball game was at Colorado Springs during her sophomore year where she won a gold medal.

A 5th-year speech major, Wimbish became a Christian several months after her roommate, fellow Lady Longhorn Clarissa Davis. Wimbish admits that she was "just a religious person" before she had a personal encounter with Jesus Christ that radically changed her life.

The biggest change she says since she became a Christian is that she now has a "new boldness to talk about God." After the games, the players speak to their fans in a forum called "Fastbreak." Wimbish has taken the forum as an opportunity to share the gospel.

Besides this new boldness, Wimbish also says she has "realized that God is real" and that following Him does not entail adherence to traditional religious ceremonies. "Christianity is not dead religion," she explains. "It's a relationship with the living God."

She sees the Olympic Trials as a door to share the Gospel with top athletes from different parts of the nation. "I know I'm going over there for a purpose, and if I don't make the team, but someone becomes a Christian, then I've been successful."

Although it is unclear what she is going to do after graduation in July, she says, "Whatever I do, I'm going to preach the Word."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Tenth Anniversary!

Year by Year

1990 - Beginnings - Washington For Jesus
1981 - The Principle Approach
1982 - Understanding Our Mandate For Dominion
1982 - Reaching the World at our Doorstep
1983 - The Decade for ASIA!
1984 - Reagan: "America is Hungry for a Spiritual Revival"
1986 - Beginning of "On Campus" edition
1988 - Randall Terry - A 20th Century Hero
1988 - A New Biblical Generation
1988 - The Year That Shook The World!
1989 - Inside China's Underground
1989 - The Coming Transformation of the USSR
1989 - Behind The Freedom Revolution
1990 - Breaking Up the Eastern Bloc
1990 - Decade of A New Generation
1991 - In the Aftermath of War
1991 - The Fallen Star of Islam

April 1991 - Russian Forerunner Begins!

A Note on this Special Tenth Anniversary Issue
The Forerunner to begin in Soviet Union
Russian language Forerunner
A Walk Through Red Square
Called to Soviet Asia
CYI Conference Held in Moscow

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Back to The Forerunner!

Beginnings - Washington For Jesus

1980 - It is hard to imagine that sixteen years have passed since the first Washington For Jesus. On that day, Iran still held Americans hostage in the U.S. Embassy in Tehran. We were still locked in a Cold War with a growing Soviet nuclear arsenal. America's sense of patriotism was at a low ebb. Memories of Vietnam and Watergate lingered in the minds disillusioned citizens and the outlook for the coming decade was not generally optimistic.

But almost a million Christians gathered to pray on the Mall in Washington D.C. Washington For Jesus was a cry of repentance from the American church about the need of our nation to turn back to God. Many of the speakers at this prayer rally guessed that as a nation we were in a race between spiritual revival and judgment from God.

But a few carried a different message. God was not done with us as a nation. Although the problem of evil was great and spirituality seemed to be at a low point, God desired to turn us around, to restore America to greatness and give us back our respect both at home and abroad. We were not headed for a slow demise or a sudden nuclear holocaust, but for a glorious future in which the light of God's truth would shine through us once again as a part of a global awakening in which the nations of the world would turn to God.

There needed to be some way of heralding this truth. Since only a few small voices could be heard echoing this hope. God obviously used Washington For Jesus 1980 to sow the seeds of heroic actions and thoughts into the minds and hearts of America's young people. Many prophecies were given saying that a great spiritual awakening that would occur. Looking back on the past sixteen years it is safe to say that some progress has been made. Of course, the work is not over yet and we have not seen the Awakening we looked for, but we can celebrate many victories for the Kingdom of God as we look back.

While it is impossible to say exactly how much of an impact Washington For Jesus 1980 had on the trend toward patriotism and spiritual awakening in our nation, it is apparent that God spoke clearly on that day proclaiming the great destiny our nation possesses in His divine purposes.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

The Principle Approach:

An Intriguing Method of Education from America's Past
By Rosalie Slater

November 1981 - "My people are destroyed for a lack of knowledge" (Hosea 4:6).

There is a revival bubbling up in America - a healing in our land. It is a revival of America's Christian history and a desire to learn those Biblical principles which identify America as a Christian nation with a Christian form of government.

But, in order to harvest this revival - to bring forth real fruit for the Lord - we must restore not only America's Christian history but also the Christian philosophy of education - the method of our founding fathers and mothers - which is known as the Principle Approach.

The Principle Approach to American Christian history developed as the chain of Christianity moved westward in a liberating mission, internal and external. The Biblical principles of government that appeared with the Pilgrims in America established the world's first Christian republic and enabled us to extend the gospel into all fields and to all nations.

Without the knowledge of America's Christian history, American Christians have retreated from their leadership in all fields - education, economics, government, the arts, and sciences. Without a conviction of the hand of God in our history we have allowed unrighteous men to direct the course of our nation for many, many years. It is vital, therefore, that Christians once again accept their responsibility for America: "that in all things He might have the preeminence" (Colossians 1:18). We must begin by restoring the Principle Approach to America's Christian history in our homes, churches and schools.

The Seven Principles

The Principle Approach begins with the study of those unique Biblical principles which identify America as a Christian nation. These are seven principles which are essential to the government of the individual and of the nation. What follows is a brief summary of each principle.

1. God's Principle of Individuality

The history of liberty begins with the uniqueness of individuals, continents, and nations on the chain of Christianity moving westward.

2. The Christian Principle of Self-Government

The government of our nation begins with the Christian self-government of individuals, families, churches.

3. America's Heritage of Christian Character

The Christian heritage of America began with the Pilgrims as they extended Biblical principles into church government, their relations with the Indians, and into economics.

4. Conscience as the Most Sacred of all Property

Because man is made for God's purpose, we are God's property. Our individual God-directed productivity and property is protected by America's Constitution.

5. The Christian Form of Government

Our founding fathers searched the Scriptures for our principles of government - representation, the separation of powers, our dual form of government. Such governmental action begins with INDIVIDUAL action. Pastors during that time were preachers of Biblical GOVERNMENT.

6. How the Seed of Local Self-Government is Planted

Samuel Adams, the father of the American Revolution, set the example of how we can educate a people in Christian Constitutional principles so that they might be self-governing. This principle is at the heart of American government. It needs to be restored first at home.

7. The Christian Principle of American Political Union

Despite the diversity of the thirteen colonies, there was a "UNITY OF THE SPIRIT" for they were united in Biblical principles of government.

How can we restore these principles to America?

The Principle Approach is the Scriptural alternative to progressive education. It can restore us to the literacy level of our founding fathers and mothers who gave this nation under God.

Rus Walton has developed a superior study course which can help introduce the Principle Approach. Fundamentals for American Christians is a Bible-based, teaching course with emphasis upon self- and civil-government and the Kingship of Jesus Christ.

(Rus Walton's program is available from the Plymouth Rock Foundation, The Fisk Mill, Box 577, Marlborough, NH 03455-9989.)

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(6bb0e4f14c4133b37d2887cb37e67ddd_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(47734e4656765d20df4fdbd5b7aff048_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Understanding Our Mandate For Dominion

By Walter Walker

June 1982 - The first words God spoke to man after creation were as follows: "Be fruitful and multiply and fill the earth and subdue it and rule over the fish of the sea and over the birds of the sky and over every living thing that moves on the earth" (Genesis 1:28).

Adam was thus given the commission to establish dominion over the whole earth. By implication we understand that the world was not created in such a way that Adam's dominion was achieved automatically, but rather there was a task for him to accomplish. Along with this dominion mandate, God established a covenant with Adam. Adam was given dominion and the responsibility to obey God and particularly to not eat of the fruit of one tree.

After the covenant was broken and the privilege of dominion lost, the situation in the earth degenerated until God had to destroy the population of the earth through the great flood. Noah and his family emerged as the only survivors. Because of their obedience, God established a covenant with them never again to destroy the earth by a flood (Genesis 8:20-22;9:8-17). God also spoke to Noah and gave him the mandate to be fruitful , to multiply and fill the earth (Genesis 9:17).

In the above verses where this mandate is repeated, there is the obvious omission of two words: subdue and rule. Man, as a result of the Fall, had then lost not only the privilege of dominion, but also the ability.

It was only as Jesus was made head over all rule and authority that He could reissue the dominion mandate to the Church. One of the last things Jesus said to those whom He had trained to lead the Church was: "All authority has been given to Me in heaven and on earth. Go therefore and make disciples of all nations - teaching them to observe all that I have commanded you, for lo I am with you always, even to the end of the ages" (Matthew 18:18-20).

The promised Holy Spirit was poured out forty days later on the Day of Pentecost. The Church was thus born in glorious fashion with people from every corner of the known world. Through the Church's missionary endeavors the whole Mediterranean region and the Roman Empire heard the gospel and the seeds of revival were planted in Europe.

Through the Dark Ages, the world was dominated by the Antichrist religious system until the light of the gospel began to break forth in Europe. The fullest expression of the concept of dominion was the American experiment. There, Separatists and Puritans who fled for freedom of religious expression felt that through God's providence they had a prophetic destiny to usher in the dominion of Christ on earth.

Their vision was to see the Bible as the root and foundation of every facet of life, including all traditions, minds, everything had to give glory to God. For almost two hundred years, culture , society, education, and government were founded upon principles reasoned from the scriptures.

A review of the early documents will show that they had a strong sense of covenant with God and providential destiny to establish the kingdom of God on earth as it is in heaven. As America was brought under the dominion of Jesus Christ, from there they would "make disciples of the nations."

Today many Christians hold to one of two views:

1. "Since Jesus could come back any day, why try to change society?" This "blocked" view reminds us of the tower of Babel where men were looking into the heavens, thus rejecting God's mandate.
2. Many liberal thinkers have tried to change society through man's ideas (humanism). Therefore they have rejected God's Word as the basis of all social change.

If neither of these two views is the mandate given to God's people, then what is our vision to be? God's word simply says: BE FRUITFUL, MULTIPLY, FILL THE EARTH, RULE IT, SUBDUE IT! In other words, make disciples of all the nations, and teach them to obey everything that the Lord has commanded.

Immediately some will say, "But how can it be done? The task seems overwhelming." The answer is again simple ... All authority has been given to Jesus Christ and He is in us and will be with us until the end of the age!

It has been said that if you aim at nothing you will surely hit it. But if you set your heart upon the greatest challenge of all times and commit yourself to meet that challenge no matter what the cost, then you find yourself in the center of God's greatest plan. You can become the channel of His power and authority in the earth!

Certainly God has looked for a generation that will give their hearts and minds totally to Him and accept His dominion mandate. Will you be a part of that generation?

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Reaching the World at our Doorstep

Jan./February 1982 - How would you like to be used of God to change an entire nation?

Few Americans realize it ... But today in the United States, there are over 7 million non-immigrant, non-tourist foreigners and 400,000 international students attending our colleges and universities.

If we believe that God is sovereign and that He works in the affairs of nations, we have to realize that He brought these foreign visitors to America for a reason. We need to understand that the missionary vision is straight from the heart of God! We literally have the whole world sitting on our doorstep.

In Acts chapter 8, we find Philip the evangelist preaching to an Ethiopian visitor, who was quite influential in the royal court of his country. Philip led him to the Lord, and the new believer went back to transform his own nation.

Imagine the possibilities! Because Philip was simply obedient to relate the gospel to the Ethiopian eunuch, all of Africa was introduced to the message of Jesus. The same can happen today when you become a friend to an international student and lead him to Christ! Your obedience to the Spirit of God can affect the destiny of a whole nation or even an entire continent!

Right now, one fourth to one half of the future leaders of the world are on American campuses. The greatest potential for world evangelism lies in the international students studying in America. God has truly brought the whole world to our doorstep. This is God's most effective strategy for world evangelism.

There are many nations of the world which either prohibit or restrict missionary activity. In American universities, however, there are many Muslim, Chinese, and Southeast Asian students, whose governments are sponsoring their academic endeavors.

These students are already familiar with the people, language and customs of their own country. These international students are the future leaders of their societies, often comprising the top five percent of their nation - often, most people in these nations have never even heard of Jesus Christ. If these students become Christians while studying here in America and are trained in God's Word, they can go back and begin a spiritual awakening in their own nation - from within!

The foreign students on your campus are often lonely and are used to living around people in their own nation who show them great respect. Now, living in America, they are treated like another face in the crowd. Most international students come to this country with a real desire to have an American friend. They are looking for people who have genuine love and concern for them.

How will you respond? Will you make a friend of an international student? Your love and friendship may one day help to change the world.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(6a9b39b98eb945faa14c645ec99e4eaa_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(9c2e8d1b5bd77cb5c9f83b7a9cff79fd_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

The 1980s: Decade for ASIA!

By Loren Cunningham

January/February 1983 - The 1980s are truly going to be a decade of destiny. Besides being a time when more people will be saved than at any other period in history, this decade will be one that focuses on the movement of the Holy Spirit in Asia.

Within a three-thousand mile radius of the city of Hong Kong, you will surprisingly find 63% of the world's total population. One-half of these people are under the age of 15 ... and only 1% of them know Jesus Christ. In Hong Kong, there are single buildings which house more than 40,000 people! That is more people than are in some of the smaller nations!

Is it any wonder that God's purposes will be focused on this part of the globe in the next few years? There are approximately 7000 islands in the Pacific Ocean - 2000 populated islands in Indonesia alone! There are 25,000 different languages spoken on these islands, and 19,000 of these still have no Bible ... There are whole island nations that have never heard the gospel.

Yet very recently a significant move of God's Spirit has begun in Asia - to the amazement of the world. Dr. Yongi Cho started a church in Seoul, South Korea, only a few years ago. In 1977 he had 35,000 members ... and today it has grown to 250,000. He is expecting half a million by 1984! Korea is a nation turning from paganism to Christianity in our generation - right before our eyes!

In 1973, Billy Graham held a crusade in Korea and one million people came to hear him. It was hard to believe that such an event could take place in Asia. Three million people later gathered in Seoul to hear Bill Bright of Campus Crusade speak! The people of Asia obviously are hungry for the gospel!

The Westward Move of the Gospel

A close look at the move of the Holy Spirit in the book of Acts will give us some very important clues as to how God desires to move in our day. Though Jesus did tell His disciples to go into all the earth, the Holy Spirit focuses our attention on the apostolic activity of Paul and his westward journey.

At one point in Paul's journey, we are told that he and his companions were "forbidden by the Holy Spirit to speak the word in Asia" (Acts 16:6). Instead, Paul had a vision of a Macedonian man, calling him to come to that region and preach. Paul went west, and continued onward to his ultimate destination - Rome.

That decision to go west rather than east was a pivotal point in history, and a strategic move directed by the Holy Spirit to accomplish the purposes of God.

The gospel spread after this time to all of Europe and remained there during the Dark Ages. But it was not long before a young man whose name means "Christ-bearer" - Christopher Columbus - had a special mission to sail west. This man, who loved the Lord and served Him faithfully in his early years, said this about his voyage:

"It was the Lord who put it into my mind (I could feel His hand upon me) to sail from here to the Indies. There was no question that the inspiration was from the Holy Spirit, because He comforted me with rays of marvelous inspiration from the Holy Scriptures."1 Columbus actually saw his journey as a fulfillment of Isaiah chapter 49.

Over a hundred years later, after America had been discovered, a tiny band of devoted Christians from England came to this new land with a sense of divine purpose and destiny. The Pilgrim's purpose for coming to America, as stated in the Mayflower Compact, was for the glory of God and the advancement of the Christian faith. They, too, sensed that God had a very providential reason for sending them on their westward journey.

What lies beyond America in the westward move of the gospel? Asia! What an exciting time to be alive! Perhaps God has commissioned you to go and gather in this great end-time harvest in the world's most populous region.

1 David Manuel and Peter Marshall, Jr., The Light and the Glory, (Old Tappan, NJ, Fleming Revell & Co.) 1977.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

"America is Hungry for a Spiritual Revival ..."

By Ronald Reagan

An except from President Reagan's address January 30, 1984, at the National Religious Broadcasters Convention in Washington D.C.

I was pleased last year to proclaim 1983 The Year of the Bible. But, you know, a group called the A.C.L.U. severely criticized me for doing that. Well, I wear their indictment like a badge of honor. I believe I stand in pretty good company. Abraham Lincoln called the Bible, "The best gift God has given to man. But for it," he said, "we could not know right from wrong."

Like that image of George Washington kneeling in prayer in snow at Valley Forge, Lincoln described a people who knew it was not enough to depend on their own courage and goodness. They must also look to God their Father and Preserver. And their faith to walk with Him, and trust in His Word, brought them the blessings of comfort, power, and peace that they sought.

The torch of their faith has been passed from generation to generation. "The grass withereth, the flower fadeth, but the word of our God shall stand forever." More and more Americans believe that loving God in their hearts is the ultimate value. My experience in this office I hold has only deepened a belief I've held for many years: within the cover of that single Book are all the answers to all the problems that face us today - if we'd only read and believe.

Let's begin at the beginning. God is the center of our lives: the human family stands at the center of society: and our greatest hope for the future is in the faces of our children. God's most blessed gift to His family is the gift of life. He sent us the Prince of Peace as a babe in a manger. I've said that we must be cautious in claiming God is on our side. I think the real question we must answer is, are we on His side?

Our mission stretches far beyond our borders: God's family knows no borders. In your life, you face daily trials, but millions of believers in other lands face far worse. They are mocked and persecuted for the crime of loving God. To every religious dissident trapped in that cold, cruel existence, we send our love and support. Our message? You are not alone; you are not forgotten; do not lose your faith and hope because someday you, too, will be free.

If the Lord is our light, our strength and our salvation, whom shall we fear? Of whom shall we be afraid? No matter where we live, we have a promise from Jesus that can soothe our sorrows, heal our hearts and drive away our fears. He promised there will never be a dark night that does not end. Our weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning. He promised if our hearts are true, His love will be as sure as sunlight. And, by dying for us, Jesus showed how far our love should be ready to go: all the way.

"For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life ..." Helping each other, believing in Him, we need never be afraid. We will be part of something far more powerful, enduring and good than all the forces here on earth. We will be part of a paradise.

May God keep you always and may you always keep God.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

1986 - Beginning of "On Campus" edition

By Lee Grady

September 1986 - When The Forerunner began in 1981, God directed a few individuals to start a publication which would reach the young people of this generation with the message of the gospel.

The method was calculated: to boldly penetrate the minds and hearts of students with biblical truth by invading the most strategic strongholds of atheistic humanism - the university campuses of America.

The Forerunner was a lonely voice in a vast wilderness of student apathy and pessimism during those first few months, but the news of a growing conservative movement began to flourish by late 1982. By 1983, thirty-five conservative newspapers had been started on major secular campuses. The number more than doubled in an another year. Even at the U.C. Berkeley campus, which has long carried the reputation of being the most liberal of academic institutions in the U.S., students were following that trend: One survey proved that twice as many Berkeley students considered themselves conservative as did those in 1971.

All during this time The Forerunner was addressing issues which were at the center of campus debate. We presented biblical alternatives to Marxism, feminism and welfare statism. We challenged the student audience to re-evaluate the propaganda and liberal bias that they are continuously subjected to in the classroom. We even staged a forum between a creationist and an evolutionist and printed their arguments. We were determined to bring American students face to face with the realities of the Word of God as it applies to modern life and controversial social issues.

Our newspaper has gone out like seed on what was originally dry and rocky soil. But over the past five years God has obviously been watering and plowing the ground to make it fertile for a spiritual harvest. Even the secular news media today is reporting on the increased interest on campus. Religion courses in the major universities are filling up at record rates. The spiritual climate is obviously changing: the stolid pessimism of the 1970s is being replaced by a reawakening to traditional values, to patriotism, and to morality.

But we cannot stop here! The war of ideas on the American campus is far from being over. The devil's advocates - obviously provoked by the new surge of traditional values and spiritual feeling spawned among the students of the 1980s, are even more vehement.

That is why it is imperative that we drive full-force into this battle for the campus with renewed vigor and hard-hitting ammunition. The Forerunner's campus edition is invading the university setting this September. This new edition - with its contemporary, "New Wave" look - is being especially designed to appeal to the collegiate audience. Although it will contain some of the same type of material as the regular edition, our campus paper will have a sharp, evangelistic edge aimed right at the heart of today's student.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(6a9b39b98eb945faa14c645ec99e4eaa_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(9c2e8d1b5bd77cb5c9f83b7a9cff79fd_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Randall Terry - A 20th Century Hero

December 1988 - Three years ago when Randall Terry and his wife, Cindy, were spending 40 hours a week picketing and counseling women outside of abortion clinics, they didn't foresee their pro-life activism growing into a movement which would affect cities and leaders across the nation.

Terry staged the first rescue mission in 1986, at a clinic in Binghamton, New York. The rescuers locked themselves in one of the inner rooms of the abortion mill right after it opened. Police arrived and asked them to leave, but they continued to block the clinic. They spent several days in jail as a result.

Terry's movement has since grown into a national phenomenon. Many believe that Operation Rescue may be the key to reversing the Roe vs. Wade decision on abortion. An outstanding model of modern day heroism, Randall Terry has been willing to defend the truth of God when it has not been popular to do so.

July 5, 1988 - Randall Terry was interviewed by press during National Day of Rescue.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

1988 - A New Biblical Generation

A biblical generation is defined as a forty year time period. If we look at recent American history, it is easy to see where these generations are delineated.

Around 1908, the high point of the Azusa Street Revival, God began to pour out his Spirit in many places in the world. The Pentecostal movement had its beginning in this revival and the Great Welsh Revival had begun a few years earlier. From Eastern Europe to India, Christians shared a common experience of refreshing and a renewal of the gifts of the Holy Spirit being restored to full operation in the Church.

Forty years later, in 1948, the same year that Israel became a nation, Billy Graham began his ministry. The Latter Rain movement, Healing Revival, and Charismatic movement had their roots in events that took place during this year. The apostolic, prophetic and evangelistic ministries were restored in a greater measure for the purpose of equipping Christians for works of service.

Then in 1988, the Spirit was poured out like never before. We have yet to see the full extent of this revival, but it is probable that it will bring global awakening, the dissolution of tyrannical governments and the restructuring of man-made hierarchies in the church. Much of what happened in the news in 1988 and 1989 was miraculous and can only be explained by a sovereign outpouring of the Spirit of God with power.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

1988 - The Year That Shook The World!

May 1988 - In the Soviet Union, China and Cuba, the Christian movement began to push back the tide of communism. What follows are news reports from those countries:

Soviet Union

In the midst of the pomp and fanfare of the 1000th birthday of Christianity in Russia, the younger generation in the Soviet Union is apparently showing a growing interest in spiritual matters. "There has been a religious revival among the young people," said deputy Chief Father Vladimir of the Russian Orthodoxy's main monastic center.

Young Russians are increasingly interested in joining the clergy, according to Time magazine, and they are attending church in unprecedented numbers. For example, at a monastery that reopened as a church after a period of government control, two-fifths of the congregation is in their 20's and 30's.

The growing interest in Christianity among the youth during the state-sanctioned celebration may stem from boredom, disillusionment, and cynicism - which the Soviet government is acknowledging as a problem.

This is most definitely a far cry from the rhetoric of past Soviet regimes, which predicted a total eradication of faith and Christianity by this date. As millions of nationals celebrate the arrival of the Christian gospel in the Soviet Union, and as young people return to the churches in record numbers, it will most likely open the doors for even more lively discussion in the Kremlin about the future of the USSR.

China

A spiritual awakening is taking place in the People's Republic of China which has been attracting the attention of the concerned government for several years. The growth of Christianity in this country is occurring at record rates. Today there are an estimated 50 million believers in China, and at this present rate of growth the number may surpass 100 million in 14 years time.

What does the future hold for China? Although government restrictions are not likely to stop overnight, it is very likely that policies will become more relaxed as government officials become Christians. Reports are already being circulated about officials in all levels of the communist government who are having personal encounters with Jesus Christ.

On one of the most prestigious campuses in the People's Republic of China, Beijing University, students instigated the destruction of a four-story tall statue of revolutionary leader Mao Tse Tung. Destruction of the statue was perceived by university officials as a move to lessen the late leader's influence. A middle aged professor who helped erect the statue in 1967 said, "It's a symbol of an era, and that era is over. Taking it down is only natural."

Cuba

The moral leadership of Cuban Christians is gaining them respect in the eyes of state officials, according to a U.S. missionary leader who visited Cuban churches in January.

"The state is gradually recognizing the positive moral strength of the evangelical church and is showing an openness to the churches' request for standing before governmental agencies," says Gordon Johnson, president of Rio Grande Bible Institute and Language School in Edinburg, Texas.

Johnson, who has made 24 trips to Latin America, says that a change in attitude toward evangelical churches was noted in 1985 when a Brazilian Catholic priest, Frei Betto, interviewed Fidel Castro. "For the first time, Castro spoke of religion not necessarily as the 'opiate of the people,' but as a possible positive force in building a socialist state. This acceptance of 'religion' has lent a certain credence to evangelicals," says Johnson.

Philippines

July/August 1988 - In the Philippines the gospel is changing the lives of huge numbers of people who in turn are changing the course of their nation's history. With all of its poverty, factional political disputes, and problems left over from the Marcos period, the Philippines is a land of hope and opportunity.

A new president in February, 1986, replaced the corruption-ridden dictatorship of Ferdinand Marcos as the result of concentrated days of national prayer. A revitalized military is headed by outspoken Christians who are making their mark in that institution. Pastors who had been uninvolved outside of their pulpits are now in the forefront of exposing the deceptions of communism from the light of Scripture.

The spiritual awakening occurring in the Philippines is incomprehensible to the communists who assume the spiritual dimension of man to be irrelevant. They may never know why their apparatus, so painstakingly built up over the years, faces what could be a steady, and even rapid collapse. The next two years are not likely to be good ones for being a communist in the Philippines, but there is no doubt that they will be a great time for the Christians.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Inside China's Underground

By Jay Rogers

1989 - "The Pro-Democracy Revolution in China: An Eyewitness Shares His Testimony"

September 1989 - After losing his passport during the Beijing Massacre one year ago, a Chinese exchange student returned to Manila last June with an exciting and insightful story to tell.

Kristin Ang was instrumental in planting an underground "house church" on the Xiamen University campus which grew to over 100 believers in less than two years. After seeing many of his fellow students saved, and filled with the Holy Spirit, tensions began to mount at the University. It seems that communist authorities were incensed by Kristin's evangelistic boldness and were beginning to watch him more closely at the time when his passport was cancelled.

Kristin became a Christian two years ago during a missionary outreach in the Philippines. Born and raised in the Philippines, which has millions of indigenous Chinese like Kristin, the young convert became God's perfect missionary to Mainland China. Six months before he gave his life to the Lord, Kristin had already been planning to be an exchange student at Xiamen University in the People's Republic of China.

Shortly thereafter, he met a Christian house church leader who needed help smuggling Bibles into China. Kristin responded to the great need in China for Bibles and Christian literature. He would often take Bibles to leaders of house churches, who would then distribute them to the people.

After one semester as an exchange student, Kristin transferred to Xiamen University feeling that the Lord wanted him to labor there. A chain reaction had begun at his school - through the witness of other new believers, a dorm church had rapidly grown to over 100 people. According to missionaries laboring in China today, Xiamen University is one of several Chinese universities which has been experiencing revival since the infamous massacre last June.

"We saw several people in the PLA (People's Liberation Army) security get saved," Kristin said. "There were also students saved at the University who were Communist party members."

When asked if Christians were behind the pro-democracy movement, Kristin replied, "Some of the older Christians in China think that the call for democracy is a worldly struggle. But this is not true of new Christians. The rally in Xiamen was started by a guy who I led to the Lord and is a very good friend of mine." Kristin said that some of the Christians from the University had gone to Beijing during the week long student demonstration. To this day, he doesn't know what happened to his friends that were in the demonstration - if they were killed, arrested or made it out of the city.

In fact, it was a miracle that Kristin was able to leave the mainland. He had been travelling to Hong Kong every six weeks to smuggle Bibles into the country for the new believers on campus. When the massacre broke out the Chinese government declared martial law and put an end to all travel into the country. Had he been in the mainland, he would have been stuck there indefinitely.

Kristin believes that the Lord has used the massacre to expose Communism. "After this, the Chinese are going to see the truth about Communism. Now more people will come to the realization that they can no longer believe in something that is so evil."

"My vision is to work on a campus. Xiamen University, for instance, is a potpourri; it is a mixture of all the most intelligent people in China. All the future leaders of China are trained there. That is the hope of China. Some of them are Communist Party members; some of them are going to be government officials. I am not discounting the fact that others should also be reached, but the students are China's hope."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!

It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

The Coming Transformation of the USSR

By Jay Rogers

September 1989 - "The Soviet Union is opening up wider and wider to the gospel. Now is the time for Christians in America to take full advantage of the situation."

This description of the current spiritual state of the Soviet Union comes from Jim Gilbert, an American missionary, who has been travelling inside the Iron Curtain for several years. Gilbert believes that the Soviet Union is on the verge of an awakening of unprecedented proportions akin to the Great Welsh Revival at the turn of this century.

The underground Christian church in Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania and the Ukraine is presently experiencing great revival. Soviet states such as Georgia and Armenia are currently in a state of social upheaval. This scenario could ultimately lead to the establishment of freer Soviet states and possibly the emergence of independent, democratic European countries separate from the control of the Kremlin.

"Gorbachev is an intelligent man," says Gilbert. "It is likely that he sees that the communist system will inevitably fail and is in favor of dismantling it while remaining the power broker." Gilbert sees three possible scenarios for the Soviet Union in the next 10 years. The first two are possible outcomes but they are unlikely to happen. According to Gilbert, "The third one is the most likely to occur by the year 2000."

The first possibility is that Soviet leadership could fall back into the hands of a conservative communist like Andropov or Brezhnev. Gilbert says this is unlikely and most political analysts agree that Gorbachev will probably remain in power for many years.

The second possibility is that Gorbachev's reforms will work and that the concept of infusing new life into the old system will be successful. This is Gorbachev's hope - that somehow capitalism can revive the communist economy of the Soviet Union - but Gilbert disagrees. "It is obvious that perestroika has failed. The word means reconstruction - you can't revitalize something that is dead."

The third possibility is a total failure of the communist system and a breakup of the Soviet state into separate self-governing nations. The Ukraine, with a population of almost 50 million people, would be the largest nation in Europe if it is restored to self-rulership. Gilbert believes that this is likely to happen within the next 10 years. Gorbachev, he says, could emerge as a benevolent dictator over the remaining state of Russia and the Siberian states.

Presently, public demonstrations for freedom in the Baltic states, Soviet Georgia, and Armenia are common occurrences. Worker apathy coupled with natural disasters have made the retention of these satellites economically unprofitable. Gilbert believes that the policy of glasnost may be Gorbachev's way of speeding up a process which he sees as coming to an inevitable conclusion. In the meantime, the new openness has paved the way for mass evangelism by American missionaries.

"The situation in the Soviet Union is a lot like what happened when Peter was in jail in the Book of Acts in the New Testament. The other disciples had been praying for Peter to be released. However, when this finally happened they couldn't believe that God had answered their prayers. In the same way, Christians in the United States have been praying for 70 years for freedom to preach the gospel in the Soviet Union. Now that it is happening we are being caught off guard."

Gilbert emphasized that American Christians should be taking bold initiatives, but dispensationalist thinking has gained such a stronghold in American churches that most are unprepared to do anything. "There should be a greater emphasis on victory," Gilbert said. "I believe that Jesus is concerned with seeing an expression of His glory in the Soviet Union before He returns."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

1989 - Behind The Freedom Revolution

by Leilani Corpus

June 1989 - The drama unfolding in the People's Republic of China before the watching world is not only setting the stage for a political revolution ... it is signaling a spiritual awakening of massive proportions. Influenced by a fast-growing Christian revival, as well as by the Christian ideas of Western democracy, Chinese young people are now questioning Marxist ideology - and they are making it clear to their elders that they are willing to die for their beliefs.

Ever since the Cultural Revolution, youth under age 18 have not been allowed to attend an official church, read the Bible, or be baptized. The combination of a lack of spiritual values, discontent with the tenets and ideas of the Communist Party, and increasing openness to Western ideas, is now driving the youth and workers alike to the streets of Beijing to demonstrate for democracy.

A Beijing missionary who was imprisoned for 10 years in a labor camp for his beliefs said recent events in China are an encouraging sign of increasing openness to Christianity. The missionary, who could not disclose his name, helped start several underground "fellowships" on Beijing campuses. Although the pro-democracy movement is not yet inundated by Christians, he said the youth are "opening up their minds." Chinese Christians are supportive of the new movement.

The last few months of protest has been considered one of the most extraordinary events to be witnessed in any Communist country, and "the biggest display of defiance in the 40-year history of Communist China," according to the Washington Post. "This was a major breakthrough in modern Chinese history," said Roderick Macfarquahar, director of Harvard's Fairbank Center for East Asian Research. He said it was the first time since 1949 that a demonstration by society against the state was made successfully in the face of a powerful government.

The recent carnage in Beijing left an estimated 3000 people dead and 12,000 wounded, and plunged the nation into massive upheaval. According to latest reports a key army unit was fighting against another unit.

This type of determination and resolve is apparently at the root of the Chinese student uprising. A Beijing missionary said that the student movement is "definitely beneficial for Christians. Religious activity is under state control, but the police are too busy dealing with political demonstrations to exercise church control." Since the Communists came to power in China, Christianity has grown exponentially. "There are 30 to 50 times more Christians," said one Beijing source. "There are 30 to 50 million Christians, and we're definitely seeing a revival among the underground churches."

What will be the final outcome? It is most likely that within a few more years the repressive communist system in China will be quietly swallowed up by the growing Christian movement. A new generation of young Chinese leaders, motivated by new-found ideas of Christian liberty and individual freedom, will then begin to construct a new society built on Christian principles.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(d3102649f02e825ddb76dc3de0190154_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(4b7a79268f6ba26c1471d4232fffa85a_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Breaking Up the Eastern Bloc

By Jay Rogers

March 1990 - Just a short time ago, few people would have believed that communism would fall so suddenly and drastically without the intervention of U.S. military forces. Yet the Iron Curtain, which for so long seemed to be a permanent fixture, has miraculously begun to dismantle itself. By July, free local or national elections are scheduled to be held by all six of the Soviet Union's Warsaw Pact allies. A return to Stalinist dictatorships is unlikely. As a result of a waning Soviet threat, the United States is expected to make swift cuts in the military force stationed in Europe.

Most people are yet unaware of the role of the Christian Church in bringing change to the Eastern Bloc. A yearning for religious freedom, a right taken for granted in the West, has been at the heart of the cry for freedom in these nations for many years. Christian dissidents have been the most outspoken opponents of communism in Eastern Europe and some are now being exalted as leaders in newly liberated nations.

Our national press has not reported the role of the Eastern European Church in toppling communist governments; we have missed one of the most exciting stories of the past decade. In every nation, Christians have performed acts of heroism and, in some instances, have directly brought the downfall of communist governments. As the rushing wind of the Holy Spirit has been sweeping through Europe, God's servants have been used mightily to vindicate the oppressed people of the Communist Bloc.

Romania holds the best example a revolution that was sparked through the direct influence of the Church. According to a Time magazine report, "A Revolution's Unlikely Spark" (Jan. 1, 1990), the Rev. Laszlo Tokes, of the Reformed Church, drew the wrath of the communist authorities after his repeated denunciations of Ceausescu's regime.

In November, Tokes was beaten and stabbed by government thugs, yet refused to give into church officials who ordered him to transfer to a less volatile part of Romania. When a court order was obtained for his conviction, hundreds of supporters formed a human chain around Toke's building to protect him.

This triggered the crackdown that helped to inspire the nationwide demonstrations that toppled Ceausescu. Tokes, a once obscure minister, has joined the ranks of Eastern Europe's foremost fighters for freedom.

Many remaining communist governments are presently viewing the growing democracy movement with shock and amazement. China's Li Peng regime has been reportedly stunned by the news of the Romanian dictator Ceausescu's trial and execution. The similarity between Ceausescu's brutal use of force against the Romanian people and the Chinese government's massacre of students in Tiananmen Square ends only with the demise of the Romanian leader. Political analysts speculate that the Chinese government has only one or two years before a fall from power occurs.

Other nations, long dedicated to the ideals of communism, are seemingly destined to be shaken by the emergence of pro-democracy forces. Other European nations, long dominated by the Soviet Union such as the Ukraine, Moldavia, Yugoslavia, and Albania have also experienced a movement toward democratic reforms. In addition to these European nations, observers of world politics are looking to the nations of Vietnam, North Korea, Cuba, Nicaragua and Libya to experience political transformations in the early 1990s.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

The 1990s:

Decade of a New Generation

By Jay Rogers

September 1990 - As we enter the 1990s, a new generation is appearing on the horizon - and the whole world is taking notice.

* A Newsweek Special Edition declares: "The New Teens" and attempts to answer these questions: "What makes them different? Who are their heroes? What problems do they face?"

* An Ebony magazine cover heralds: "The New Generation of the '90s" and describes a generation comprised of individuals with different ideas, who are "as equally bouyed by promising opportunities as they are weighted down with problems."

* A Time magazine cover proclaims "Twenty-Something" and examines a generation with unique culture, with their own set of problems, possibilities, situations and circumstances.

What is it that makes this generation so distinct?

The most talked about, most written about generation of our time, which is described loosely as the "under 25 generation," has been raised in a new and often bewildering world and has attitudes and ideas which are radically different from those who preceded them.

The "tribal" cultures of the late 60s and early 70s gave way to the self-gratifying "me-generation" of the late 70s and 80s, with the flower children trading in their youthful idealism of peace and love for a more materialistic "yuppie" lifestyle.

And now a new generation emerges. And everyone is asking, "What are they like?"

There is more of a thirst to tap into spiritual values than any of the previous generations. They hunger to fill spiritual voids and solve the problems of the world created by the apathy and self-centeredness of their parents.

It should not be surprising, therefore, when the current generation hits the college campuses and there is a social revolution that surpasses that of any generation of the modern times. The campuses will be the center of an outcry for peace of mind and stability that will ascend to the heavens. This will be a generation that calls on the name of God.

The campuses will become the subject of news reports. The growing consensus among the news media will be that a spiritual revival is occurring among university students. Daily reports of unprecedented numbers of students attending prayer rallies on campus will become commonplace.

For a period of time, it will be as if heaven had touched earth. It will become normal among students to talk about the experiences they have had in prayer. As they touch God, the answers to many of the problems that plague our world will be revealed to them.

It is no coincidence that this generation has come on the scene at the present time. The whole world is in a state of transition. As we close out the millenium, entire nations are in a state of upheaval. The social, economic and political landscape of the world is fast changing. This is a generation of world changers. It is a generation that has come on the scene "for such a time as this."

Are You a Part of a Generation of Destiny?

By Bob and Rose Weiner

September 1990 - Three times in world history a wholesale slaughter of the "innocents" has taken place that has been filled with significant meaning.

The first occurred toward the end of a 400 year period when the nation of Israel was in slavery to the Egyptians. The Hebrew race had been reproducing so fast that the king felt threatened by a potential revolt against his authority, fearing that the slaves would escape the country. Around the year 1526 B.C. Pharaoh ordered that all the male infants born to the Hebrews should no longer be allowed to live and were to be thrown into the Nile River.

The second slaughter of the innocents took place shortly after the birth of Jesus Christ. Persian Magi from the East held among their cast a sacred prophecy that indicated that a new star would appear in the heavens indicating that the Divine Son of God had been born Whom they were to worship and adore.

The Persian Magi followed that star to Jerusalem and since they considered this child whose birth it signified to be a king, they went straight to the palace of King Herod. "Where is he that is born King of the Jews?" they asked, "for we have seen his star in the east and have come to worship Him."

Being secretly enraged by the Magi's announcement and feeling that a real threat to his throne existed, King Herod called the Jewish leaders together to inquire into the matter. Learning Messiah was to be born in Bethlehem, he privately called the Magi to find out exactly when the star had appeared and then sent them to search for the child. When they failed to return with information concerning the infant, Herod sent his soldiers to Bethlehem to kill all the children there from the age of two years old and under, in accordance with the Magi's account of the time frame of the infant's birth.

We come now to the third massacre of the innocents which began in the United States in 1973 with the injunction of Roe vs. Wade. If you are 17 years old, you are the first member of a generation who has been marked out for slaughter and escaped the abortion massacre.

Millions of your fellow classmates never made it to kindergarten, much less to the university, as their life was hopelessly snuffed out in the womb of their mother. USA today reports that of the colleges surveyed 68% revealed that they had a drop this fall in the number of applications from potential first year students because of the birth rate decline that hit the nation in the 1970s.¹

Have you ever asked yourself "Why?" Why weren't you one of the statistics that found its way into the garbage disposal or to the back alley in a trash bag? Why did you live and others die? Why did your parents want you and other parents did not want their children?

If evil forces work behind the will of man as Biblical history teaches, then what is so unique about this generation of young people that sinister forces have sought to destroy it for 17 years? And if despite the exhaustive efforts of the Prince of Darkness to destroy both Moses and Jesus, God delivered them both from destruction to fulfill His will, could there be a divine reason for your deliverance? Could there be a unique purpose for your existence? What great task does God have for this generation to fulfill?

If we interpret the abortion massacre in the light of Biblical history, this generation is most assuredly marked out as a generation of destiny.

¹ USA Today, August 6, 1990, "LifeLine," College Math, Sec. D, p.1.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

In the Aftermath of War

By Bob and Rose Weiner

March 1991 - In the aftermath of the Persian Gulf War, many news sources referred to the "Humiliation of Iraq and Saddam Hussein." In the meantime, some Iraqis began to lose hope in Allah. Iraqi women could be seen going to Orthodox churches to seek help from the Christian God, as an ABC News video clip attested. "Humiliation" is closely related to the word "humility" which speaks of a humble and contrite heart. This is the heart revealed in these women - the willingness to open up in a new way to God.

The Christian witness, prayer and worship to God in the heart of Islamic territory did much to break the spiritual powers over the region. The war in the natural was a mirror of the war that was going on in the heavenlies as God moved to break the power of Islam in order to open up Moslem nations for the gospel. The Kuwaiti people are thankful to Americans for their liberty. Something they say that has created a bond between Kuwait and the American people that will always be there.

And now the Resistance Front wants democracy for Kuwait. The Resistance who worked during Iraq's occupation to protect the Iraqi people is demanding democracy, freedom of the speech, and freedom of press. The women are demanding a right to vote. They said the Emir can maintain his title as long as he doesn't stand in the way of liberty. This strikes at the heart of Islam which is dictatorial in nature and is on a collision course with free markets, free voting and free press. As the winds of freedom blow, Islamic nations will begin to open up to the gospel.

God is overturning nations on a massive scale never seen before. When the Lord of All Nations strikes down a great nation, brace yourself for action. Prepare for massive changes! The God of History will not lose the Great War for the Earth!

"For the first time ever, mankind is reaching a consensus on the best form of economy: free markets. At the rate we're going, the wave of reform will soon engulf the planet and leave any non-free-market countries trapped in a backwater of poverty. When poverty becomes a regional exception instead of the rule, socialist and totalitarian leaders will be killed or ousted ... For the first time ever, mankind is reaching a consensus on the best form of government: representative, multi-party democracies. Reports of reform and revolution are pouring in from everywhere."¹

In China since the Tianenman Square massacre, according to Feb. 3, 1990 World, "In at least seven cities ... students have indicated ... that as many as 10% of entire student bodies have converted. In some cases entire dorms or even faculties have all become Christians." According to one lecturer at Xiamen University, "I would defy anyone to walk from one building to another on this campus and not bump into a group of students having a Bible study in the open air."

Because of the power that God is unleashing world wide, business as usual will not do anymore. The battle has shifted gears and now the battle for the entire planet's faith is coming our way. And Jesus promised that he would send signs with those believers to confirm His Word.

1 James H. Rutz, 1700 Years is Long Enough, Open Churches Ministries, Costa Mesa, Calif., p.36-37.

March 1991 - In the aftermath of the Persian Gulf War, many news sources referred to the "Humiliation of Iraq and Saddam Hussein." In the meantime, some Iraqis began to lose hope in Allah. Iraqi women could be seen going to Orthodox churches to seek help from the Christian God, as an ABC News video clip attested. "Humiliation" is closely related to the word "humility" which speaks of a humble and contrite heart. This is the heart revealed in these women - the willingness to open up in a new way to God.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

The Fallen Star of Islam

By Jay Rogers

January/February 1991 - And I saw another angel come down from heaven, having great power, and the earth was lightened with his glory. And he cried mightily with a strong voice, saying, "Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen!" Revelation 18:1,2

During the past two months, the world has watched as the nations have squared off over a small plot of valuable real estate - Kuwait. The United Nations have declared war on Iraq, a military dictatorship ruled by Saddam Hussein and have boldly demanded: "Get out of Kuwait!"

While some would say that this is a battle for oil, others in the Arab world say that it is a struggle of Islam against "the Great Satan." But from a biblical perspective, this is a struggle of a much wider proportion. When we speak of Iraq, Kuwait and Iran, nations which have troubled America since the Carter administration, we should understand that these nations encompass lands which once included the ancient kingdoms of the Chaldeans, the Medes and the Persians - known to biblical authors as - Babylon.

The verse in Revelation 18 "Babylon is fallen!" speaks of the ultimate triumph of God's kingdom and gives us an assurance that His glory will one day fill the whole earth. We have seen this process unfold dramatically in our lifetime.

During the past two years, the world has watched as communism - the great enemy of freedom - has fallen. The people of many nations quickly overturned their communist governments in favor of a more democratic representation of their people. With communism almost eliminated from the contest for the hearts and minds of the human race, there are only two great remaining forces competing for world dominion - Christianity and Islam.

The military conflict in the Middle East is only a reflection of a much greater conflict that is happening in the spiritual realm, or, if you are not inclined to think in such terms, it is a battle of ideas or two conflicting worldviews which cannot co-exist peaceably in the same universe. Both of these two remaining forces insist on total world dominion.

The outcome of the contest is coming quickly to a close. The result of the struggle will be determined by the fact that one group has been instructed that the battle is not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places.

The other company has been taught that power comes through domination; that bloodshed is the key to gaining control. Warfare is relegated to earthly struggles of the armies of the nations against each other. Understanding this, the outcome of this battle can easily be predicted - Islam will be defeated, the back of the world's largest religion will be broken - and its downfall will take place in a shorter period of time than communism.

Natural Israel and the Church will increase. And millions of Muslims the world over will see at once that their concept of the one, true God - Allah - is not the same as the Father who was revealed through Jesus Christ. When a billion Muslims the world over see the great signs and wonders which are now about to take place, they will call on the name of the Living God - the God revealed through Jesus the only Son of God. And millions of Muslims will be saved.

Governments throughout the Middle East, Africa and Asia will dissolve overnight. Democracies will replace dictatorships; and the resulting freedom of religion will allow a great influx of Christianity, the true salt of the earth, to invade these nations and bring peace - not war - because peace can only be realized when Christ is formed within the hearts of the people.

The military conflict in the Middle East is only a reflection of a much greater conflict that is happening in the spiritual realm, or, if you are not inclined to think in such terms, it is a battle of ideas or two conflicting worldviews which cannot co-exist peaceably in the same universe. Both of these two remaining forces insist on total world dominion.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

A Note on this Special Tenth Anniversary Issue:

By Jay Rogers

5/91

As we go to print this month, there are two exciting developments that we have decided to include as the main features of the May Forerunner.

First, this month marks the tenth anniversary of The Forerunner - which was conceived as a "prophetic voice" to the youth of America in May of 1981. Under the leadership of Bob and Rose Weiner and Lee Grady, The Forerunner has consistently provided remarkable insight into world events and has been a chronicle of what God has been saying to the young people of our nation for the past ten years. This Tenth Anniversary Issue chronicles, year by year, some of the most significant articles which have appeared in The Forerunner since May 1981. The coverage of the most powerful events of the past ten years begins on page 6. We have printed some additional copies of this issue which are available at special bulk rates. For ordering information turn to page 23.

And second, a newly formed campus outreach ministry - Christian Youth International - has begun in the Soviet Union as a response to the unprecedented spiritual awakening which is now affecting thousands of Soviet students. Bob and Rose Weiner, with the help of directors, José and Joyce Pascua, have a powerful vision to plant churches on every major university campus in the Soviet Union. What is happening in the Soviet Union is so phenomenal that we have devoted special coverage in this issue to the work God has begun among the youth of the largest nation in the world. After having spent some time among the students of the Soviet Union, we have some very exciting testimonies to tell you.

This Special Tenth Anniversary Issue marks a watershed in the history of The Forerunner as a publication - we stand at the doorway of a new beginning which has occurred as a result of God's goodness. We invite you to celebrate with us! God has a plan for you to be a part of what He is about to do among the young people in all the nations of the earth. The events of the next ten years will be even more powerful than anything which has occurred in the past!

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

The Forerunner to begin in Soviet Union

5/91

It was good to talk with you and to hear first hand about the vision that you have to see a Forerunner-type newspaper established within the Soviet Union for Soviet students. This effort couldn't be more on target as far as we're concerned. We're honored to be a significant part of your ministry, and will look forward to hearing how the effort in the Soviet Union is progressing.

John Beckett
Chairman, Intercessors for America
Elyria, Ohio

Editor's Note: At a special leadership conference held April 3-7 in Moscow, a staff of 30 Soviet students were organized who volunteered to work on a Russian language edition of The Forerunner. These students will distribute this newspaper beginning in the Fall on the campuses across the 11 time zones of the Soviet Union.

The main office of the Soviet Forerunner - "Predtecha: Good News for the Soviet Union" - will be located in Kiev, and correspondents, photographers, artists and writers will contribute to the newspaper from cities all over the Soviet Union. For special coverage of this conference and news about the Soviet Forerunner, turn to pages 12, 13 and 24.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Russian language Forerunner

By Jay Rogers

5/91

The Soviet Union - the country with the largest land mass in the world - has within its borders over a hundred ethnic groups speaking hundreds of languages and dialects. Stretching nearly halfway around the world (11 time zones) this area represents one of the most diverse mixtures of races and people found anywhere in the world.

And now The Forerunner is appearing in the Russian language. Last April, at Christian Youth International's Evangelism Training Seminar in Moscow, a staff of over 30 students were assembled who will be writing and distributing a newspaper to the university campuses all across the Soviet Union.

From Moscow to Vladivostok, Riga to Kiev, thousands of Russian speaking university students will be receiving a newspaper declaring that God's word is sovereign over every area of Soviet life. Passages of scripture with expository teaching will be included in this publication, along with the exciting stories of the throngs of young people who are coming to know God daily.

Soviet students will discover for the first time, the heritage of Russia which is rich in Christian history, as well as principles for the reformation of their government. Articles on science, music, the arts, economics, education - all fields of learning - will be presented from a uniquely Christian perspective.

Two managing editors from Kiev, several journalism majors, artists and photographers from campuses all across the Soviet Union are eager to begin work on this publication. We will be training the staff in workshops to be held at a national leadership conference in Moscow in July, and the editors will receive in depth training for the following three weeks at the main editorial office in Kiev.

How you can help

The workers are ready and waiting. The only remaining need is funding for computer equipment, supplies and staff salaries. This is where you can help! Your tax deductible gift is needed at this time to bring the gospel in printed form to the university campuses of the Soviet Union.

Currently, the exchange rate of American dollars for Soviet rubles is so high that a gift of only $100 can pay a one year salary for one of Soviet students who will be employed as full time staff members. Computer hardware and software, including a laser printer, will also be donated to the Soviet Forerunner. This is your opportunity be a part of the work in one of the most fertile harvest fields in the world today!

There are two ways in which you can help to ensure the success of this valuable effort:

1. Donate a special gift. Computer equipment and other needed supplies are being paid for by individuals through tax deductible gifts. Other costs, such as shipping, mailing and printing, are also going to need to be covered for the first few issues.

2. Buy a subscription to The Forerunner. When you buy a new subscription, renew your subscription, or add a year to your current subscription, a portion of your money will be used to pay for much needed supplies for the Soviet Forerunner. Will you be a part of this important effort?

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(fe3aebe81acea8d45108cd2768939da7_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(626ce8ac21792b9405bfddfea8e0c96a_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

A Walk Through Red Square

An Interview with Soviet University Students

By Jay Rogers

5/91

On April 8th, I had the privilege of being able to talk to Alexey Salapatov and Alexander (Sasha) Bolotnikov, two of the young Christians who are being trained as leaders of Christian Youth International - a Soviet based organization which is training thousands of young people to reach the universities, institutes and academies of the U.S.S.R. with the gospel.

After one of the night sessions of the conference, we took the subway from the Izmajilovo Hotel - near the Olympic complex in Moscow - and arrived in Red Square at about 10:30 PM. For the next two hours we walked through Red Square and the Kremlin talking about their newfound faith in Jesus Christ and their experience as young people living in the Soviet Union.

Visiting Red Square for the first time as an American was remarkable - the façade of a repressive police state is firmly ingrained there in many of the images: Lenin's tomb, the Supreme Soviet, the museum of atheism. Ironically these buildings are recent additions standing in stark contrast to the Gothic architecture of the many Russian Orthodox churches of Czarist Russia which dot the courtyard of the Kremlin.

Communism has not been able to resist the power of Liberty which has been unleashed through the Holy Spirit. A Christian renaissance is being birthed through young people such as Sasha and Alexy. Here in the midst of the citadel of communism, we talked freely about God's plans for their lives and the big picture of what has happened throughout the centuries in Russia - and what is to come.

FR: Tell about how you came to know the Lord, after being trained to be an atheist your whole life in communist schools?

Sasha: It was very interesting. Three years ago, I had a break in Crimea near the Black Sea. I went with my friend and we met two good, old women who were Moscow dissidents. They worked with Andrei Sakharov and published free literature. We talked with them many times.

One time they asked me: "Sasha, do you believe in God?" I answered them, "No, I don't!" And they said, "So ... you are an atheist!" It was true - I didn't believe in God before this. I was sure that God never existed. Only nature existed - I thought - and I could only believe in nature. But the words of these women struck me in my heart. I began to think about these things for two or three months.

After two or three months, I began to believe in God. First I believed: God exists - God is all - God is nature. Then I became a Judaist, because I am a Jew and didn't like the Russian Orthodox Church. I tried to read many Russian Orthodox philosophers, but I didn't like them. About two years ago, I began to read the Jewish Torah. I began to read commentaries, and the Talmud. Then I studied in a Jewish seminary for almost two years.

Then one day in my hostel, I met a very good brother - now he is my brother in Jesus Christ - by the name of Oleg. He began to tell me about Jesus Christ. He told me to read the New Testament, I read it and asked him questions. But I didn't believe in Jesus Christ. I told Oleg: Jesus Christ is not my God - I have another - I believe in the One God - and so on.

But I asked Oleg one day, "Do you believe that I will accept Jesus Christ?" He answered me, "Sure! I am sure you will accept Jesus Christ because I pray for you and I believe."

He didn't say: I hope - he only said: I am sure. I began to see that Jesus loved me as himself. I didn't feel that I could reject this great love, it was against my principles. So about three months ago I accepted Jesus Christ.

FR: What are some of these buildings here in Red Square?

Sasha: Over here is the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet. Here is the historical museum. There is a building that was a great supermarket.

Alexy: It was ... in the last century.

Sasha: Yes, in the last century and last year there were many goods in this shop, but now it is empty. The Soviet government produced a lot of revenue from this shop in the past, but now it doesn't produce much.

Alexy: (Pointing to Lenin's Tomb) There is a verse in the Revelation of John, where our Lord said to the church at Pergamos: "I know that you live where the throne of Satan is." It is a little known historical fact that in that city of Pergamos, there was a great temple - a synagogue of Satan - just like that building (pointing to Lenin's Tomb) - only smaller. That building is a precise copy of that synagogue of Satan. It is an interesting footnote of history.

(Bells in the Kremlin Tower begin to ring at precisely 10:45 PM.)

Sasha: The changing of the guards will take place in about fifteen minutes. Over here are the main gates of the Kremlin. Gorbachev's car leaves through these gates. Directly behind us is an interesting spot - The Florid Place - "florid" meaning red.

Alexy: This is the Russian Calvary.

Sasha: It was built in the 12th century. Many people were killed here by the Czars and their death sentences were read from this place.

FR: This has a real demonic presence to it. It reminds me of the cemetery of the Huguenots in St. Augustine, Florida, where Spanish armies came and slaughtered the French Protestants. This has that same kind of feeling to it. So, tell me what happened here? Who was killed?

Sasha: Many revolutionaries of the past , such as Ivan Bolotnikov in the 15th century, were martyred in this place. In the 17th century, Stepan Reisen, a famous Russian folk leader, and many farmers of Russia began a struggle with the Czar and Stepan Reisen was killed.

Here is the famous monument of two Russian folk leaders, Meneny and Pezarsky. In the 16th century, Polish troops marched into the Kremlin and the Polish king seized power and became the Russian Czar. Meneny and Peszrarsky led the nation in the struggle against the Polish troops and had victory.

FR: Alexy, tell us your story about how you came to Christ.

Alexy: In December of 1989, I was feeling spiritually hungry. I began to look into philosophy, and martial arts, such as karate and Kung-Fu. I also met Hare Krishnas in a subway selling books by Indian philosophers. I began to read these books, but over a period of time I felt unsatisfied. Hare Krishna teaches that you must abstain from eating meat and other foods.

(At this point, 11 P.M., the guards in front of Lenin's tomb receive their replacements. We take a few moments to watch their goose-step march.)

Then I visited an evangelistic meeting and I saw my present pastor and church. I heard the message of the pastor - but I didn't like his preaching - because I heard his words through the perspective of the Hindu religion. I didn't think it was for me.

Then a friend, named Sergei, gave me an address and invited me to his church. I didn't promise him I would come but kept it in mind. God eventually led me to this church, but my heart was hard to the preaching the second time also. I didn't understand these people because they would laugh and jump and cry out "Praise the Lord! - Hallelujah!" I thought they were crazy. It was not my style.

When the meeting was finished, I spoke with the pastor and told him that I had read Hindu philosophy and thought that it was better than Christianity. I believed that Christ and all the other Hindu gods were the same. The pastor just said, "Peace to you - do you read the Bible?" I said "Yes." He told me to continue reading and I would understand. He invited me to come again to the church.

When I returned home, I began to read the Bible and I discovered the parable of the old and new wine. This parable says that if you taste old wine you don't want the new because the old wine tastes better. Then I realized this was talking about me! I had drunk old wine - the Hindu religion - in a spiritual sense, this philosophy was nothing more than pig's food.

I realized that I must come to know Christ. I took my Hindu books and put them away. The third time I visited my church, I asked to my pastor, "Does Christ still give salvation today, or not?" He said, "Only if you want to repent!" In the middle of the third meeting the pastor said, "I know that there are people in this room today who want to repent and accept Jesus. Who are these people?" I stood up from my chair and said, "I do!"

That day was September 16th, 1990. I accepted Jesus Christ as my personal Savior. That was a Saturday - the next day I was baptized in water. I became a member of that church which has many young people and I have found a lot of joy and happiness there.

FR: So you've been a Christian for six months and Sasha has been a Christian for three months. Do you see a lot of people your own age becoming Christians all of a sudden?

Alexy: Our church is very young. It has about one hundred people and all of them are between 16 and 24 years old. Only five people are older than me.

FR: How old are you?

Alexy: I'm seventeen.

FR: And Sasha is 21.

Sasha: Yes and my church is also very young.

FR: Why is this awakening happening now? Why not five years ago?

Sasha: Five years ago, when I studied in school, teachers would tell us many bad lies about the churches. Many KGB servicemen would visit our school and would tell us: Don't believe in God! - Don't visit the Church! - You must believe in communism, only in communism!

Alexy: In Lenin! In Marx! (laughs).

Sasha: Now many people are sick of Lenin and Marx. Many young people are looking for something new for their souls. Our task is to help them find Jesus Christ.

FR: In the United States we have heard much about perestroika and glasnost - the new openness. How has this affected you as young people living in the Soviet Union?

Alexy: I don't believe in it. You see ... at the beginning of perestroika many people believed. They said: "Maybe Gorbachev will help us. Maybe he knows the correct way for the government of our country." And they believed.

But now ... the rate of popularity for Gorby is very low. I know that American and Soviet television and radio have said that Gorbachev is very popular; he is a folk leader. It is not false, but it is not true. It is somewhere in the middle.

FR: At the same time, hasn't this country opened up a lot to new ideas since perestroika?

Alexy: No. Our country only opened the door for comfortable ideas. Ideas which were comfortable to the KGB and the government.

FR: What about freedom of religion?

Alexy: I know about this only from my own experience. Our church is persecuted even now.

FR: By the KGB?

Alexy: The KGB came to members of our church, who are all young people, and asked them to testify in writing that our church is abnormal, and that our pastor is a criminal.

FR: So, is there no greater freedom?

Sasha: Gorbachev, when he visited the U.S.A., France and other countries, tried to show foreigners that there was very great freedom in the U.S.S.R. But it's not true. We have greater freedom in comparison to the time of Brezhnev, but if I begin to compare our freedom and your freedom, there is a very great difference.

Our parliament didn't take away the restrictive laws about immigration. If I want to leave the Soviet Union, I must take a Visa and go to many bureaucratic organizations and the KGB. If I begin to start this process in January, I would be able to leave in September ... maybe.

Our government hasn't yet given us freedom for privatization of business and economic development. They gave some freedom for the newspapers, but not for business. The government still controls 99% of industry. The government prints more money but they can't increase production. It's tragic.

Alexy: For example, if I want to print a newspaper, I must register it with the state department. I may do it, but then I would have many problems with paper, with printing equipment and many other problems.

Sasha: There are many shortages with goods and food. To buy meat and sausage, we must have a special card. In Leningrad, for example, this card allows us to buy only half a kilogram of meat per month. That's not much.

And now Gorbachev has moved to the right because he cannot control the economic situation. Many leaders have left Gorbachev and have joined with Yeltsin. That's why Shevardnadze resigned. Gorbachev visited our soon university after this. He told us a story about Shevardnadze, that when he was president of Georgia, he made some bad mistakes. Shevardnadze's Georgian colleagues wrote Gorbachev a letter saying that they would expose him in the press, if he would stay in power. And Gorbachev claimed that this is why Shevardnadze needed to leave his post.

Alexy: Our government has changed, but it is only the peak of the mountain.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Called to Soviet Asia

By Jay Rogers

5/91

MOSCOW (FR) - Two years ago, Eugene Mastratov worked as an oil prospector searching the northern reaches of Soviet Asia for natural gas and oil. Today his life has been radically transformed. He is still compelled to travel to obscure lands, but his purpose is changed. His life has become emblematic of the mandate of the Apostle Paul, "to preach Christ where he is not known."

Last March, Eugene was sent out as a campus worker for Christian Youth International to several cities in southeastern Soviet Asia. His task was to invite Christian students to a conference in Moscow for five days of teaching and training in evangelism. Instead, his time among students, many of whom had never even heard the name of Jesus Christ, became a time of sharing his testimony and preaching the gospel.

Visiting the cities of Vladivostok, Khabarovsk, Yushno Sakhalinsk, and Irkutsk (see map on page 13), Eugene talked to many young people in the university classrooms who were not yet acquainted with the concept of a personal God. Taking about two-thirds of his time to explain that "religion" portrays a false picture of God, Eugene would use the remaining third of his time to introduce the students to the power of the Holy Spirit and Biblical Christianity.

Once the students were introduced to Jesus Christ as a living, personal Savior, "their eyes lit up like fire." Seeing their spiritual hunger, Eugene invited them to pray with him and receive salvation. Later, he met with the students in his hotel and talked with them further about salvation and the Christian life. Several of these students were able to travel thousands of miles to the evangelism and leadership training conference in Moscow on April 3-7.

Today Eugene Mastratov, a young Christian who recently committed his life to Christ in January of 1991, has a burning vision to spread the gospel all over the Soviet Union. He spoke of his desire to boldly preach where Christ is not known. There are many cities in the Soviet Union, founded since the communist revolution, that have no churches and no gospel witness.

This summer he hopes to travel to three such cities, Kamchatka, Magaden and Irkutsk. In doing so he will accomplish important apostolic work, bringing the message of salvation to many who have yet to hear about Jesus Christ.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

CYI Conference Held in Moscow

By Jay Rogers

5/91

MOSCOW (FR) - This is the hour of destiny for the Soviet Union! Today the hope of a renaissance is being birthed in the Soviet Union. While some have predicted future gloom for this nation, the Word of God offers a brighter promise: "All the ends of the earth shall remember and turn to the Lord, and all the families of the nations will bow down before Him. For dominion belongs to the Lord and He rules over the nations" (Psalm 22:27).

A revolution is quietly taking place in the Soviet Union. The situation in this country is similar to what happened in the 1960s in America - there is political and economic turmoil, there are frequent demonstrations and worker's strikes - but also like the 1960s, there is a "Jesus Movement" among the young people.

On April 3-7, an evangelism and church planting training seminar was held in the Izmajilovo Hotel, near the Olympic complex, in Moscow. This conference, the first leadership training seminar of Christian Youth International, was attended by 300 Soviet university students. Some came thousands of miles from cities in Soviet Asia.

These young people are among the brightest and most promising leaders in their society. These Soviet students love God; they are servants; they are intelligent, and full of faith and excitement. These students are the future of the Soviet Union.

According to director, José Pascua, "Christian Youth International is a Soviet based organization, which will be staffed by Soviet Christians. From here we will send evangelists to Red China and Eastern Europe and reach the whole world."

Founder and President, Bob Weiner, further described the vision: "Working together with Terry Law, Daniel Williams of Calvary Ministries, and Mission Possible, we are going to see the glory of God come in the Soviet Union. Every city, every town will have a new wine skin - a fresh expression of the glorious Church."

There was truly a Spirit of Revival present throughout the five days of the conference. The main characteristic among the students was their genuine love for Jesus Christ and for each other. Their excitement at the expectation of a growing movement all across the Soviet Union resulted in an electric fervor.

Featured speakers during the five day conference included Keith Curley, a pastor from Houston, Texas, and Daniel Williams, founder of Riga Bible College in Riga, Latvia. Students met for three sessions a day which included many hours of praise, teaching and leadership training.

On Saturday, April 6, they were given 11,500 Russian New Testaments, hundreds of copies of Jesus Brings New Life, a foundational Bible study series by Bob and Rose Weiner, recently translated and printed in the Russian language, and hundreds of complete Russian Bibles. These were the first of the 230,000 New Testaments donated to CYI by Terry Law Ministries and Mission Possible.

From April to July, these 300 newly equipped Christian leaders will be conducting Bible studies among university students all across the Soviet Union. Students who successfully complete the Bible study program will be given an invitation to an all-expense paid leadership conference held at the Izmajilovo Hotel in July.

It was estimated by the directors of CYI that the July conference will be attended by over 4000 Christian students. The remaining 218,500 New Testaments will be distributed to the thousands of leaders who will be trained at this conference. CYI also hopes to print 100,000 Bible study books in the Russian language which will be used in evangelistic Bible studies all across the U.S.S.R.

Churches will be planted on those universities where large numbers of Soviet students are experiencing revival. The goal of CYI is to plant a New Testament church on every major university campus in the Soviet Union.

If you would like more information on the CYI conference being held in July, or if you would like to contribute financially to success of the conference, write:

Christian Youth International
Bob and Rose Weiner Ministries, Intl.
P.O. Box 1799
Gainesville, FL 32609
(904) 375-4455

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

World Events

Apartheid Being Dismantled

Pro-democracy Movements Sweep AFRICA

Aid Floods into Romania after Fall of Ceaurescu

Aid to Vietnam

Australia and New Zealand Report

Australia - Prayer at Capital

Baguio City, Philippines experiences revival

The Baltic States: United for Independence?

Baltic States Cry for Freedom

Billy Graham Draws Record Breaking Crowds in London

Breaking Up the Eastern Bloc

Christian Leader of Uganda Pledges to Restore Justice

Christian Unity Triumphs Over Ethnic Hostility in former Yugoslavia

Peace Talks Will Spread Christianity in Islamic World

First Church Building Opened in Communist North Korea

The Collapse of Communism

Crisis in Iraq

East Germany's Church

Eastern Europe Opening

The Fallen Star of Islam

Unleashing the Force of Freedom: George Bush Addresses Europe

East & West Germany Move Toward Reunification

Green Party in Germany

Reports of Revival from Saudi Arabia

Holy Spirit Moves throughout the World

Hope for South Africa!

Hungary's Church

Indonesian Muslim's testimony

Inkatha: The Party of the New South African

Iranian Church Growing

Jaanus Karner's testimony

Jaanus Karner - Estonia

Jaanus Karner - Prophecy

Kenya Outreach

Indonesian Evangelist Predicts Global Awakening

Go Ye!

Rate of Conversions Climbing among Muslims in Kenya

Nagaland Revival

New Zealand Revival

North Korea Evangelization

Report from the Church in North Korea

Philippines 1988

Post-Marxist countries experience spiritual awakening

Reflections After Desert Storm

The Humiliation Factor: Beginning the Restoration of Iraq and Kuwait

Satanic Fury: The Force Behind Islam

Singaporean student testimony

South African Student Testimony

Soviet Soldiers in Afghanistan

Spain: Five Hundred Years and Religious Freedom

Testimony of prophetic minister from Singapore

Churches in Thailand Experience Rapid Growth

Churches in Latin America, India and China to experience explosive growth before 2000

Three Brave Nations: Baltic States

The Triumph of Faith and Freedom Over Communism

Twilight of Scandinavian Socialism

Testimony from Uganda

Uganda's First Lady: AIDS a Moral Problem

Vineyard Conference in England

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Back to The Forerunner!

Apartheid Being Dismantled

5/89

JOHANNESBURG, So. Africa (NIRR) - Apartheid is being dismantled piece by piece in South Africa by new laws and policies, but not until recently has there been visible evidence of a change in the root cause of racial strife in the nation. Leaders in white churches in South Africa have begun to acknowledge that apartheid is a sin, agreeing that attempts to defend it are heretical, and asking forgiveness for having helped to maintain it.

The statements of repentance came during a meeting in early March when key leaders of white, black, and mixed-race branches of the Dutch Reformed Church in South Africa discussed racial problems. Observers see the results of that meeting as a first step to dealing with the roots of apartheid.

Historically, the "establishment" white Dutch Reformed Church has provided the theological underpinnings of apartheid for the ruling three million Afrikaners - using the Bible erroneously to promote a form of white supremacy. The church, with about one million adult members, was expelled from the World Alliance of Reformed Churches (WARC) in the early 1980s after the WARC declared apartheid a heresy. The church was told it could not be reinstated until it agreed with this statement.

Since 80 percent of the country's legislators belong to the church, Western analysts said the actions of Dutch Reformed leaders this month could be a significant step toward dismantling apartheid. However, non-whites at the meeting complained that their white brethren, in failing to address specific racial-separation ills and practices, did not go far enough in rejecting apartheid. Indeed, the whites later in the meeting seemed to soften their position, pointing out they had condemned "discriminatory apartheid" rather than apartheid in all its forms, according to press reports.

They also refused to embrace a strongly worded anti-apartheid statement adopted by the non-white groups, whose churches have about 1.8 million members. And a week later a high-level policy-making commission of their church said it would not support resistance to apartheid and appointed a committee to study the issue before committing the church to an official position. The meeting was sponsored by the Reformed Ecumenical Council, a conservative Michigan-based counterpart to WARC.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Pro-democracy Movements Sweep AFRICA

10/91

Massive pro-democracy protests in Mali recently led to the overthrow of dictator General Moussa Traore, who had ruled that West African nation for 23 years. The coup leaders are promising multi-party elections.

Similar protest has led to the toppling of the Marxist regime of Mathiew Kerekou in Benin. This West African state is following in the footsteps of a worldwide movement that is sweeping the African continent as well.

The Ivory Coast and Cape Verde Islands have held initial multi-party elections. Zambia and Burkino Faso are also planning their first free elections.

The socialist Frelimo government of Mozambique has renounced Marxism, embraced some free-market principles for their state run economy and conceded to some form of multi party elections. Nevertheless, they have set many restrictions for participating parties and rigidly control the media and the electoral commission.

Strong pro-democracy movements are challenging the authoritarian governments and one-party dictatorships of Madagascar, Gabon, Nigeria, Zaire, Angola, Kenya, Zambia, Mozambique, Togo, Ghana and Tunisia.

Currently there are 45 one-party dictatorships in Africa. Pro-democracy groups in Africa have called upon Americans to lobby the State Department to cease giving aid to the Marxist regimes of countries such as, Angola, Congo, Madagascar, Zimbabwe, etc., and invest this money in the blossoming economies of free market nations instead.

The U.S. and Africa Statistical Handbook 1991, is available by writing: The Heritage Foundation, 214 Massachusetts Avenue, N.E., Washington DC 20002, or phone 202-546-4400.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

jrogers@forerunner.com

Aid Floods into Romania after Fall of Ceausescu

3/90

BUCHAREST, Romania (EP) - In a week of violent uprising in January, the iron-fisted rule of Romanian President Nicolae Ceausescu came to an end. Now Christian missionaries are rushing to bring physical and spiritual relief to Romania, as the nation struggles to cope with its newly won freedom, and with the terrible price that was paid to attain it.

Ceausescu and his wife were captured and executed after secret trial by a revolutionary tribunal, and members of the secret police are being sought and captured.

Churches in Romania played a significant role in toppling the government. As demonstrations grew in the city of Arad in December, Baptist leaders preached sermons calling for liberty. Hundreds of church members knelt to pray and chanted, "God is with us! God is with us!"

Along with calls for freedom, Christians called for an emphasis on the Gospel. "Every home must have a Bible and we must build many churches," said one speaker. "We must build more churches - not more bars!" Many churches were destroyed in Ceausescu's so-called "urban renewal" programs.

Romania is the last Warsaw Pact nation outside of the Soviet Union to overthrow its government. The only remaining Communist government is Albania, which is not a member of the Warsaw Pact and continues to be the world's leading oppressor of the Church.

Now that the armed struggle is over in Romania, Christian ministries are working swiftly to bring aid to those afflicted by the war. Christian Mission to the Communist World (CMCW) was one of the first relief teams to bring medicines, food, clothing heating materials, and Bibles.

Dr. Hans M. Braun, international secretary to CMCW, observed, "The Romanian people celebrate a measure of freedom they have not known in 40 years. Their joy is tempered by a sadness as they count the thousands who have died violently in this week of terror." He called the end of the Ceausescu regime an answer to prayer.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Aid to Vietnam

7/88

PHOENIX, AZ (EP) - America is headed back into Vietnam. But this time it will be with medical help and Bibles. Vietnam's increasing openness is giving Christian ministries a chance to help heal the wounds of war, not only in Vietnam, but also in the U.S.

"A great division has existed all these years in the U.S., with the right on one side, the left on the other, and bewildered masses in between," explains Dr. Larry Ward, who is coordinating private aid to Vietnam and working as a volunteer with NEED, a Phoenix-based ministry focusing on Vietnam. "There's nothing that will close the gap for the American people except doing something together. Rhetoric won't do it. We can do something positive to help.

Foreign missions work in Vietnam came to a halt in 1975 when Saigon fell to the North Vietnamese. Ward escorted some 1300 people out of Vietnam and helped them find new lives in America. He also ran a rescue operation for Vietnam's "boat people" who fled the country after the fall.

When he returned to Vietnam in 1979, it was with apprehension. "I expected hostility," he admits. "It had been over four years since I had left Vietnam in the big wild rush with the others. When I went back I confess to wondering, 'How will the people respond - the people left behind?' My very first experience was this: I walked around a corner and there were 30 or 40 guys sitting outside what used to be the Bank of America, in an outside cafe drinking beer and coffee. I stopped in front of them and said 'Good morning, how are you?'"

The men asked Ward where he was from, and he told them he hailed from the United States. "They started clapping, because I was from the United States of America. The only dirty looks I ever had in 31 trips since August of 1979 were when they thought I was a Russian. Especially on the streets of Ho Chi Minh City, people are very friendly and will come up and say 'Thank you.'"

The church in Vietnam has grown under oppression, says Ward. "I don't think the pressure on the church has let up. It's estimated that the church may be three times bigger than when we left it in April of 1975. People like myself helped much of the leadership escape, but we're grateful for the ones who stayed behind with incredible courage."

The communist government of Vietnam has only recently released South Vietnamese military chaplains, who were held in "re-education" camps for 13 years. The chief of chaplains is still being held. "I think in the minds of the Vietnamese this was the real enemy," explains Ward. "Here were the guys whose faith - even in the prison camps - helped people find the Lord."

The Vietnamese government welcomes the private aid provided by Christian organizations but turns its back on the religious goals of the relief workers. "We identify ourselves as Christians," explains Ward. "We don't play games. It appears the government is just going to close their eyes to that. It's carefully ignored in all of the official discussions, but we've been totally upfront."

A war fought with bombs, grenades and landmines left behind an estimated 60,000 amputees, including perhaps 16,000 crippled children. Many of the groups whose efforts Ward coordinates are providing wheelchairs, crutches, and artificial limbs.

"It is a beautiful significance in that we're coming full circle," observes Ward. "What became great evangelistic opportunities in Vietnam began in the late '60s when an Alliance missionary begged for help for the disabled. I was World Vision's overseas director then and began sending in wheelchairs and crutches. That opened the door, the church earned the right to be heard. We saw incredible things happen in evangelism during the dark days of the war. Thousands were won for Christ."

Those kind of evangelistic opportunities may be opening up again, but Ward's advice is to go slow. "The phone rings every day with people who want to go, but cautions need to be sounded for people going in. We have been totally upfront in announcing ourselves as Christians. We always check with churches to be sure we will not put them in danger by attending their services.

"One thing people have to be awfully careful about is taking official permission to see church leaders and then taking in Bibles without permission. When we were there in December the screws were being tightened. Someone had come in and brought hundreds of Bibles, bringing the church under new scrutiny. This is still a communist regime that sets people against other people. I tell people to exercise great caution; we come and go but the church has to stay there."

The lack of diplomatic ties between the U.S. and Vietnam makes official government aid impossible, so the private sector aid which Ward is coordinating (with the government's encouragement) is vital. A number of Christian organizations are beginning work in Vietnam, though none have established a full-time presence there.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Australia and New Zealand Report

- by Bob Nolte
3/89

ADELAIDE, Australia (FR) - Three thousand Christians marched down the main streets of this Australian city early this year, proclaiming God's ownership of the city and praying for the government as the parade halted in front of various city offices and business houses. The rally, held in conjunction with a nationwide Christian conference called Revival '89, was yet another visible sign of the impact Christianity is having upon the nation of Australia.

Participants in the parade were numerous young people from Maranatha fellowships in New Zealand and Australia, some of whom had only been recently converted to Christ. Bob Weiner, founder and president of Maranatha Campus Ministries, was a keynote speaker at the convention - which drew leaders from throughout the Pacific region.

The Adelaide conference, sponsored by Barry Chant, leader of Tabor House, underscored a year of Christian activity that caused even secular observers to marvel. Last September, a constitutional amendment which many Christians feared would curtail civil and religious liberties was resoundingly defeated. One noted newspaper columnist in a Melbourne daily wrote of that event: "Christians have made their presence felt during the last year more than at any other time in our history. Voters turned down the national referendum that would have given government a stronger voice ... I suspect (the Christians') opposition did much to influence voters. As for this writer, I welcome the Christian viewpoint in Australia. It's about time we heard from them."

There was also more movement toward Christian unity in Australia last year as over 35,000 people, including youth from Maranatha churches in Melbourne and Sydney, joined the National Prayer Gathering in the nation's capitol, Canberra. In keeping with the 200th birthday celebration of Australia, the Bible Society last year organized Christians to distribute Bibles to every household in the country.

Meanwhile, Maranatha campus churches in Sydney and Melbourne continued to grow last year, adding more international students from southeast Asia than ever. More than 24,000 Australian editions of Forerunner were printed and distributed on campus. According to Grant Clark, editor of the newspaper, the publication of an Australian edition dovetailed with the nation's bicentennial, which "allowed the nation to focus on its foundations and achievements. It has also allowed a time to ponder our future. Many politicians, church leaders and sportsmen have called for Australia's youth to lay the foundation for the next 200 years."

Evangelism has penetrated the Sydney University campus so powerfully that a recent poll disclosed that Christians have become the second largest group on campus, second only to the ski club! Christians are also making inroads into politics. In New South Wales, three Christians formed "Call to Australia," a new political party. During a hotly contested election, three party members were swept into office and now control the balance of power in the New South Wales Upper House. In Adelaide, the Student Representative Council President is a Christian and a member of an Assembly of God Church.

With this growth of Christian influence has also come an increase in Australia's stature worldwide. NBC Television spent a week televising live segments of the Bicentennial celebration, giving millions of Americans a window into a country they have known little about. Recent movies about life in Australia, such as "Crocodile Dundee I and II" and "A Cry in the Dark," have sparked a new wave of tourism - making it the number one industry in Australia. Hotels and related industries are building beachheads in not only the capitol cities of Sydney and Melbourne but also in medium-sized cities and resort towns where experts are predicting over 5 million tourists a year will visit by the turn of the century.

Visitors to Australia say there is a new spirit in the land, an enthusiasm and excitement that is translating into positive economic effects for the nation. Even though socialism has lurked in the culture for decades, a renewed free enterprise fervor is gripping the land, making Australia more prosperous than at any time in its history. "Aussies feel good about themselves," says Pastor Mark McClimens, who credits much of the change to the spiritual revival that is sweeping the land.

Meanwhile, in New Zealand, the promise of spiritual renewal is touching a country that one internationally-known Christian leader says "could go Marxist at any time unless a mighty Christian revival washes the land clean." Maranatha Campus Ministries has accepted the challenge to help change the nation: a team of 10 Americans, led by pastor Bob Muni, is now surrounded by a band of young, enthusiastic new believers who are preaching on campus and sharing Jesus Christ in classrooms, cafeterias and in their homes.

Christians who came to the campus during the Auckland outreach were amazed by the openness of unbelievers who wanted to hear the gospel. Pastor Muni says he wants to bring New Zealand back to its spiritual moorings, and believes his core group of 45 are making an impact on the nation even though the campus fellowship has been active for less than a year.

The young people in the Auckland church have a passion to impact the world. Angela McGrath, 21, a freshman from England studying at the University of Auckland, says she wants to "restore the education system in New Zealand to godly principles." Presently, Angela says feminists and lesbians are running the teacher's college where she is enrolled. "We are raising up a new generation of Christian leaders in every area of life," she added.

Nineteen-year-old engineering student David Senn watched Muni and evangelist Ken Dew preach boldly in the student union quad area during last summer's outreach. He gave his life to Christ as a result, and now stands in the same spot to preach his own messages. Senn commented: "I want to see us in student government next year to raise God's standard on the campus."

Larry Goodall, 21, a recent mechanical engineering graduate, is working for the government "to be a shining light." Goodall and dozens of other students say the campus was impacted by Maranatha's summer outreach. "When the Maranatha team arrived, it shook the campus," reported Megan Hughes, an 18-year old freshman majoring in science. "I was one of the people who was totally adamant that I would not get 'saved'! But I realized there was more to life than partying and drinking. I realized I had not gone to that meeting by chance. God had drawn me!" Megan says she wants to travel and witness to people all over the world about Jesus Christ. Right now, however, she admits there is much missionary work to be done at Auckland University.

But things are just beginning in New Zealand. Ken Dew and a team of young Maranatha evangelists will hit the Auckland campus once again in July of this year. If you are interested in being part of this venture, plus a 20-day evangelism thrust in Sydney and Melbourne, Australia, write: Maranatha Missions, P.O. Box 1799, Gainesville, FL 32602.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Australia - Prayer at Capital

7/88

CANBERRA, Australia (EP) - Forty thousand Christians from around Australia held a "National Gathering" for prayer at the capital May 7-8 for the opening of the new Parliament House, making a public statement and praying for the nation and the deliberations which will take place in the new building. The new Parliament House was officially opened on May 9 by Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth.

The theme for the national gathering was "Reconciliation - Justice - Mercy - Compassion: And they were all gathered together in one place with one accord." Participants carried banners and signs indicating the places from which they had traveled to attend the gathering, and making statements for their cause such as, "Australia, you belong to Jesus" and "Know God, know life: No God, no life." A number of church leaders carried a wooden cross.

After noon on May 7, the people formed a complete circle around the Parliament House, a distance of 3.5 kilometers. After prayer, they faced the building and sang hymns.

Later that afternoon one of the torches from the "Target 2000: Great Commission Torch Run" was brought to the gathering. David Hodgson, 17, of Canberra, ran the flaming torch to the gathering and used it to light another flame which could be seen all around the area. The torch had been brought from the "Washington for Jesus" prayer rally held in the U.S. on April 29.

The original torch was lit on Easter Sunday (April 3) on the Mount of Ascension in Israel, and was used to light several torches that are now being carried by relay teams across all continents over the next 18 months.

The weekend gathering concluded with a 7 a.m. church service held on the lawns in front of the new Parliament House. The service, led by Lt. Col. Ian Begley, the National Secretary of Australia for the Salvation Army, was attended by about 20,000. "Never in my 30 years of ministry have I ever seen such unity of purpose," declared Begley.

At the end of the gathering, many participants left wearing badges that read: "We opened New Parliament House with Prayer."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Baguio City, Philippines experiences revival

BAGUIO CITY, Philippines (FR) - Baguio City, dubbed the summer capital of the Philippine Islands as well as the psychic center of the nation, is experiencing its first true spiritual revival. "The psychics use snakes for healings," said Alden Manamtam, an evangelist with Maranatha Campus Ministries, "and they have conducted healings that have been documented by medical doctors." The psychics are world-renowned for healing tumors and other miracles.

However, Baguio is now witnessing the supernatural miraculous power of God - rather than a demonic counterfeit. Manamtam led a team of Filipinos and Australians into Baguio in late February to minister to university students. Miraculous healings took place nightly during the outreach meetings which were held in the Lion's Club and the Baguio Community Center, the largest auditorium in the city. "A girl with a deformed neck was healed," said Manamtam. She had never seen a miracle and was overwhelmed that God would do a miracle for her. "She was so touched that she cried for half an hour." Students were also healed of bronchitis, allergies, heart murmurs, and other ailments.

The team held "Campus 89" meetings with Joe Fabergas, a well-known contemporary Filipino musician along with popular Indonesian recording artist Bram Manusama. "A karate fighter who was very violent was saved," Manamtam added. Manamtam led the team for the first two weeks and was followed by Maranatha evangelist Rice Broocks. During one of Broocks' meetings, Jett Bunay, the president of the University of Baguio's student council, was saved. "Rice boldly told him that he was running away from God," said Jojo Henson, pastor of the Baguio fellowship, "and he came forward and gave his life to Jesus."

Bunay surprised his political opponents by challenging them to follow Jesus, and several responded and became Christians. About 120 were baptized recently, and are joining the new Maranatha Church in Baguio," said Henson. The church is reaching out to St. Louis University, University of the Philippines, Baguio Colleges Foundation, the University of Baguio and Pines College.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

The Baltic States: United for Independence?

By Jay Rogers
6/90

The Baltic nations of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania renewed a pre-World War II alliance last month in an attempt to break away from the domination from the Soviet Union.

At a summit, the presidents of the three nations coordinated their separatist policies hoping that a united front would shatter the resistance of the Soviet Union to their attempt of establishing separate nations. Lithuanian President Vytautas Landsbergis cited a Lituanian proverb after the summit - One drop of water cannot break a stone, but many drops can. "This joint drop of water is really important," he said.

The newly formed council called for Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev and President George Bush to put their case on the agenda of the upcoming arms negotiations in Washington. The three presidents also asked for their republics to have full membership in the United Nations and to join the Helsinki peace process.

The alliance is a revival of a 1934 Baltic Council created under an agreement of "unity and cooperation" when the republics were independent. The Baltic States were occupied by Soviet troops during the confrontation with Nazi Germany. Soviet leader Josef Stalin later forcefully absorbed the three republics. Unlike the nations of the Warsaw pact, Estonia, Lithuania and Latvia have been denied their right to a sovereign government, although no western country has ever recognized their annexation by the Soviet Union.

In the United States, there is a growing dissatisfaction among conservatives with President Bush's reticence to strongly address the Baltic issue by denouncing Soviet domination. This rising discontentment loomed large during a recent meeting of the Heritage Foundation, a Washington based coalition, in which Heritage vice president Burton Yale Pines and other panel members voiced their displeasure with Bush.

It is a widely held belief that Bush is withholding support for the Baltic States in an attempt to lure Gorbachev toward an arms reduction agreement. The inevitable secession of the Baltic States is a grave threat to Gorbachev's proposed intention to revive the failing economy of the Soviet Union through his policy of perestroika.

Gorbachev's reluctance to release the Baltic States is understandable. A secession of the Baltic nations would likely cause a chain reaction within Soviet republics. The Ukraine would be the next nation to declare national sovereignty making it the largest nation in Europe with a population of 50 million people. The Moslem territories of inner Asia along with Armenia, Azerbaijan and Georgia would likely follow with their own demands for freedom.

Gorbachev would be left with the core of the Soviet Union and the Siberian states in the newly revamped office of president which affords him the power of a dictator. Gorbachev would remain powerful, but not powerful enough to compete with the United States and its Western allies.

Hence the incredulity of American conservatives: it is incomprehensible that Bush is not taking this opportunity to openly denounce the Soviet Union's long oppression of the Baltic people and other ethnic minorities within the Soviet Union. The Baltic States are in the process of seceding and President George Bush stands in a place of perfect safety in verbally attacking Gorbachev's oppression of these freedom loving people.

Freedom loving people everywhere would reap a great advantage from an American President who would courageously stand with them in their noble cause of throwing off the yoke of their oppressors.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Baltic States Cry for Freedom

10/89

In the Soviet republics of Estonia, Lithuania and Latvia, a nationalistic fervor has been growing so quickly that the Kremlin, vacillating between Gorbachev's perestroika policy and resistance to the perceived threat of the Baltic states' secession, has been unable to keep pace with the demand for reform.

"For years we have gotten used to speaking of the party's monopoly on power," explains Communist Party leader Vaino Valjas, "We have forgotten the principle that the party has power only as long as the people trust it."

The three westernmost Soviet states, which border Poland and the Baltic sea, have been pushing toward reform more strenuously this past year and they appear to be intent on securing national sovereignty. Those within the Communist Party's leadership have seen this trend begin with Gorbachev's reform policies and then accelerate quickly.

There are many, including Valjas, who see this trend moving toward an inevitable conclusion. Valjas states, "Our ideal is an independent, sovereign Estonia within the Soviet Union or within a federation of sovereign republics."

In the two other Baltic republics, there is a similar analysis from political leaders. Ivars Kezbers, the Latvian Ideology Secretary, foresees "a free republic in a free Soviet Union." Vladimir Berezov, the Lithuanian Second Secretary says, "Our common goal is independence, even if the ways of getting there are different."

Political change has been quickly sweeping through Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia. Gorbachev's campaign for revitalizing the Soviet economy has been greeted with enthusiasm in the Baltic states, but the people have taken this notion one step beyond reform. In order to insure autonomy, each Baltic republic has already established political parties which have progressively adopted Gorbachev's policy of perestroika and have then moved beyond, breaking free of communist ideology.

The Christian community has been influential in the establishment of a force which promises to erase communist ideology from party politics and to lead the way in the creation of sovereign states. The Estonian Christian Union, the Latvian National Independence Movement, and the Lithuanian Party of Democrats have espoused the deeply nationalistic feelings of the Baltic people and have promised to work toward complete independence from the Kremlin's influence.

Many Latvians and Estonians are Lutherans; and Roman Catholics make up over half of the Lithuanian population. It is among these and other Christian groups that spiritual revival has been occurring with greater fervency than in any other place in Europe. According to one American missionary, the Soviet Union is on the verge of an awakening of unprecedented proportion akin to the Great Welsh Revival at the turn of this century.

At the end of the summer, 18,000 people attended a three day "Gospel Youth Festival '89" in Tallinn, Estonia. The three day campaign was led by a team of 75 from the United States, England, Scotland, Finland, and Poland. A gospel music concert featuring Scott Wesley Brown and Sheila Walsh was organized by Youth for Christ International and Outreach for Christ International at the request of Estonian Christian leaders.

"We had complete freedom to sing Christian songs and give invitations for persons to confess their faith," said YFC President Jim Groen. According to the outreach leaders, about 1,800 came forward to make public confessions of faith. The outreach team also organized street meetings, distributed posters and pamphlets, and was covered by the local newspapers and television news. Prior to their arrival in Tallinn, the team held rallies in Warsaw, Helsinki, Leningrad, and Latvia. A similar event is planned for next summer with a special Christmas presentation in December.

The Baltic States have been in the forefront of a move of the Holy Spirit which will transform the make up of the Soviet Union. One of the strongest cries for freedom has come from the churches of the three dispossessed Baltic nations.

In Lithuania, the main support for reform has clearly come from the Christian community. One year ago, Algirdas Brazauskas received a standing ovation as he proclaimed, on the eve of the Lithuanian National Front's founding congress, that the Vilnius Cathedral would be returned to the Roman Catholic Church.

The insistence of the communist government on promoting Marxist atheism has only spawned a greater mistrust among the people of the Kremlin's authority. The restrictions against the Church are viewed by the Baltic people as an attack on freedom. This has made them more sympathetic than ever to the message of liberty found in the gospel and has created a nationalistic uprising which is destined to overthrow the yoke of totalitarianism.

* Last May, the Latvian Popular Front met with leaders of Latvian exile organizations in France to create slogans and programs for December's local elections.

* In early June, members of the Lithuanian delegation walked out of the Kremlin's Palace of Congresses in protest of Gorbachev's plan to create a new Committee for Constitutional Supervision.

* At the end of August, the Kremlin issued a statement which proposed a policy which would grant greater freedom to all 15 Soviet republics and suggested that the 1922 treaty creating the Soviet Union and its government should be severely revised. The written statement openly declared "a need for radical transformation in the Soviet federation."

These political events have been fueled by emotion coming with the 50th anniversary of the Soviet takeover of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania during World War Two. The existing domination of the Baltic states by the Soviet government is a leftover condition of post-WWII Europe. "We must solve the Baltic question," urges Estonian Popular Front leader Rein Veidemann, "and recognize the fact that we were first occupied and then annexed."

During the anniversary of the Molotov-Ribbentrop pact, a treaty between Josef Stalin and Nazi Germany which gave the Soviet Union control of the Baltic states after Hitler's take-over of Poland, Lithuanians appeared with posters exposing the still-existing Nazi-Soviet agreement.

In a show of national patriotism, the Latvians, Estonians and Lithuanians once again have been displaying their historic flags in demonstrations for independence. Other banners read: "How Long Will the Red Army Be Master of Our Land?" and "Moscow! Hands Off From Estonia."

At the end of August, two million people linked hands across the Baltic states from Tallinn to Vilnius, demanding freedom from Soviet rule. In protest of the Soviet-Nazi pact, a document from the Baltic people was issued to the Kremlin which read in part:

"The USSR has infringed on the historical right of the Baltic nations to self-determination, presented ruthless ultimatums to the Baltic republics, occupied them with overwhelming military force, and under conditions of military occupation and heavy political terror carried out their violent annexations."

The social upheaval which has occurred in the Baltic states, Soviet Georgia, and Armenia, has made Soviet officials seriously grapple with the increasing cry for freedom.

In their push for liberty, the thinking of the people has been moving ahead so fast that newly established political parties have had difficulty keeping abreast. And in the midst of the political activity there are new ideas emerging which are even more radical than Gorbachev's policy of perestroika or the emergence of the Baltic states' splinter parties.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Billy Graham Draws Record Breaking Crowds in London

9/89

LONDON, England (EP) - Evangelist Billy Graham withdrew his scheduled appearance at the Lausanne Congress on World Evangelization in Manila, on July 11-20, in order to extend his stay in England where he drew record breaking crowds.

Crowds jammed two central London locations each night during the first six meetings Graham held. Attendance records were broken on three consecutive nights. Over 29,000 packed the Crystal Palace National Sports Center for a series of extended meetings. The crowd broke a stadium record set in 1982, when 27,000 came to hear an address given by Pope John Paul II.

Graham has traditionally allowed last minute opportunities to preach the gospel take precedence over prescheduled appearances before Christians. Graham sent a videotaped address to Lausanne where he was scheduled to be the keynote speaker.

The crusade held in London was the largest crowd ever attracted by Billy Graham. "There's a spirit of renewal throughout this country for which many have been praying," he explained. "I've never seen people respond so earnestly, quietly and reverently as we have here."

"We feel there is great momentum," said the Rev. Richard Bewes, rector of one of London's leading Church of England parishes. "It will not be so much of a celebration or even an au revoir, but will go flat out to evangelize and preach the gospel."

Graham's addresses, reaching thousands in attendance and millions via "Liveline" satellite, have been a rallying point for Christian leaders in Britain and have resulted in over 50,000 responses to Graham's invitations to receive Christ as personal savior.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(73002692dd5e7a64e60946be3158e719_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(d5d7044e5caf6907399af2dced8d6ff8_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Breaking Up the Eastern Bloc

By Jay Rogers

3/90

While the winds of change are sweeping through Eastern Europe, the world has watched in awe at the sudden transformation of the Communist Bloc.

Just a short time ago, few people would have believed that communism would fall so suddenly and drastically without the intervention of U.S. military forces. Yet the Iron Curtain, which for so long seemed to be a permanent fixture, has miraculously begun to dismantle itself.

By July, free local or national elections are scheduled to be held by all six of the Soviet Union's Warsaw Pact allies. A return to Stalinist dictatorships is unlikely. As a result of a waning Soviet threat, the United States is expected to make swift cuts in the military force stationed in Europe.

Most people are yet unaware of the role of the Christian Church in bringing change to the Eastern Bloc. A yearning for religious freedom, a right taken for granted in the West, has been at the heart of the cry for freedom in these nations for many years. Christian dissidents have been the most outspoken opponents of communism in Eastern Europe and some are now being exalted as leaders in newly liberated nations.

Our national press has not reported the role of the Eastern European Church in toppling communist governments; we have missed one of the most exciting stories of the past decade. In every nation, Christians have performed acts of heroism and, in some instances, have directly brought the downfall of communist governments. As the rushing wind of the Holy Spirit has been sweeping through Europe, God's servants have been used mightily to vindicate the oppressed people of the Communist Bloc.

In Eastern Europe, the Church has withstood the onslaught of communism for several decades. As a long standing symbol of resistance, the Church has gained momentum as the people, shaking off their chains of repression, have rallied around the cross of Jesus Christ - the one force they believe has the power to overcome totalitarianism. In nation after nation, we see that Christians have had an integral role in sparking revolution.

"Now the Lord is the Spirit; and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty" (2 Corinthians 3:17).

Estonia

In Estonia, the Church is having more of an impact than ever before. Ethnic Estonians look to Church leaders as having a voice of authority that can be trusted. Many evangelical Protestant leaders have been intimately involved in Estonia's independence movement from the very beginning. In fact, Estonia's reformation has become known as "the singing revival" because of the many nationalistic songs that are sung at independence rallies. One song, "God Save Estonia," has become the theme of the independence movement. As in the other two Baltic States, there is an understanding among the people that only God can bring about freedom.

Latvia

A mixture of Orthodox, Evangelical, Catholic and Lutheran believers have united in an evangelistic thrust to transform their nation. There is more religious freedom in the capital city of Riga than any other place in the Soviet Union. Christian television operates without surveillance and broadcasts to the Russian city of Leningrad. Evangelistic street meetings are now common and there is a great openness among the people to hear the Gospel. As the Christian revival is growing in Latvia, nationalistic fervor is encouraged among the people.

Lithuania

In the most outspoken of the Baltic states in maintaining their right to secede from the Soviet Union, Spirit-filled Catholic believers have been at the forefront of the independence movement. Long repressed and forced to meet in the underground, Lithuanian Catholics have displayed a genuine revivalistic fervor in the midst of persecution for many years. The Lithuanian autonomy movement has boldly stated that they will no longer accept a one-party rule and have rejected the authority of Moscow. Cathedral Square in Vilnius has become the traditional meeting spot for independence rallies as cries for "Freedom!" ascend toward heaven. A prophecy given recently in a Lithuanian church proclaimed that Lithuania was destined by God to become the first of the Soviet republics to become completely independent.

Poland

Poland is one of the most obvious examples of how the Church has been instrumental in toppling communism. Oasis, a charismatic revival movement among young people, has added fuel to the Solidarity movement. In a nation that is 90% Catholic, there has been a vigorous evangelical movement and many Polish people are Spirit-filled believers. Lech Walesa, leader of the Poland's trade union movement, claims to be a believer and has involved many Church leaders in Solidarity. According to American missionary Gordon Wright, Lech Walesa has encouraged a Catholic priest who is prominent in the charismatic renewal movement to involve himself in the Solidarity party in an evangelistic role.

East Germany

The communist government of the East Germany long held a policy of repression toward the Church, especially toward evangelicals. Last November, however, with the dismantling of the communist government and the collapse of the Berlin Wall, four million visas were granted, feeding the hope that the Gospel would be able to freely enter East Germany. Occurring simultaneously with these events, there was a great prayer revival in the East German churches. Last year, thousands met to pray for freedom. Even as Honecker's troops advanced on demonstrating crowds in Leipzig, Christian pastors led East Germans in prayers of intercession. A volatile situation was held in check as the troops refused to open fire on civilians averting a situation that would have been similar to China's Tiananmen Square massacre last spring.

Czechoslovakia

The Communist Party's fall from power in Czechoslovakia has been accentuated by the appointment of several Christians to the new government. Jan Carnogursky, a Slovak lawyer who played a leading role as a Catholic layman in the Church's resistance to the government, was recently appointed as the new deputy premier. Dr. Josef Hromadka, an evangelical theologian of the Church of Czech Brethren, has been appointed as a Vice President. Last November, Hromadka urged crowds demonstrating in Wenceslas Square not to lose sight of Christian values as they pushed for freedom. Other Christians appointed to the new government include Minister of Health, Pavel Klener, and Vice President Francis Reindell. Authorities have signalled the end of government restrictions on the Church in Czechoslovakia.

Hungary

Hungary stands as the Eastern European nation that has won the most spiritual freedom in the past year. Latin American evangelist, Luis Palau, held a large evangelistic crusade in Budapest last spring, leading 1200 to Christ. Billy Graham followed Palau in the summer speaking to a crowd of 90,000 Hungarians in a soccer stadium. A large number of Hungarians responded to Graham's message; it was the largest evangelistic meeting in Eastern European history. Political changes that have occurred in Hungary have been smooth and without violent repercussions.

Romania

Romania holds the best example a revolution that was sparked through the direct influence of the Church. According to a Time magazine report, "A Revolution's Unlikely Spark" (Jan. 1, 1990), the Rev. Laszlo Tokes, of the Reformed Church, drew the wrath of the communist authorities after his repeated denunciations of Ceausescu's regime. In November, Tokes was beaten and stabbed by government thugs, yet refused to give into church officials who ordered him to transfer to a less volatile part of Romania. When a court order was obtained for his conviction, hundreds of supporters formed a human chain around Toke's building to protect him. This triggered the crackdown that helped to inspire the nationwide demonstrations that toppled Ceausescu. Tokes, a once obscure minister, has joined the ranks of Eastern Europe's foremost fighters for freedom.

Bulgaria

One of the most repressed of all Eastern European nations, Bulgaria has joined the rest of the Warsaw Pact nations as crowds of over 50,000 gather to sing and cheer themselves into a pro-democracy fervor. The great yearning for freedom and more radical democratic reforms has made an impact on the communist government. Petar Beron, a leading spokesman for the Union of Democratic Forces, recently read a list of demands from the steps of Aleksandr Nevski Cathedral calling for free elections. The Communist Party has already voted to abolish its monopoly on power and has adopted a number of reform measures including freedom of religion.

What does the future hold for communism?

Many remaining communist governments are presently viewing the growing democracy movement with shock and amazement. China's Li Peng regime has been reportedly stunned by the news of the Romanian dictator Ceausescu's trial and execution. The similarity between Ceausescu's brutal use of force against the Romanian people and the Chinese government's massacre of students in Tiananmen Square ends only with the demise of the Romanian leader. Political analysts speculate that the Chinese government has only one or two years before a fall from power occurs.

Other nations, long dedicated to the ideals of communism, are seemingly destined to be shaken by the emergence of pro-democracy forces. Other European nations, long dominated by the Soviet Union such as the Ukraine, Moldavia, Yugoslavia, and Albania have also experienced a movement toward democratic reforms. In addition to these European nations, observers of world politics are looking to the nations of Vietnam, North Korea, Cuba, Nicaragua and Libya to experience political transformations in the early 1990s.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Christian Leader of Uganda Pledges to Restore Justice

4/89

KAMPALA, Uganda (EP) - Yoweri K. Museveni, the leader of Uganda, says he is a born-again Christian, and promises to make every attempt to stop the violence and bloodshed in his African nation. The promise and testimony of faith came during an interview with Dan Wooding, an international Christian journalist.

"The violence will be stopped with justice - by punishing those who commit violence wrongfully," said Museveni, who said he has no doubt that Uganda will again become "the Pearl of Africa."

Wooding has followed the political events of Uganda and their impact on the Christian church there since the days of Idi Amin and Milton Obote, rulers who are credited with the deaths of up to one million of their countrymen.

Just days before the interview, Idi Amin had tried to slip back into Uganda, but had been detected in Zaire and, reports have stated, fled to Saudi Arabia. The government of Saudi Arabia "has not informed us" whether Amin is in that country, said Museveni, who said he is not concerned about what Amin, known as the "black Hitler of Africa," could do once back in the country. Museveni said that, if caught, Amin would face trial in Uganda.

Museveni explained that although now he only occasionally attends church, he was once "actually a fanatic." He told of a commitment he made to Christ at an early age and said he used to preach at Scripture Union meetings in his home town of Mbarara. "My faith is strong," he said.

Museveni said there is now total freedom to practice faith in Uganda. Under Obote and Amin, the Christian church had to meet underground and many Christians were killed for their involvement with the church, which was seen as a subversive organization and a threat to the government. Museveni said that under his rule, the Christians "come and sing all night. They dance a little. We have to tell them to respect the rights of others."

Museveni was interviewed during a trip to the U.S. Other Christians traveled with Museveni, including the Rev. Yona Okoth, the Anglican Archbishop, Emmanuel Cardinal K. Nsubuga, the Roman Catholic Archbishop, and Hope Kivengere, daughter of the late Bishop Festo Kivegere.

Since Museveni took office, there has been "freedom of speech and freedom of worship," said Okoth. "The churches are completely packed every Sunday. So we do praise God for that." The Archbishop, who fled the country in 1977, said he is grateful to still be alive. "I was supposed to die with the late Archbishop Luwum," he said, referring to Janani Luwum, who was said to have been shot through the mouth by Amin. Other Christian leaders fled the country during the time Amin pronounced death sentences on religious leaders for allegedly being involved in a plot to bring guns into the country.

The late Kivengere, who died last year of leukemia, wrote a book entitled I Love Idi Amin about the forgiveness and love a Christian must have even for his persecutors.

"I think I love him the same," said Okoth. "It is very difficult thing, but as a Christian, as we follow the footsteps of our Lord Jesus Christ, we remember at the cross that He prayed that the Lord would forgive them because they didn't know what they were doing. So we forgive Amin, because he did not know what he was doing."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Christian Unity Triumphs Over Ethnic Hostility in former Yugoslavia

9/92

BUDAPEST, Hungary - In a sign of unity delegates from former Yugoslavia republics Slovenia, Croatia and Macedonia, invited by delegates from Serbia, join them to sing, "We are one in God, let the whole world know that Jesus Christ saves." All were participants in a training conference in Budapest, Hungary, in preparation for evangelist Billy Graham Mission World satellite extension throughout Europe from Essen, Germany, March 17-21, 1993, to more than 1000 locations in over 40 languages.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Peace Talks Will Spread Christianity in Islamic World

2/92

OXFORD, England (WEIS) - As a result of the Middle East peace talks in Madrid, people in the Middle East could become more open to the Christian gospel, observed the international director of the Lausanne Committee for World Evangelization.

Tom Houston of Oxford, England, said it was a near miracle that peace talks could be held at all, and some Arabs are more open toward Christianity than before. "There is a close identification in the thinking of Muslims between 'what is Christian' and 'what is Western' (particularly American)," said Houston following the peace talks.

"This is because in Islam, the state and religion cannot be separated. Muslims thus imagine it is the same with any country and its religion, including the West and Christianity. So if America or the West is the enemy, then Christianity is also automatically the enemy."

Houston said that during the Madrid peace talks, Americans appeared to be trying not to have double standards in the Israeli/Palestinian conflict by comparison with the Iraq/Kuwait conflict. "This helps to improve the perception of Americans, and consequently Christianity."

Houston, former president of World Vision International, added that relief aid channelled through Christian churches to Iraq and Jordan in recent months emphasizes that Christians care in practical ways about the suffering people of the Middle East.

In an analysis of the current status of world evangelization entitled Scenario Status of World Evangelization, 1991-2000, Houston said that the Persian Gulf war earlier this year changed dramatically the conditions in the Middle East and the Islamic world as a whole.

"There is much greater and somewhat more friendly contact between many of the nations of the Middle East and those in the West," Houston said.

A prime example of that change is the coalition of Middle Eastern nations which came together in 1990/91. "The neutrality of Iran, and the alliance of Turkey, Egypt, Syria, Saudi Arabia and other Gulf and Islamic states with the USA, UK, France, Italy and other countries in Europe brought contact and cooperation in a way that could not have been predicted," Houston said.

A key factor in the openness of Middle Eastern people to Christianity is likely to be the degree in which democratization progresses in the region. "If it goes well, then religious liberty may not be far behind and that could lead to a new hearing for the gospel."

Houston said the two forces of growing Muslim Fundamentalism and growing secularization are working in opposite directions for and against democratization. Secularization in the Middle East is placing an emphasis on literacy, education, and material prosperity, and this leads to democratization, Houston observed. The net effect of the war will be to strengthen the forces of secularization in the region and work for democratization.

In contrast, however, Muslim Fundamentalism with its drive to apply Shariah law will continue. The divisions between Shias and Sunni within Islam will be perpetuated, but secularization will take its toll on both.

"There is likely to be some revulsion to what Ayatollah Khomeini and Saddam Hussein have stood for, but it will take time to see how this will be expressed. All this will take place in a very turbulent atmosphere and Christians will need to be very bold and very brave to get in there and share the Good News," Houston said. "Those who do will need a deep understanding of Islam as it is today, sympathy for Muslims, and patience in the process witnessing for Christ."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

First Church Building Opened in Communist North Korea

5/89

HONG KONG (NNI) - For the first time since the founding of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea in 1948, a building specifically for the purpose of Christian worship has been built. It was opened for use in November 1988, and visited for the first time by a foreign group of believers in late January.

The church is located in the center of the capital, Pyongyang, and is run by the Korean Christian Federation (KCF), an organization of obscure origins that boasts 5,000 members and 500 pastors. Believed to have been founded in the early 1980s, the members of the KCF have until now been using private homes for worship.

The new church, which seats 200, was full for the service attended by the foreign visitors, although they reported that all those in attendance were very old - ample evidence for tour guides who touted that "only those born prior to the 1948 revolution believe in Christ." The visitors said they were not permitted to mix with the congregation and one reported, "I saw no Bibles there, save the one of the preacher's." Another said, "It was very un-Korean, especially when the prayers from the congregation were invited; the people stood and read their prayers."

Despite the obvious lack of spontaneity, the meaning of the occasion was not lost on the visitors. Said one, "After history's most virulent anti-religious campaign, this church building signifies that authorities are resigned to the long-term presence of Christianity." He added, "After all, if religion is supposed to be nearly extinct, why bother to provide brand new facilities like this for a dying phenomenon?"

Prior to the Communist Revolution in 1948, Pyongyang was Asia's most Christianized city, and was referred to as "Asia's Jerusalem." Out of a population of 400,000, over 50,000 people were believers. In fact, throughout the north there were 1,500 churches open as revival spread rapidly in several waves. After 1948, all churches were closed. Soon after, the civil war destroyed the church buildings and the few that were left intact were bulldozed down as the atheistic campaign under Kim Il Sung intensified in the 1950s.

Hong Kong observers are hoping, however, that the building and opening of this church may be the beginning of a more tolerant religious policy in what is still the world's most closed society.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

The Collapse of Communism

What is Behind the Force of Change in World Governments?

By Jay Rogers

4/90

What is the significance of all the changes in Eastern Bloc countries? In just a few months the iron curtain has fallen; free democratic elections are occurring in every communist country; the Soviet Union is on the brink of collapse; the entire communist system is about to self-destruct.

The Bible tells us that every government that exalts itself against the kingdom of God will collapse. As communist governments have vanished, a great spiritual vacuum has been created in Eastern Europe. Communism has been pushed out in the East and, for the time being, the decadence of the West (pornography, materialism, etc.) is being held in check.

Suspensions about the "true intentions" of Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev are appearing less worrisome every day as reports of political changes in Europe indicate that socialism is losing ground. Elections in East Germany, Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia scored great victories for more democratic governments. Gorbachev appears to be a man propelled by a force more powerful than himself. As political power is divested to the people, they have chosen to make socialistic communism a thing of the past.

In the midst of the new freedom, many Eastern Europeans are turning to a new faith in Jesus Christ. Ministers who have been prepared by suffering and persecution are being raised up to labor in the newly opened mission fields of their native lands. Every country behind the now fallen iron curtain is wide open to relief from the West, but more importantly a "Christian Renaissance" is occurring in nations long repressed by totalitarianism.

The Rev. Laszlo Tokes, the Hungarian pastor who sparked the Romanian revolution, was in preparation for a show trial and expected to be executed the day that Nicolae Ceausescu was overthrown. The turn of events is viewed by Tokes as "divine intervention."

"Eastern Europe is not just a political revolution but a religious renaissance," said Tokes. Yet while Tokes put God at the head of the freedom revolution, the American media is missing the message. Few members of the American press have chosen to report the spiritual dimensions of the changes in Europe.

Another example of Christian leadership in Eastern Europe is in the nation of Czechoslovakia. One year ago, Vaclav Havel was a leading Czech dissident; today he is their president. In a New Year's day address, Havel referred to "Jesus," the "Christian spirit," and Czechoslovakia as being the "spiritual crossroads of Europe."

In Poland, a revival movement among the churches was associated with the overturn of the communist government. Lech Walesa, leader of Poland's Solidarity Party, in a recent interview by the Christian Broadcasting Network said, "It would be impossible for Poland to go back to communism."

In East Germany, the push for freedom began in a series of prayer meetings in Gethsemane Church. The anti-communist sentiment grew to such a fervor last fall that the people were able to force the government to relinquish their power. On March 10 - a cold, rainy day - 15,000 West Germans met at the recently opened Brandenburg gate to hear church leaders remind the people that at the core of recent reform developments was the hand of God.

Although Eastern European activists view God as being behind the freedom revolution, the American public has been deemed as unfit by the press to know this.

Central America and Cuba

The demise of Daniel Ortega's regime, which was voted out of power last month, signals the end of communism's foothold in Central America. Nicaragua, which divided Central America and caused controversy in the United States for many years, has been returned to a democratic government supported by the people.

Here again, the press widely misrepresented the sentiments of the Nicaraguan people. The day before the Nicaraguan election virtually every national news service predicted that Ortega would win the election by a wide margin. Yet the overwhelming mandate of the people was to overturn the communist government.

In Guatemala, presidential elections are scheduled to take place at the end of the year. Once again, the American press has missed the role of Christians in politics. In the last 35 years, the number of evangelical Christians in Guatemala has grown from 72,000 to almost 3 million.

The political leadership of Guatemala has also been influenced by the revival. Two of the candidates, Rios Montt and Jorge Serrano Elias are evangelical Christians. General Rios Montt, the first Latin American president to openly declare himself a born-again believer, is running for office again. Despite a 1982 coup which forced him to leave office, Montt is extremely popular among the people.

Montt is generally credited with saving the country from anarchy during his short term in office and is supported by those who are weary of current government corruption. "I am a Christian and the people trust in me as I trust in them," explained Montt. "They know I'm not the one that rules, but He who lives in me - Christ."

Although controversy in the United States over El Salvador is no less heated than it was in the early 1980s, significant changes have occurred which have rarely appeared in the reports of the American press. The new government of President Alfredo Cristiani includes a number of evangelical leaders in key cabinet positions who are often called upon by their president for prayer and counseling.

One of Cristiani's adviser's, Jorge Martinez, Vice-Minister of Agriculture, explains the growing influence of the church in El Salvador, "The evangelical church has kept El Salvador from collapsing. The Church is the yeast which has given form to this country by helping the needy, by respecting authorities and as such making itself very much present in national life. The church has made an impact on every level of this country's social structure. "

Political analysts are now looking to Cuba's staunch defender of communism, Fidel Castro, for signs of political change. Castro, who is in his seventies, has been the target of attempted assassinations over the years, which he has blamed on the United States. However, if the pattern of events hold true in Cuba, it will be the people of Cuba and not an outside force which will depose Castro.

The Church has been growing in Cuba over the years and there has been a strong evangelical revival which is poised to break onto the political scene. The effect that Cuban Christians will have on government may play a great role in the downfall of communism and help the United States to regain a valuable ally.

What is the force of change that is behind the downfall of tyranny? Without intervention from the United States, many tyrannical world governments are being reformed or are being dramatically crushed by an unseen force.

What does God's word have to say about it? The prophet Daniel foretold of this very hour when he saw the final collapse of tyrannical governments which are opposed to the rule of Christ (see Daniel 2). God Himself is crushing these governments into powder. God is opening the doors, pulling down all the walls and removing the curtain to allow for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the whole world.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Crisis in Iraq

By Jay Rogers
9/90

In the wake of the collapse of Communism, the free world faces a new threat - Islam.

The world, once divided between the Free World, the Communist World and the Third World, now reassesses its geopolitical landscape. Europe has now been at peace longer than any other time in its history. The United States is shifting its strong military spending toward economic competition with Japan and Europe. The Soviet Union seems unlikely to pursue its past course of expansionism in favor of saving its fast failing economy.

While the rest of the world seems less likely to resolve its differences through military force, the focus of regional conflicts now shifts to the Islamic countries of the Middle East.

When Iraq recently invaded the Persian Gulf sheikdom of Kuwait, previously unthought of questions were posed. A trans-national Islamic movement has emerged which, if continued unconstrained, may perplex our State Department during the rest of the 1990s.

Already, the news media has labeled Saddam Hussein a "strongman." Ironically, Hussein's rule may indeed parallel that of another strongman - King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon - whose empire was vanquished by the forces of God long ago.

Middle Eastern nations are now repeating a similar course of history as taken by many nations of the world before their culture was inundated by the gospel of Jesus Christ. The Arab world is currently arising from a feudal state reminiscent of Europe during the Middle Ages.

Significantly, an event which paralleled this emergence from feudalism was the spread of biblical Christianity throughout Europe during the Reformation. Nationalistic wars mirror a spiritual struggle hidden beneath the tumultuous history of the political world.

In the next ten years, the world may see a spiritual assault against Islam in the form of a spreading Christian influence in Arabic nations. A spiritual awakening among Arabic people may be the only solution to the crisis in the Middle East.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

East Germany's Church

1/89

BAD BLANKENBURG, East Germany (EHC)- Eighty Christian leaders from 19 communist nations gathered in East Germany last September for an unprecedented conference that could have a far-reaching impact on evangelism in communist nations. Dick Eastman, president of Every Home for Christ (EHC), was among a group of only five Christian leaders from western nations who also attended the historic gathering.

"The purpose of the conference was for Christian leaders from these socialist nations to discuss evangelism in a socialist context," Eastman reported after his return to the United States. "In other words, they addressed the problem of how to carry out the function of the Great Commission under governments that are, for the most part, atheistic." The theme of the conference was "To Follow Jesus in Today's World."

The East German government apparently gave the Evangelical Alliance in East Germany and World Evangelical Fellowship (WEF) permission to organize the conference as an expression of the new Soviet policy of glasnost (openness) that is being promoted by Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev. Christian leaders, on the other hand, see the conference as a miraculous answer to prayer.

"Two or three years ago a gathering such as this would never have been possible," Eastman continued. "This gave me great hope because it convinced me that the many years of praying for God to open doors into the communist lands of Eastern Europe and beyond are bringing results."

Eastman met with Christian leaders from Soviet-bloc countries including Poland, Czechoslovakia, East Germany and the Soviet Union. Delegations were also present from such diverse nations as Vietnam, Laos, Angola, Ethiopia, Mozambique and Cuba.

"Very few of these leaders had ever been out of their own countries before," Eastman said. "At the conference they were able to meet with other Christians who experience some of the same difficulties and struggles they face. Many of these brothers had been persecuted in the past and yet they remained faithful to their calling. Everyone was greatly encouraged, and a tremendous spirit of unity resulted from the conference."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(8bba887393ca45b761e5cb49e755e762_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(6bb0e4f14c4133b37d2887cb37e67ddd_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Eastern Europe Opening

5/89

The nations of Eastern Europe, after living in the shadow of Soviet domination for years, are now beginning to experience some of the same openness that the people of the USSR are finding under Mikhail Gorbachev's glasnost policies. And this new freedom is also being paralleled by unprecedented spiritual revival in these Eastern bloc countries.

Christian workers in Eastern Europe believe that 1989 will be a significant year for the spreading of the gospel in the region, according to the information service of the Lausanne Committee for World Evangelization. The optimistic prediction is based on the emergence of new ministries and the increase in political openness.

According to Peter Kuzmic of the Biblijsko Teolski Institute in Yugoslavia, one of Eastern Europe's largest evangelical schools, Romania has become "the Korea of Europe" in terms of its spirituality. "Literally hundreds of thousands have come to the Lord [in Romania] in recent years," Kuzmic told Christianity Today, adding that the church's growth has taken place against a backdrop of poverty.

The World Association for Christian Communication says that efforts are now underway to reach Muslims in Yugoslavia and to establish a ministry in Albania - which is one of the most repressive communist regimes in the world. The Albanian government claims to have wiped out religion within its borders, but Bible smuggling and secret church meetings continue.

The political situation in many of the Eastern bloc countries is now in what appears to be uncontrollable transition. Seventy-five thousand marchers snaked through the streets of Budapest, Hungary, in mid-March of this year shouting "Democracy!" It was the first officially-sanctioned street demonstration since political reform measures allowed for such peaceful protest. Meanwhile, in Czechoslovakia, similar demonstrations have occurred to protest the Soviet military presence in the country. In Poland, the Jaruzelski government and the Solidarity-led opposition agreed to hold elections for a second chamber of parliament which will include non-communist candidates. Jaruzelski stated: "Significant progress is being made to construct parliamentary democracy in Poland."

Newsweek reporter Christopher Ogden, commenting on the winds of change blowing across the region, wrote, "Whole segments of the East bloc, once firmly under the thumb of Soviet orthodoxy, are launched in headlong pursuit of a new political and economic order ... Not since Stalin slammed down the Iron Curtain four decades ago has Europe witnessed such ferment east of the Elbe as that unleashed by Gorbachev's campaign to reshape socialist politics and economics."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(d0262bbe9d2356661a2e89321dfcc781_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(51514032c8ca341817228f39f1307b05_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

The Fallen Star of Islam

By Jay Rogers

2/91

And I saw another angel come down from heaven, having great power, and the earth was lightened with his glory. And he cried mightily with a strong voice, saying, "Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen!"
Revelation 18:1,2

During the past two months, the world has watched as the nations have squared off over a small plot of valuable real estate - Kuwait - the United Nations have declared war on Iraq, a military dictatorship ruled by Saddam Hussein and have boldly demanded: "Get out of Kuwait!"

While some would say that this is a battle for oil, others in the Arab world say that it is a struggle of Islam against "the Great Satan." But from a biblical perspective, this is a struggle of a much wider proportion.

When we speak of Iraq, Kuwait and Iran, nations which have troubled America since the Carter administration, we should understand that these nations encompass lands which once included the ancient kingdoms of the Chaldeans, the Medes and the Persians - known to biblical authors as - Babylon.

The verse in Revelation 18 "Babylon is fallen!" speaks of the ultimate triumph of God's kingdom and gives us an assurance that His glory will one day fill the whole earth. We have seen this process unfold dramatically in our lifetime.

During the past two years, the world has watched as communism - the great enemy of freedom - has fallen. The people of many nations quickly overturned their communist governments in favor of a more democratic representation of their people. Now a confrontation in the Middle East promises to overturn another great power - Islam.

The Muslim people of the world are not the targets of this confrontation. They, too, will be liberated. With communism almost eliminated from the contest for the hearts and minds of the human race, there are only two great remaining forces competing for world dominion - Christianity and Islam.

One ideology teaches that true religion is Christ being formed within the hearts of a community of believers; the other teaches that favor with God is attainable through good conduct, prayers, fasts and pilgrimages.

The essential conflict between these two worldviews is reflected in the view of human nature offered by each. Christianity views man's nature as being essentially wicked; all are weak and unable to please God. We can only continue to cause great evil to happen in the world unless Jesus Christ takes up habitation within our hearts. Islam, on the other hand, teaches that man is capable of pleasing God. Retaining a willful nature, the Muslim is to enforce the dictates of Allah on the unconverted remnant of creation.

The military conflict in the Middle East is only a reflection of a much greater conflict that is happening in the spiritual realm, or, if you are not inclined to think in such terms, it is a battle of ideas or two conflicting worldviews which cannot exist peaceably in the same universe. Both of these two remaining forces insist on total world dominion.

The outcome of the contest is coming quickly to a close. The result of the struggle will be determined by the fact that one group has been instructed that the battle is not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places.

The other company has been taught that power comes through domination; that bloodshed is the key to gaining control. Warfare is relegated to earthly struggles of the armies of the nations against each other.

Historically speaking, the kingdom of Babylon has been in a state of perpetual enmity with Israel. In 534 B.C., the nation of Israel was held captive by the kingdom of Babylon. Daniel the prophet realized that the time for his people's emancipation was drawing near. After many days of fasting, the angel Gabriel appeared to him.

Daniel chapter 10 speaks to us of the unseen battle that is even now raging. Gabriel informed Daniel, "From the first day that you set your heart toward prayer, I came in response to your words. But the prince of the kingdom of Persia withstood me for 21 days. But lo! Michael, one of the chief princes, came to help me."

At the center of this modern war with Iraq, there is spiritual battle which has been raging since the beginning of time. We can be certain that the same angelic and demonic princes are involved. This battle is a contest for the hearts and minds of men which is always focused around God's people, natural Israel and the Church of Jesus Christ.

As God's people pray, Michael the archangel, guardian of Israel, and captain of the Lord's angelic hosts is doing battle with the prince of Persia. This is a spiritual reality that will go unreported by ABC's Nightline and CNN.

When we speak of Babylon, the modern nation of Iraq and the religion of Islam, we are also dealing with the prince of Persia. The outcome of this spiritual battle will likely vanquish this ancient principality; and the spiritual power that is behind the resilience of despotic rulers such as Saddam Hussein will be uprooted and overthrown.

But with this spiritual understanding we should not glory in the fact that there is a physical war that is raging. Nations expend the lives of men and billions of dollars to insure that a tyrannical despot be brought to justice. And there is no doubt that in time - hopefully a short time - he will be. The world will not have to face once again the horrors reminiscent of Nazi Germany, in which millions of Jewish people were tortured and killed.

Understand that the power that is fueling the victorious side of this war is not found in any type of earthly weapon, nuclear or biological. Unseen and unreported by the nightly news, the prayers of millions of God's people, like those of the prophet Daniel, are ascending to heaven and they are breaking the strongholds of demonic princes which have blinded the eyes and captivated the hearts of billions of people.

These prayers are even now forming a breach in heavenly places which is allowing the power of God's kingdom to be unleashed on the earth. This power is going to be made known in love, peace and the knowledge of God in every nation of the world. Someday it will be said in every nation: Jesus Christ is Lord - there is no other.

Understanding this, the outcome of this battle can easily be predicted - Islam will be defeated, the back of the world's largest religion will be broken - and its downfall will take place in a shorter period of time than communism.

Natural Israel and the Church will increase. And millions of Muslims the world over will see at once that their concept of the one, true God - Allah - is not the same as the Father who was revealed through Jesus Christ. When a billion Muslims the world over see the great signs and wonders which are now about to take place, they will call on the name of the Living God - the God revealed through Jesus the only Son of God. And millions of Muslims will be saved.

Governments throughout the Middle East, Africa and Asia will dissolve overnight. Democracies will replace dictatorships; and the resulting freedom of religion will allow a great influx of Christianity, the true salt of the earth, to invade these nations and bring peace - not war - because peace can only be realized when Christ is formed within the hearts of the people.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(5361750c22c4e047a52f4eac1ec2d4cc_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(870f5d5e9c0d57485634be3ecf52f3ca_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Unleashing the Force of Freedom: George Bush Addresses Europe

9/89

MAINZ, West Germany (AP) - President Bush spoke on East-West relations in Mainz, West Germany on May 31. His desire was to appeal not just to "matters of the mind, but of the deeper aspirations of the heart." The following is an excerpt from Bush' address:

I said recently that we're at the end of one era and at the beginning of another. And I noted that in regard to the Soviet Union, our policy is to move beyond containment.

For 40 years, the seeds of democracy in Eastern Europe lay dormant, buried under the frozen tundra of the Cold War. And for 40 years the world has waited for the Cold War to end. And decade after decade, time after time, the flowering human spirit withered from the chill of conflict and oppression. And again the world waited. But the passion for freedom cannot be denied forever. The world has waited long enough. The time is right. Let Europe be whole and free.

In the East, brave men and women are showing us the way. Look at Poland, where solidarity and the Catholic Church have won legal status. The forces of freedom are putting the Soviet status quo on the defensive. In the West, we have succeeded because we have been faithful to our values and our vision. And on the other side of the rusting Iron Curtain, their vision has failed. The Cold War began with the division of Europe. It can only end when Europe is whole.

And today, it is this very concept of a divided Europe that is under siege. And that is why our hopes run high, because the division of Europe is under siege, not by armies, but by the spread of ideas that began here, right here. It was a son of Mainz, Johannes Gutenberg, who liberated the mind of man through the power of the printed word. And that same liberating power is unleashed today in a hundred new forms.

The Voice of America, Deutsche Welle, allow us to enlighten millions deep within Eastern Europe and throughout the world. Television satellites allow us to bear witness from the shipyards of Gdansk to Tiananmen Square. But the momentum for freedom does not just come from the printed word or the television screen. It comes from a single powerful idea - Democracy.

This one idea is sweeping across Eurasia. This one idea is why the Communist world, from Budapest to Beijing, is in ferment. And of course, for the leaders of the East it is not just freedom for freedom's sake. But whatever their motivation, they are unleashing a force they will find difficult to control, the hunger for liberty of oppressed peoples who have tasted freedom.

The nations of Eastern Europe are rediscovering the glories of their national heritage, so let the colors and hues of national culture return to these gray societies of the East. Let Europe forego a peace of tension for a peace of trust, one in which the peoples of the East and West can rejoice, a continent that is diverse, yet whole. Together we shall answer the call. The world has waited long enough.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

East & West Germany Move Toward Reunification

8/90

The government of East Germany voted last month to dissolve its governing body and unite with West Germany. The measure to reunite was delayed, however, and will probably occur later in the year.

The move caused Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev to soften his stance on the reunification of Germany. Earlier, the Kremlin had sought membership in Both NATO and the Warsaw pact for the reunification of Germany. Now Gorbachev maintains that East Germany's obligations toward the Warsaw pact be held to only during a transitional period.

Gorbachev also suggested that a united Germany could be a member of NATO if the western alliance changed its Cold War position against the Soviet Union.

The Soviet leader's comments appeared to be a "positive movement" on the German issue, said an anonymous Western diplomat.

German Chancellor Helmut Kohl said in a recent Time magazine interview, "Some transitional arrangements will be needed. It is possible to allow for the stationing of Soviet troops for a certain time period in what is today the German Democratic Republic.

"German unity in the year 2000 cannot be the same as German unity in 1900. The future of free Europe is not the future of the old nation-state. We are talking about a wider opening, and that is the hour of Europe."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(3cb60d42b10e53f9522bb0b392c1c4cd_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(d0262bbe9d2356661a2e89321dfcc781_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Green Party in Germany

1/88

When reporting on events in West Germany, the American media typically centers its focus on sensational anti-nuclear demonstrations staged in the streets of Bonn by the radical Green Party. But a Christian journalist visiting America from Munich says that reporters are ignoring the most important trend emerging in her country.

Jeanette Huber, editor of Brennpunkt , says that the current leadership in West Germany has begun to take a vocal stand for morality and Christian values - and she views this as an early signal that a major revival of Christianity is about to sweep over the nation.

In the last five to ten years, according to Huber, critical, anti-Christian organizations have arisen to challenge the moral fabric of West Germany. The "Die Gruenen," or Green Party, composed of vocal feminists, environmentalists, and anti-nuclear activists, has on several occasions made bold and challenging remarks about the government's traditional standards. This challenge has caused many of the West German politicians to stand courageously for what they believe. "They have had to recognize that they have neglected to communicate their convictions to the younger generation," explained Huber. "And some politicians have admitted that they have been unable to do so."

But it seems that the harder these attacks have come from the liberal elements of German society, the bolder the leaders have been in their defense of Christianity and conservative values.

"There has been more talk about Christian standards and 'Christian worldview' in the Bundesrepublik in 1987 than ever before," added Huber, who became a Christian 4 years ago.

As an example of the conflict that is emerging, Huber recalled a popular television show in which a liberal politician got very upset while debating with other politicians about moral values. "All I ever hear from you in these last few months is talk about 'das christliche Menschenbild' (the Christian view of mankind). I can't stand it anymore," the politician screamed.

Christoph Boehr, head of West Germany's emerging conservative party, has placed all of his efforts into encouraging governing leaders to take more radical stands for Christian principles and against atheistic and humanistic thought. His party, the Junge Union, has emerged as the nation's most aggressive coalition against abortion.

"The vocal protests from such groups as the Green Party have caused our leaders to take a stand," Huber summarized. She said that Germans are typically reserved and have been silent in regards to their convictions until recently.

Huber also commented that the church in Germany is experiencing unprecedented growth, although this is not being reported by the American news media. "Only 5 or 10 years ago, there were very few Spirit-filled churches in my country," she said. "But prayer groups, Bible schools, and New Testament churches are now springing up all over." A major charismatic conference held in Frankfurt last summer attracted over 14,000 born again, Spirit-filled believers, which seemed to shock the Christian population. "No one knew where all the Christians came from all of a sudden!" she explained.

Although the German people have lost interest in institutionalized religion, and more traditional churches are losing members, Huber says that people are finding a true expression of the faith as these new churches are beginning to flourish. "We are destined for a major revival," Huber says confidently. "I believe that before it is all over the wall that separates our land between East and West will be removed, and God will lead this nation out of the darkness we have experienced for so many years."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Reports of Revival from Saudi Arabia

Americans soldiers coming to the Lord in record numbers
2/91

"Last Sunday we had 12 professions of faith; the Sunday before that we had 18," claims Baptist pastor, Jeff Houston serving as a military chaplain in the Middle East.

"We have four services every day; we are averaging over 160 at these services," Houston said in a letter to friends, published in the Los Angeles Times. "The Christians are beginning to stand out like beacons and have become rallying points for soldiers."

Houston's letter concurs with similar reports coming from Christians serving in the Middle East. Many have expressed a belief that in the midst of war a revival has broken out. Some have experienced a renewal of their Christian faith, while others have come to the Lord for the first time as photos of desert baptismal services attest.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Holy Spirit Moves throughout the World

6/89

Most people in the world today are unaware of what the Holy Spirit is doing throughout the world in terms of global evangelization. But when one looks at the facts and statistics listed below, it is apparent that we are about to see an unprecedented, worldwide expansion of Christianity:

- * There are 16,000 new Christians in Africa every day. Africa was 4% Christian in 1900; today, over 40% is Christian.
- * In Latin America, the evangelical movement is growing 3 times as fast as the population.
- * In the Soviet Union, after 70 years of oppression, the Christian movement is 36% of the population; this is more than 100 million - over 5 times the size of the Communist Party.
- * Many are aware of the miracle of the growth of the church in China - 23,000 new Christians per day!
- * In Indonesia, the percentage of Christians is so high that the government will not print the figure.
- * In India, 25% of the people say they would like to be Christians if they could stay in their families.
- * In the United States, 350 new missions agencies have been established since 1950. Even more significant is the fact that the same number in the same period have come into being in the so-called Third World.
- * Young people in the U.S., Europe, Latin America, Africa, and Asia are more interested in missions today than at any time since the days of the Student Volunteer Movement. The largest meetings of young people interested in missions ever in history are appearing in Europe, Latin America, and in local regions of the United States (1500 at a Midwest meeting).

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Hope for South Africa!

Reprinted from the South African Forerunner

By Bill Bennot

9/93

There is a great need today for the bold and courageous - those who will not succumb to the whirlwind of hopelessness that runs rampant in the nations. South Africa is saturated with the cynics and doubters and doomsday prophets. Anyone can be a critic but it takes faith and determination to set a course of hope. We can't run from or ignore the huge dilemma facing our nation.

While many are paralyzed by the intimidating threats of our national Goliath there are still those among us, who like David, will run to the battle line. David only looked at the problem long enough to take aim. The problem never even overwhelmed him because he measured the problem against the greatness of his God. In fact, it was God alone who added greatness to the formula of David's life.

Great acts of love and faith, that this nation so desperately needs, will not flow out of those the world expects as great. True greatness will infiltrate this nation through the yielded hearts of young men and women who will dare to do the will of God anywhere. God will never allow this nation to be healed by the power-hungry bureaucrats that seek glory from men. The healers will be the humble, the peacemaker, the compassionate, the courageous and the selfless. Through men and women of this character God alone will get the glory that is rightfully due Him.

If there was ever a time for Christians to be in tune with what the Holy Spirit is doing, now is the time. "For all who are being led by the Spirit of God, these are the sons of God" (Romans 8:1). Paul went on to say that creation is waiting for the revealing of the sons of God. That revealing has the power to set South Africa free from the corruption that has plagued it in the socio-political and economic arenas. The Church, equipped with the whole gospel and immersed in the Holy Spirit is the salt that preserves a nation.

Christians can no longer present a truncated gospel that prepares people for heaven while leaving them totally unprepared for life in the here and now. It was said of the sons of Issachar that they understood the times with the knowledge of what Israel should do. The Holy Spirit is breathing a fresh understanding of the times into the heart of the Church. It is not a time for retreat but for advance. In the midst of much perplexity, Christians are being equipped with the knowledge of what to do. I encourage you to pray for South Africa, that God may use His Church to bring healing to our nation.

Bill Bennot is the editor of The Forerunner: Preparing the New South African and pastor of His People Church in Johannesburg, South Africa.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(e1c624d4757f08486e89482c18364c17_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(d8ab143e904bfa3467271eec5af75a9b_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Hungary's Church

6/89

BUDAPEST, Hungary (NNI) - Significant changes in the leadership of the Communist Party in Hungary have given a new impetus to the current demand for political and economic reforms in the nation - and these changes have been fueled by a growing Christian revival.

The new Deputy Prime Minister, Imre Poszgay, is leading the call for the elimination of restrictions of church activity. At the end of 1987, the Hungarian government announced that independent associations, both secular and religious, would be allowed to operate legally without having to submit their constitutions to the government for approval.

Nearly every segment of the population then began calling for political demands and trying to force the Party to speed up its reform program. Then, quite unexpectedly, the once docile Catholic bishops launched their own offensive in early 1988 - demanding "giant steps" toward reform. The bishops called for a host of changes to be made in state policies regarding the church. This resulted in an announcement by Prime Minister Grosz that new concessions would be made. Hungary's new laws on religious policy are expected to be ratified this year.

Perhaps the most significant concessions in the current context include new laws which allow Protestant social programs to operate among drop-outs, delinquent youth, drug addicts, alcoholics, the elderly, and handicapped children. One church has also been given the freedom to start a telephone counseling service in Budapest which is giving Christians an opportunity to prove their capacity to tackle current social problems within the context of communism.

The Christian gospel is also taking on a much more prominent role in Hungary as the doors are opened to visiting evangelical leaders. Dr. Luis Palau, who holds evangelistic rallies all over the world, addressed a crowd of 12,000 at a youth rally in Budapest in early April. Hungarian television covered the event and extended the ministry to the entire nation. "The dream of a full-blown, unrestricted evangelistic meeting ... became a reality before my eyes," said Gary Cox of EuroEvangelism.

"The Soviet bloc is one of the most exciting areas in the world in which to present the gospel today," said Palau. "There is an openness - 'glasnost' - especially among the young people." There were approximately 1,200 youth who responded to Palau's call to repentance at the April gathering.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Indonesian Muslim's testimony

6/89

JAKARTA, Indonesia (FR) - When his son became a Christian, Dr. Harris Siregar chased him out of his house with a knife and told him to never return. Disowned, Eriel Siregar moved to another island to finish high school. While in Java, he became a Christian and a member of the Maranatha Christian Church. A few years earlier, his sister Wanti had been similarly disowned by her father when she had become a Christian.

A well-known Muslim medical doctor and physiology professor, Dr. Siregar finally disowned all of his children because of their new-found religious beliefs. Eventually, Wanti married the pastor of the Maranatha Church in the capital city of Jakarta, and Eriel became a leader in the church in Yogyakarta. However, after years of prayer, Dr. Siregar has made a startling turn-around. He recently joined his children in full-time ministry by becoming the pastor of a church in Ujung Pandang, on the island of Sulawesi.

Today, the testimony of a devout Muslim being converted to Christianity is stirring the island. Muslim officials tried to talk the 42-year-old doctor out of his faith, and even contacted an Egyptian scholar in hopes of dissuading him. Instead of responding to the Muslim officials' efforts, Dr. Siregar has been aggressively sharing the gospel with his medical students.

"After he had been saved for two weeks, he had introduced 17 people to Christ and had baptized them," said Eric Dooley, pastor of the Maranatha Church in Jakarta. "When he gave his testimony to the Christian Medical Society, which normally attracts 10 people, 500 showed up to hear it."

Dr. Siregar also organized an outreach in Ujung Pandang and started a church. "Western missionaries have showed up at the meetings to hear his testimony," said Pastor Dooley. "So far this is the closest thing I've seen to a genuine revival. Most of the people in Dr. Siregar's church are medical students."

Revival in Indonesia, a predominantly Muslim nation, is sweeping among the youth. In Bandung, a city three hours east of Jakarta, many full-time ministers have been trained and sent out to the other islands of Indonesia since the Maranatha Church started in 1987. Several Muslim students and professors have been converted to Christianity.

"My religious background was Islam mixed with Kong Hu Cu," said Linda Heryani, a student. "But I came under the Lordship of Jesus Christ after I heard the verse John 3:3 at a meeting. I knew I was a most sinful person, and couldn't enter the kingdom of God. The only way to gain eternal life was to repent and confess my sins and make Jesus Lord of my life forever."

Davy Hermanus, a lecturer with the electronics department at the Bandung Institute of Technology, said he has realized the importance of having a faith vision for his own life purpose. "That was my weakness as a Christian for so many years: going along without any vision. Now I have a vision, and it is to reach the campus and build a glorious church there, until the second coming of Jesus."

Although Bandung is a small city, it is densely populated with two million people and is the home of many of Indonesia's top universities and private schools. "We believe that God has brought students from all over Indonesia to study here in Bandung for one purpose only, and that is to make Bandung a strategic training center to send out many full-time workers into God's service," said Gerrit Hansen, pastor of the Bandung church.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(fe3aebe81acea8d45108cd2768939da7_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Inkatha: The Party of the New South African

By Jay Rogers

Reported by Dawson Lewis in South Africa

BRAAMFONTEIN, South Africa (FR) - Largely ignored by the news media of the western world, there are many organizations in the black community of South Africa, in addition to the African National Congress, currently seeking to abolish the apartheid system.

Apartheid, the system of racial separation granting whites a monopoly of political and economic power, has incurred the hostility of a majority of the nations of the world. Naturally, apartheid has also incurred the greatest hostility among the disenfranchised blacks of South Africa.

Complicating this injustice are the twin social structures of nationalism and tribalism, which are a fact of life in South Africa. National and tribal wars among blacks occur frequently in South Africa and are difficult to stop. The largest tribe in South Africa is the Zulu nation, which has more than 6 million members. The next in size is the Xhosa, which has almost as many.

Seizing the opportunity to rally the blacks of South Africa, a number of organizations have sprung up with the intention of abolishing apartheid. The best known of these is the African National Congress (ANC), and its leader Nelson Mandela, who have been selected by the news media of the western world as the organization of the blacks which is destined to be the government of South Africa after the abolition of apartheid.

The ANC entered into partnership with the South African Communist Party (SACP), and willingly acknowledges that the Communists have prominent and influential roles in its leadership. The SACP and the ANC formed a joint military organization known as Umkhonto we Sizwe (Spear of the Nation) to wage war against the South African government.

Few dispute the right of the ANC to be one of the representatives in the proposed negotiations with the South African government, but it is undemocratic for the ANC to be the sole representative. Furthermore, the majority of the black leaders of the ANC belong to the Xhosa tribe, which would create even more tension among the tribes of South Africa if this party were to provide the sole leadership for South Africa.

It is interesting to note that in a recent poll of South Africans, only 44 percent of the blacks said they would vote for Nelson Mandela as their president. Although this percentage constitutes a plurality of votes, Mandela's popularity is not as overwhelming as portrayed by the western media.

Another party in South Africa, heavily Marxist and even more politically leftist than the ANC is the Pan African Congress (PAC). Although claiming to be more pluralistic than the ANC, the PAC is also even more committed to the violent overthrow of the white South African government.

The PAC's official slogan: 'One settler - one bullet,' speaks of the violent retribution that this group favors to uphold their political power.

Inkatha

An alternative party rarely mentioned by the western press is Inkatha, a party made up mostly of Zulus, which claims over a million dues-paying members, which would make it the largest political party in South Africa. Although this claim is probably inflated, Inkatha represents pro-western, pro-democratic, pro-free enterprise ideals which would create a more pluralistic society.

Inkatha's leader Chief Mango Suthu Buthelezi, a member of the Zulu tribe, claims to be a Christian, and recently opened up Inkatha's membership to all races in a landmark resolution. The resolution which carried this transformation was reported in the Inkatha magazine Clarion Call:

"We the members of Inkatha have always striven to establish a race-free South Africa in which there will be an open, multi-party democracy ... We now see the fruits of Black political labour and know that to make them the fruits of the whole of South Africa, we will have to make the final eradication of apartheid and the establishment of a true non-racial, multi-ethnic party democracy the responsibility of all South Africans in an all-race effort."

Inkatha does not seek a monopoly of political power. It does not claim to compete with the ANC for future political power. Its stated objective is to be included with the ANC in negotiations with President de Klerk and representatives of the South African government for future political representation.

However, major groups in the western world continue to pin their hopes on the Marxist ANC, while the evidence is overwhelming that Communism and Tribalism produce poverty, suffering and mountains of corpses. Must South Africa continue to learn this from bitter experience?

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Iranian Church Growing

3/89

TEHERAN (FR) - A recent report published in Christianity Today claims that an unprecedented number of Iranians are rejecting Islam and turning to the Christian faith - right in the midst of the Ayatollah Khomeini's stronghold.

During the first two years of the Iranian revolution, there was relative religious freedom in the country. Christian churches distributed literature at the University of Teheran, and on city sidewalks. It is now illegal to share the gospel anywhere in the nation, and Christians have been jailed because of their witness. Pressure is also applied to converts by their families, friends, and employers.

But statistics show that the Iranian church is growing. Since the revolution, several thousand Iranian Muslims became Christians - and the number now totals approximately 12,000. There is also no way to estimate the number of secret believers. "Twelve thousand believers may not sound like very many to American Christians," said the report. "But since the Islamic invasion of Iran in the seventh century, there have never been this many followers of Jesus in this area at one time."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Jaanus Karner's testimony

By Jay Rogers
5/90

After over 20 years of eluding the KGB, Estonian pastor Jaanus Karner shares the story of his dramatic escape to America, gives his insight into what is happening today in communist countries, and tells about his desire to return to his native land of Estonia.

Jaanus Karner is faced with a choice today. After growing up in one of the most repressive societies in the world, this native Estonian is now considering a return to his homeland.

The sudden and drastic changes that are now occurring in Eastern Europe have been long awaited by Jaanus, who resisted the communist system for over 20 years and now yearns for a free Estonia. Having come to America in 1981 by narrowly eluding the grasp of the KGB - the Soviet Union's repressive secret police force - Jaanus now looks back over his life, which has spanned the Soviet takeover of Estonia during World War Two to the communist regime's fall from power last year.

Born in Estonia in 1944, Jaanus entered the world during a time of tumultuous change in Eastern Europe. Soviet military forces were advancing through Europe driving the Nazis back to Germany and their eventual defeat. A few years after the Soviet occupation, Jaanus was born.

"My mother was a Christian and we were living on an island in the Baltic sea," explained Jaanus. "My father had escaped to the West and we never saw him again."

During the time that the Soviets were establishing the Iron Curtain, Jaanus' mother felt that she had received direction from God to leave the island. At that time every city in Estonia was being compartmentalized by Stalin's secret police and Jaanus and his mother narrowly escaped being deported to Siberia for reeducation.

Jaanus became a Christian when in high school at age 14 and began attending a Pentecostal church. This was a flourishing underground church movement that grew in Estonia despite the methods used by the communists to keep the fervor of Christians in check. Later on, as a young adult, Jaanus started a youth ministry.

"I wanted to be a youth minister," Jaanus remembers, "and I started a music ministry bringing contemporary musical instruments into our church meetings. This worked marvelously because Estonians love to sing. It is not unusual for the Estonians to get 300 thousand to 1.2 million people to come to sing at festivals."

Pioneering the "Jesus Movement" of Estonia, Jaanus tells of youth meetings he organized which were highlighted by Black American gospel music. "Our Thursday night youth services were packed out. We called them 'catacomb nights' and met in the basement of an old building."

Attracted by the guitar playing, the meetings grew larger until many young people began to attend. "We prayed and we were hungry for God. Soon we began to reach out as an evangelistic team. The presence of God was strong in our meetings and our outreaches became a catalyst for revival."

According to Jaanus, another youth movement began shortly in Lithuania and Latvia, the neighboring Baltic States, and when visitors came to their meetings from Russia, their church became a catalyst for revival in the East as well.

As a port country, Estonia had always been open to influence from the West. "We had our own 'hippy movement' in Estonia," said Jaanus, "and a 'Jesus movement' sprung up as well." But this new spiritual freedom was not gained without a price to be paid.

"There was a bad part too," said Jaanus. "The government found out about our meetings and sent the KGB to investigate us. Communism is an elaborate evil system. They plant informers in every strata of society. They came to us wanting to know what was happening in our church."

"They use direct intimidation by making threats. If you don't cooperate with them, they can make your life miserable by taking away your promotion or education. And worst of all - they try to recruit you as an informer, trying to get you to betray your brothers - all the time they use psychological intimidation and all the evil that has gone on in history."

Bluntly describing the spiritual force behind communism, Jaanus Karner says, "Communism is satanic; it is based on a hatred of God; it is against anything natural, godly, and it hates the human personality."

Around this time, Jaanus came into contact with an American missionary named Jim Gilbert, who would often enter the country through Finland and minister as a musician to the churches in the Baltic States. Gilbert saw Jaanus' plight and wanted to help, so he arranged an opportunity for the Estonian pastor to apply for emigration.

It took over 10 years for the Soviet government to allow Jaanus to leave Estonia. During this time, Jaanus and his family were continually harassed by the KGB. Through searching his house, constant interrogation, and trying to build a case against him, the KGB made his life a torment.

Then unexpectedly, a door opened to the West. Though forced to live a double life for many years - functioning as a pastor yet knowing that someday he would leave his country forever - Jaanus resigned himself to knowing that his faith in God was his only foundation. "I struggled with the idea of leaving," said Jaanus. "I could not get rooted too firmly, yet as Christians, we knew that nothing is eternal on this planet."

Just before Jaanus and his family were able to leave, the KGB began to move against them. "The KGB wanted to use us in a ploy to destroy another ministry. They placed us under house arrest and began to collect evidence against us." The Soviet secret police threatened the Karner family that they would be put in a labor camp for several years and that their son would be sent to fight in Afghanistan.

At that time Jim Gilbert, the American missionary, began to arrange prayer chains for the Estonian pastor and his family. "This was a time of real spiritual warfare," recalls Jaanus. The KGB officer who was investigating their case was suddenly and inexplicably kicked out - "sent to an early retirement" - as Jaanus describes it. "Somehow God had opened a door to the West."

"We were to receive our passports to leave in three weeks, recalls Jaanus. "But even then, they used psychological intimidation. They let us go - but blamed us by saying we gave information about our brothers in this other church in exchange for emigration papers."

"I never believed that they were going to allow us to leave until we were on the jet and in the air," said Jaanus. "They kept us in the boarding room waiting, while three men went through our papers. Ten minutes went by - then twenty. All the time I was waiting for some officer to grab me. Often they will let you get this far and then take away your papers on some technicality. They make you reapply and begin the emigration process all over again. They do this to crush your hope and make your life miserable."

After ten years in America and the recent changes in the Soviet Union, Jaanus is thinking more about returning to his country. "I have a desire to go back. I'm getting over the harassment now - this is something you never totally get rid of. It stays with you after twenty years of running from the KGB."

The move of God which has occurred in Estonia has been called the "Singing Revival." Estonians have always gathered in festivals to sing together even during hard times. According to Jaanus this lifts their spirits, draws them closer together and brings them closer to God.

"When you are singing, you feel free," explains Jaanus speaking like a true Estonian. "All these songs are about 'My homeland and my country' - 'Our forefathers' and 'My fatherland, you are holy to me.' There is a spiritual yearning for something greater than a love for a nation. There is a spiritual experience when we all sing together holding hands - like we have touched God."

When asked about Christian involvement in the political changes that have occurred in Estonia, Jaanus mentions one movement called the Estonian Preservation Society. "They teach very strong Christian viewpoints and encourage nationalism and independence."

"In addition to this, the people are very open to God. Independence is not coming without a spiritual impact. There is a realization among the people that only a national revival can bring independence. They are getting to the point where they understand that freedom can come only from God. It has got to be supernatural. How can you break the superpower? This power comes from the Lord. And this message is pushing them toward God."

"Christians in Estonia need to hear that message too," explains Jaanus. "Churches in the West can help by sending in apostolic teams. We need 'Sons of Issachar' who understand the signs of the times."

Even with all of the harassment Jaanus received from the KGB, this Estonian pastor still has a love for the Russian people. "As a Christian I cannot feel suppression. The Russian people are victims. I hope for a universal revival in the Soviet Union. I yearn for a day when 280 million people will be touched by God."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(ab4e2b3fc7e7887b7a72f548aa6f5e60_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(104fbf564e2e5a8fbd84f31656d114c7_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Jaanus Karner - Estonia

In June of 1940, Estonia was invaded and occupied by Russian military forces. The nation was incorporated by force into the Soviet Union under the provisions of the 1939 Hitler-Stalin pact - a plan to conquer all of Europe and divide it under spheres of Nazi and Soviet influence. This criminal annexation has never been recognized by the United States and by most Western countries.

Estonia is located on the eastern shore of the Baltic Sea, south of Finland, east of Sweden, north of Latvia, and very definitely west of Russia - both geographically and ideologically.

Of all European countries, only Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania lost their sovereignty during World War Two. Unlike other countries which had communist governments imposed on them, the Baltic countries were absorbed through the use of brutal force. In 1941, 60,000 Estonians were either killed or sent to Soviet concentration camps where they later perished. In 1949, 80,000 Estonians were deported to Siberia.

Between 1939 and 1949, a stunning one-third (350,000 people) of Estonia's population was lost. Most western countries have never accorded diplomatic recognition to the Soviet incorporation of Estonia. Estonians from throughout the Free World assemble periodically at festivals held to strengthen cultural ties and call attention to their country's plight.

Freedom loving people everywhere should remember the words of Benjamin Franklin inscribed on Thomas Jefferson's seal: "Rebellion to tyrants is obedience to God." Let there be hope that someday every nation behind the Iron Curtain will be free. Let us all hope that day will arrive soon.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Jaanus Karner - Prophecy

Jaanus Karner is the Estonian pastor who is responsible for revival in Estonian churches and other parts of the Soviet Union. Jaanus shared some prophetic insights into the rise and fall of communism in the Eastern Bloc.

In the early 1900s, there were warnings to Estonia to repent or a curse was coming - a fire straight from hell that would rise up and consume them. In fact, Estonia was not alone - virtually every Eastern Bloc country from Armenia to Estonia had a vigorous Christian movement associated with the Pentecostal revival before communism swallowed these nations.

In these Eastern Bloc countries, there was a period of revival shortly before judgment fell. During this revival, God sent prophets with a clear message - "If you do not repent, your freedom will be short lived." There was a positive side to this warning as well. God coupled this judgment warning with a message of hope and restoration.

Jaanus Karner believes that communism came on the Soviet Union as a result of a centuries old curse on the Russian people. "The Russian landlords were terrible. They cultivated a hatred of civilization and made the Russian people feel that they were lower than the rest of Europe."

In ancient times, Russians were barbarian tribes that terrorized civilized societies. Their rulers held to the notion that they needed to be ruled with an iron fist or they would become uncontrollable. By the Middle Ages, Christianity had spread through Russia with some pacifying effect, but the society was very anti-semitic.

Uncontrollable, riotous mobs, called pogroms, would often erupt with the sole pupose of trying to kill communities of Jews. Later, the Czars emerged and ruled the Russian people by repressing all of the higher aspects of the human personality.

"There is a parallel between Czarist Russia and what is going on today," explained Jaanus Karner. "By its roots, communism is as evil as it can be. There is an underlying feeling of anti-semitism. Russian nationalism is based on a hatred of the Jews."

The Soviet Union has become a superpower but it is based on repressive force rather than the greatness of the spirit of the people. Rather than seeking the favor of God, Russian rulers have characteristically supressed the worship of God in society, persecuted Jews and ethnic minorities and the nation has been led into darkness.

According to Lance Lambert, in The Battle for Israel, the Orthodox Church often became a refuge for Jews fleeing the pogrom. As persecuting mobs tried to kill a group of Jews, the would flee to the churches. On one occassion, there were some spirit-filled monks who prophesied to a group of Jews what would happen to Russia:

A black, blightish terror would overcome Russia. This would be a fire initiated abruptly from hell. The message also promised that this judgment would disappear just as suddenly as it came and that there would be a universal revival in the nation of Russia.

Viewing the recent events within the Soviet Union, one cannot dismiss the significance of these prophecies. The Soviet Union, along with many other Eastern European nations, is destined for a great move of God in the coming years.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(b792654f2cef9719eabeb6c5be00811e_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Kenya Outreach

10/89

This past August, I was able to go to Nairobi, Kenya, along with a team of six powerful men and women of God. For me, this missionary trip was a dream come true. All of my life I had imagined myself standing on the soil of the continent of my forefathers, and finally this dream had become a reality. Nevertheless, the most significant thrill to me was not that I was there to receive some experience "out of the ordinary," but that I was there to share someone very precious to me, Jesus.

When I first came to know the Lord, God gave me an excitement for living. I realized that God had a purpose for my life and that there was nothing I could not do that He had initiated in my life - the sky was the limit. However, though the eye of my understanding was opened and provision had been made for me to know my Creator, I found myself yoked to one burden: the plight of Black America.

In my heart I had made a commitment that I would go anywhere and do anything for Jesus. It wasn't until I began serving as the Missions secretary at the International Office of Maranatha Ministries that my commitment was challenged. One day as I went about my work, the Lord interrupted my thoughts with this question, "Are you willing to go anywhere for My sake?" My response to His prompting was: "Of course, you know I will go anywhere."

The following day, as I was going about my work in the office, the Lord interrupted my thoughts again with this question, "Are you willing to go anywhere for My sake?" I again responded, "Of course, you know I will go anywhere." Little did I know that what I meant by anywhere was very different from what Jesus meant by anywhere. You see, my understanding about how God would use me, and how I desired the Lord to use me, was limited to the black arena. I could not see the Lord calling me to anything outside of reaching my own people - certainly not in the scope of reaching nations. I could not escape from the limits I had placed upon my own life.

I was not wrong in my desire to reach Black America, but I had limited God so much in my life that I felt I could not be used in any other aspect. What I realized later was that I had been carrying a false burden for many years that was not mine to bear.

After all, what would my family and friends think if I sold everything and left everything I had worked for in life? - a college degree that would open many doors for me in the business world, success and a great future. I'm black and I had to make something of myself, not only for my benefit but for the benefit of those to come. In Black America, there is a great pressure to succeed and gain great riches in this life. Of course, there's nothing wrong with wanting to be successful, but when success became my aim I closed myself off to the perfect will of God for my life - which is true success.

Not many months later the Lord began to place a desire in my heart for Africa - He rekindled a desire in my heart that I had had as a child to one day go to Africa. Though my heart yearns to see Black America come forth into all that God has purposed, it's not up to me to bring it to pass. God is more concerned about Black America than I could ever be. Learning to see from the whole to the part set me free and has released me to fulfill God's intentions and plans for my life.

Now that I have had a taste of the mission field, I have a desire for nothing else. I know without a doubt that God has called me to Africa, particularly to Kenya at this time. But that true purpose and fulfillment came as I lost my life in Him and removed the constraints that I had placed upon myself. I have come to understand that God has commissioned me to disciple the nations, not someone else. He can use me and has called me to go beyond myself to reach a nation that is longing to hear the gospel.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Indonesian Evangelist Predicts Global Awakening

By Jay Rogers

8/91

MOSCOW, Russia (FR) - Mel Tari - the author of the popular book Like A Mighty Rushing Wind, the chronicle of his experiences at the forefront of the Great Indonesian Revival - was a featured speaker with founder, Bob Weiner, at the Christian Youth International conference in July, at the Izmajilovo Sports Arena in Moscow.

Mel Tari believes that the current awakening in Moscow is just the beginning of a great end time harvest which is about to sweep the globe. Several experiences throughout his life have led him to this belief. Although the July conference was Tari's first visit to the USSR, it has been a lifelong dream of the evangelist to come to the Soviet Union. In Like A Mighty Rushing Wind, Tari relates this desire:

"I had just won a scholarship to Russia to prepare myself to be a medical doctor in Moscow. My whole family liked this idea, and I really liked it myself, because in an Asian country when you are a medical doctor, you are a very rich man. And doctors have a pretty good life.... Then God started to speak to me through His Word, and I had the uneasy feeling that He wanted me to be his servant...." (Mel Tari, Like a Mighty Rushing Wind, Creation House, Carol Stream, IL, 1971, pp. 157,158.)

Speaking to a crowd of several thousand students, Tari recounted that several times in his life he had had the opportunity to enter the Soviet Union. But each time he had felt that the Lord say, "Not this time; not yet." Tari said that the Lord spoke to his heart instructing him that one day he would be allowed to enter the Soviet Union. On that day, God would begin to pour out His Spirit in that nation. This would be a sign to him that an awakening of global proportion was about to commence. Tari further related that July 3-7, 1991 was the first time that he felt that it was the Lord's will for him to come to the Soviet Union.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(faf942dc3e59ce8eb64b4ac481eca7e0_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(cf531ed27e91483460120fcc057b3901_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Go Ye!

Mission to Youth of London, England

By Keith Johnson

12/90

Here I was, a young Christian from Boston, in Congleton, England, on a missions trip for God!

I stood in the middle of Main Street surrounded by six skin-headed punk rockers wearing big, black army boots. I was a nervous wreck. I didn't even know what to say. I knew that these kids needed Jesus. If only I could introduce them to Him in a real way, I knew that they would respond just as I had six years earlier.

Suddenly, a thought came to me: Ask them a question. Ask them what they think of America. A stupid question I'll admit, but it was all I had. They came back with the answers I expected. They told me - in no uncertain terms - that they hated America. Although they did say that Madonna was the greatest.

They went on to say that they hated their own country. They were all unemployed and on the dole. They had just enough money to survive on and maybe buy drugs on the weekends. These kids told me that they hated life. And I believed them.

The ice was broken; we were talking. This went on for a while until we started to run out of things to say. All that I knew was that I loved these kids and had to tell them about my Jesus. If I left them now, I would never see them again.

At that point, the nervousness came back. How in the world could I ever turn this conversation around to Jesus? How could I share Jesus in a way that they could understand? How could I ever get into the hearts of these radical kids who had totally given up on life?

Wait a minute! Jesus was a radical! He did and said some things people in His day thought crazy. Maybe His life could break through to these kids.

I said: "You know ... I know a man who changed His town. I mean, He really shook it up! This guy was radical! Thousands of people followed Him around and listened to the things He said.

"He hated religion because it was leading people in the wrong direction. He would walk right up to religious leaders and call them snakes and vipers. He told them how good they looked on the outside, but on the inside they were full of dead man's bones! On the inside they were hypocrites."

I could see that they were interested, so I went on ...

"This man had power! He raised people from the dead. He even went into a Church carrying a whip in His hand because there were people selling junk in there. He couldn't stand it so He chased them out like a mad man. He demanded 100% commitment from the people who followed Him. He told them they had to deny themselves.

"You guys think you're radical, but you don't even come close to this man. He didn't sit around complaining and getting high. He did something with his life. He changed His town.

"But finally He went too far. The religious hypocrites, who plotted against Him finally killed Him. None of you would ever be murdered for being too radical. None of you would ever suffer like He did for what you believe in."

At this point they didn't even know who I was talking about. Finally, one of them asked me, "Who was this guy?"

I said, "I'll tell you, but you have to promise to listen to the rest of the story."

They agreed.

I said, "This man was Jesus Christ, the Son of God."

At this they laughed at me and swore, but I was not about to quit. So I told them about how he changed my life and gave me excitement for living. I told them that He was my Hero, my Lord and my King!

"That's why I'm here all the way from America - because He loves you guys a lot and He died for you. He took your place on the cross so you wouldn't have to live in misery. He can change your life. He wants to use you to change your country!"

One interrupted and said, "We can't change anything around here! How can one of us do anything?!"

I asked them if they had ever heard of John Wesley. They said they hadn't. So I told them about how God got ahold of Wesley's life and about how he changed England in the 1700s, "God used a single man to do it. He can do it with you too!"

I invited them to the church service that night and the last thing I said was, "If you want Jesus to change your life, be there at 7:00 P.M."

Well 7:00 P.M. rolled around, but as the service began there was no sign of them. We were singing "To God Be the Glory." I had my hands raised just praising God, when out of the corner of my eye I saw a big, black army boot stepping up the aisle. Tears came to my eyes, as four punkers sat down beside me. All I could do was pray for them.

As they sat there, they were unruly and laughing. One of them even lit up a cigarette and began to smoke until I made him put it out. I wondered how long the pastor would put up with these kids.

Finally, Eric Johnson, the American youth evangelist, stepped up to the pulpit. He began with this scripture, "The thief comes to kill, steal, and to destroy, but I have come that you might have life and that you might have it more abundantly." He read it with power and anointing.

"Satan wants to destroy you, but Jesus Christ wants to save you and make your life count for something!" His message was simple, and he preached it with all his heart as if it would be the last time he would ever see these kids.

He challenged these kids. He called them out, "C'mon, it takes some guts to stand up for Jesus! It's going to mean that your friends will laugh at you and you'll probably lose them. But you don't know anything about friendship until you get saved and join the family of God!"

But no one came forward. Then he prayed one of the most powerful prayers I have ever heard. At this point, the leader of the group stood up and walked forward with tears streaming down his face. Then his friend beside him came forward. Two kids came to the Lord that night with broken hearts, repenting of their sins. There is no one too lost that Jesus can't find and save.

I will never be the same after witnessing this. Up until this time I was on the defensive for God. Defense spends all of its time fighting off the assaults of the other team. But I realize now that I don't want to miss out on what God is going to do through His Church in the Last Days.

Will you go on the offensive for God? That means making yourself available to do His will. It means having compassion for people. It means doing exploits for His glory and the advancement of His kingdom. It means being a part of His kingdom here and now.

I pray that God will use this experience of mine to excite you and challenge you to step out and share Jesus with the lost. Go out into the highways and byways and compel them to come in!

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Rate of Conversions Climbing among Muslims in Kenya

Muslim hospital now offers Christian literature ...

MOMBASA, Kenya (EP) - More than 1,100 Moslems in Kenya and seven neighboring middle-eastern nations have recently rejected the Koran in favor of the Christian Bible. Recent converts have expressed views in sharp contrast to Moslems who have in recent weeks demanded the death of Salman Rushdie, author of the controversial book, The Satanic Verses.

"The dispute over Salman Rushdie's novel is viewed very differently by converted Moslems in East Africa," said the Rev. David Stravers, spokesman for World Home Bible League (WHBL), a ministry that has targeted African Moslems for gospel outreach. When these people read the Bible they suddenly discover what they have been missing. They have had the lights turned on. They begin to understand all the harm which Satan has done by keeping them in the dark for so long."

Moslem government officials have been alarmed by the numbers of Moslem converts to the Christian faith, reports WHBL, and have tried to stop the movement by banning outdoor religious meetings. However, the rate of conversions continues to climb, especially as a result of small home Bible study groups, which have not yet been outlawed.

In January, a major Moslem hospital in Mombasa began providing Christian literature to staff and students. Bible studies are regularly conducted on hospital grounds.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Nagaland Revival

KOHIAMA, India (FR) - News about ground-breaking peace accords or world-shaking political movements probably won't come out of this small, politically insignificant state in far east India. However, Nagaland has distinguished itself by being the only Christian state in the world with a 90 percent Christian population ... with record numbers of youth pledging their lives to missions. Mass prayer meetings are held once a month for the nation as well as for the neighboring countries of Burma, Bhutan, China and Pakistan.

The radical transition from being a Hindu state comprised of loosely organized tribes to a Christian government took place as a result of an unusual revival that swept through the villages and tribes between 1976 and 1978. Miraculous healings were commonplace, said Rev. Joseph Paul of Christ for Nagaland Ministries, which began when "hundreds of people confessed their sins and repented of their old ways." There are proportionately more born-again believers in Nagaland than any other place in the world, according to statistics gathered by Operation World.

Despite the revival, Nagaland is closed to outsiders because of the danger of military insurgency. Since 1947, Indian armed forces were kept in Nagaland, and Naga insurgents against the Hindu police were "put down with a cruel hand," said Rev. Paul. "Until 1972 there was always fighting and killing of innocent Naga tribals. Peace, if one can call it peace, was here only from 1980."

During the 1970s, Nagaland was nearly a police state, with many suffering at the hands of Hindu security forces. "Even as late as 1979 Naga villagers were shot at and killed by the Hindu armed forces of Assam," said Rev. Paul. "This was played down by the Indian government, which always termed any trouble with Nagas as Naga insurgency. During these times the church called the people to fast and pray."

Strategically located next to Burma and surrounded by China, Bangladesh and India, Rev. Paul said he believes that Naga youth are the key to evangelizing these predominantly Hindu and Muslim nations. At Christ for Nagaland Bible College, students are taught sacrificial living, which prepares them to live a life of "barefoot evangelism." They are then sent to the tribes of Arunchal, Sikkim, Bhutan, Burma and across the China border.

Prior to each semester, the students fast and pray for two days. "Students are also taught to fast and pray for their individual and corporate needs." Rev. Paul added that his goal is to train 2,000 leaders. Currently there are 62 missionaries who have been trained and sent into those countries.

Christianity was planted in Nagaland by American Baptist missionaries in the 1800s. When they came, Nagaland was basically a warrior nation. However, Christianity reversed the tide of tribal warfare. "At great risk to their lives, the American pioneer missionaries brought the gospel to the Nagas," Paul explained.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

New Zealand Revival

By Jay Rogers
10/89

AUCKLAND, New Zealand (FR) - Following a tremendously successful evangelistic outreach in Auckland, New Zealand, Bob Muni, Pastor of Maranatha Christian Church, has reported that a movement of God's spirit has continued among the new believers recently added to his church.

The church doubled in size during the outreach, from 35 to 70, and more are coming to know the Lord each week. "There is a real openness in the Spirit that we have never before experienced," related Muni. "There is a sense of wonderment and an expectation that revival could break out at any moment."

Bob Muni describes the experience as the grace of God operating in two directions. The first main emphasis has been the compassion of God. The second emphasis was an impartation of holiness and purity followed by the outbreking of supernatural manifestations.

Tremendous victory has been won through compassion. In the past, some Christian organizations and campus groups have moved in a confrontational manner against the ungodly elements at the University, such as radical socialism and militant feminism. God's supernatural compassion has proven to be the alternative tack in which healing has come to the University of Auckland.

This approach, says Muni, can only bring negative results. "The Church is to be salt in the world, but salt is for healing ... not poisoning. It doesn't do any good to pour salt in open wounds. It is our job to be prophetic but not injurious."

One student at the University of Auckland, who had been the most antagonistic to Muni's efforts in the past, was won to the Lord through a display of love and compassion. Fiona Stephens attended the outreach meetings and was "polite but confrontational" according to Muni.

As a militant feminist, Fiona had been instrumental in stirring up hostility to the Maranatha church in Auckland. Fiona was also the Chair of the student government and a leader of the homosexuals and lesbians who have dominated school politics. The climate and events of the campus were controlled to a great degree by Fiona.

In the past, Fiona had been openly antagonistic against Christians. This year, however, her demeanor was more subdued and felt comfortable enough to politely talk about the Christian life with members of the church involved in the outreach. Fiona indicated a willingness to receive what God had to offer her if she could observe genuineness among believers. "I'll know the truth when I see it," she said.

By her own admission, Fiona was one of the most unlikely people to become a Christian. In fact, most Christians were afraid of her and the influence that she held at the school. Fiona said that for some time people she knew had been praying for her and she felt God drawing her as well.

At one of the Maranatha outreach meetings Fiona talked for 3-1/2 hours about God with another student. She spent part of the next day with another woman in the church. After this time, Fiona was convinced of the reality of God and this sense of conviction grew so strong that Fiona felt she had to react in some way.

Fiona made a drastic choice - she decided to wield her power in student government to have Maranatha kicked off campus. Fiona said, "I thought if I did something really rotten that both God and the campus group would leave me alone."

After learning that they had been exiled from campus, Bob Muni instructed his church to "stay in an attitude of love" - that this attack was incisive - but the church should continue to lovingly pray for Fiona.

Three days later Fiona called the woman with whom she had spent time to say that she had totally changed her mind and asked to meet and pray to get her life right with God.

"I couldn't take the conviction anymore," Fiona said, "I had to get my life right with God." Fiona gave her life to the Lord, was filled with the Holy Spirit and was taught in God's love.

"We are so thrilled to see Fiona grow in many ways," Bob Muni related. "She is such a precious sister. She has been adopted into our family and has received much healing just by being part of the family. The devil has ripped off so many people by destroying the family and wreaking havoc on children leaving them with scars and hurts that plague them until they encounter the love of Jesus to heal them and set them free. There is such a need for strong families to minister the loving acceptance that reflects God's love to a hurting generation."

Muni stressed that moving in the spirit of love against the attack of the enemy is the key to revival. How do you confront radicals and militant socialists? How can you deal lovingly with homosexuals without compromising God's truth? The Auckland church found that the answer to these questions were found in responding in God's love rather than striving to win arguments.

As a result of this tactic, God has used this campus church to minister according to His plan. "The doors have become open to minister to some of the hardest cases on campus," said Muni. "Some of the radicals and homosexuals are wanting to talk about God because they saw us move in love. Too often they had been confronted harshly and condemned because of their sin. The message was that God condemned them because of their sin. For the first time they are experiencing the fact that God loves them. As they embrace this reality He will convict them of their sin and change them from the inside out."

Another exciting development is the election of Nite F., a member of the Auckland church, to the Chair of the student government, the position that Fiona currently holds. Last year there were no Christians in student government. In fact, 12 of the 13 positions were held by homosexual activists. The exciting turnaround included the election of another Christian, Moses F., and a corresponding decrease in the positions held by militant homosexuals.

Fiona Malcolmson, a girl who had been struggling with thoughts of suicide, was also saved during the outreach. Fiona M. was invited to a suicide seminar that the outreach team taught on the Auckland campus. Unknown to the outreach team, Fiona had been struggling with suicidal depression. The night before she was invited to the seminar, Fiona had wrestled with thoughts of killing herself. She and another friend came to the seminar and heard about a new hope. Three days later she gave her heart to Jesus and now boldly states that if God had not intervened, she would most likely be another sad statistic in the epidemic of suicide.

When the semester closed, Bob Muni responded to the need to teach biblical foundations to the many new believers in his church. After the outreach, 45 of them went on a week long camping trip. Muni told us that during this time they experienced "a supernatural move of God that has left us awestruck."

On the first day of the camp, Bob Muni stressed covenant relationships - the teaching he would normally give to new believers on the necessity of commitment to the local church - but this time true bonds of friendship were quickly formed - bonds that usually take many months to develop. "In all my years of ministry," said Muni, "I have never experienced anything like this. It happened in the snap of a finger; hearts were being knit together in love in the twinkling of an eye."

On the second day, Bob Muni felt the need to stand back and let the church members minister to one another. He felt that the prevailing theme of what God trying to accomplish was "the restoring and healing of the holiness, purity and innocence that had been robbed from them in the world." Muni realized that there was no better way to accomplish this than to let the new believers minister to each other.

Muni chose to let God use two people who had been in the church for a while to teach on holiness and purity. "But this time it was different," said Muni. "Instead of just a teaching on holiness, it was more of an impartation. After we prayed that night, the Presence of God came and the teaching never resumed."

As the new believers prayed for one another, the power of God was so strong that they could not stand up. People began falling under the power of God at an astonishing rate. Most of those moving under this anointing were brand new believers not even a month old in the Lord.

For the next four days, all they could do when they met was to pray, sing, and see God manifest His Presence. With only a guitar and a piano available in the camp church building, many were touched, healed and delivered while worshipping God. The experience of being in the actual Presence of God, according to Muni, was like getting six months of healing and counseling done in just four days.

One young man who had separated his shoulder while playing rugby was healed instantly. Justin, the Muni's ten year old son, prophesied over many, demonstrating that age has no bearing when God pours out His gifts. There was spontaneous Holy Ghost laughter and supernatural healing and deliverance. Another young man, who came to visit his sister at the camp, was saved within the first hour and was later filled with the Holy Spirit during the worship time, although he had never heard that there was such a thing!

The most remarkable characteristic of this time, however, was a spirit of prevailing prayer. Groups would gather spontaneously to pray for several hours at a time. Without any prompting or outside teaching, people were fasting, interceding and a few stayed up all night to pray.

Several people reported seeing angelic visitations. One student who was singing at 1 AM reported hearing three and four part harmonies. The next morning, other people commented on this: "Who else was singing? We heard a whole group."

This remarkable experience of the Presence of God has lasted through every meeting since the church arrived back in Auckland and is continuing at the publication of this article. Pastor Muni has had few opportunities to preach or teach, as the church is always swept up into true worship. More people have come to know the Lord every week as visitors to the church are awestruck at the Presence of God. Several others have been spontaneously baptized in the Holy Spirit.

One girl who had previously resisted the baptism in the Holy Spirit was prayed for by the new believers. After a short time of prayer she requested, "Stop praying for me," but every time she tried to talk after this, she spoke in tongues.

There is always deliverance from demonic spirits during the Auckland church's meetings. This also happens spontaneously as demons start fleeing when they encounter the power of God during the worship time. Although demonic manifestations often occur, the focus on praising God is never distracted by people being delivered.

Many other testimonies such as these abound as the Auckland Maranatha Church continues to grow by the sovereign hand of God. Bob and Kathy Muni have been continually astounded at what God has accomplished in so short a period of time.

"The most thrilling part for us as pastors has been the incredible spirit of unity that has transpired among all of us as a church. Everyone was truly knit together as a family. No one would guess that we are only a year old as a church and that most of us are only 5-6 weeks old in the Lord."

Bob Muni predicts that the church could double again by the end of this year at the rate that God is moving. This church has been successful because they desire to focus in on Jesus and do only what He wants to do.

"It has all been wonderful and we strongly sense God wants to do a new thing in our midst," Bob Muni concluded, as he asked Christians in America to pray that God would give their church the wisdom and sensitivity to follow His leading.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

North Korea Evangelization

7/88

SEOUL, Korea (NNI) - Two thousand Korean Christians publicly pledged to "evangelize North Korea," following a three-day missions conference held at the world's largest Presbyterian church in late April.

The Young Nak Church, built by Christians fleeing North Korea in the late 1950s, hosted the gathering in conjunction with a relatively new mission organization, Diaspora International, which encourages Korean Christians throughout the world to work on behalf of their persecuted brethren in North Korea and China. The conference was a preliminary event to the upcoming "Love North Korea" symposium scheduled for the week prior to the Summer Olympics beginning September 18.

Conferences like the planned "Love North Korea" have usually met with disapproval by the South Korean government, which has banned them until recently. Yet, skepticism of the Communist North still prevails, as was the case of an employee working in the printing company where the "Love North Korea" brochures were being printed. According to reports, the employee called police and reported that he was being used to "print North Korean propaganda."

Peter Lee, chairman of the symposium's organizing committee, said the print run was allowed to continue after the senior investigating officer, who happened to be a Christian, "put his job on the line when he recommended that the investigation into the brochure cease."

The "Love North Korea" symposium is the first missionary conference ever to focus entirely on North Korea.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Report from the Church in North Korea

by Ron MacMillan
Open Doors News Service

HONG KONG (ODNS) - Asian populations under Communist rule are generally referred to as living behind a "bamboo curtain." But never was a metaphor more inappropriate to convey the impenetrable nature of the barrier erected between North Koreans and the outside world in the bloody aftermath of the Korean War in 1953.

A more appropriate metaphor to describe the utter isolation of North Koreans from foreign influence might well have been "concrete curtain." At that time, visits and letters in and out of the country were banned and a self-proclaimed messiah, Kim Il Sung, created a personality cult so vast that it swiftly became a religion which culminated in his claim to bestow "1,000 years of eternal life" upon his followers.

Thirty-five years of total isolation has left its mark on an entire generation. One night, a recent visitor to Pyongyang was sought out by his guide who pleaded, "Please be my friend. I do not have a single friend in the whole wide world outside North Korea." He added tearfully, "We are the loneliest people on earth."

The 20 million inhabitants of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) are also prime candidates for the "most repressed" people on earth. In the latest edition of the World Human Rights Guide, North Korea gains a human rights rating of 17 percent - the second lowest in the world. Ethiopia was lowest.

Yet this may soon change. A desperate shortage of hard currency, plus a desire to stage some events in the 1988 Seoul Olympics, have combined to spark a small but growing tourist industry. Except for South Koreans and some U.S. citizens, ordinary tourists are permitted to visit the country. Even North Korean VIPs are given more freedom to travel abroad now. These are minor changes of course, but major ones are expected when Kim Il Sung - now an ailing 75-year-old dies or relinquishes power.

Expectations of change have Western observers eagerly wondering about the status of the church in the DPRK. The leading question is centered on whether the church has survived. First, because the vast majority of Christians fled from North Korea during the civil war in the early 1950s, and second, because all vestiges of Christianity were annihilated with a ruthlessness unmatched in the history of communism. All churches were closed, known Christians shot, and the Bible banned and burned.

Sources confirm that the church is alive and well in North Korea. The first source is officials of the DPRK government. In 1984, the World Council of Churches (WCC) received an invitation from North Korea to visit with a formerly unknown "Korean Christian Federation." When an official delegation from the WCC visited Pyongyang in November 1985, they were told that the Federation was modeled after China's Three-Self Patriotic Movement. i.e., state controlled and non-denominational, which had actually been in existence for "at least 15 years" though no one is sure when it originated.

A second source of factual information about Christians in North Korea are the Korean Christians in Manchuria, some of whom have traveled to North Korea and met with fellow believers. Approximately three million ethnic Koreans live in China, mostly spread throughout the three provinces of Liaoning, Jilin (which both border North Korea) and Heilongjiang. They can travel in and out of North Korea to visit relatives and it is known that some North Koreans are allowed into China to pay return visits.

In 1984-1985, representatives of the mission, Diaspora International, a Los Angeles-based ministry founded to mobilize Koreans worldwide in anticipation of the opening of the DPRK - began to contact Korean Christians in China. Although at first reluctant to divulge information, in 1986 China's Korean Christians revealed that individuals among them had traveled to North Korea and worshipped with fellow believers.

These sources claim that there are many small groups of believers meeting in villages throughout the DPRK. They do not know of any meetings larger than twenty. Guards are always posted, windows blanketed and singing hushed. They have few Bibles and those circulated are for the most part hand-copied portions or editions of a 1930s version.

Even for the Chinese Koreans the border crossing is tight. They are searched thoroughly for letters, photographs or gifts, but even so a steady trickle of New Testaments did filter in last year. In September, a letter from a DPRK Christian was smuggled out of the country, stating, "Pray that the government will open the churches ... It is impossible to share our faith. I am severely persecuted now because my neighbors know I am a believer ..."

Visitors to the DPRK are another source of information, some of whom have felt sure they met genuine Christians, but of course were not able to confirm this publicly. In 1987, the numbers of tourists visiting North Korea increased dramatically with over ten travel agencies offering no less than ninety scheduled tours.

One group of Christian visitors reported that they slipped out of their hotel one night in downtown Pyongyang, parked themselves on a street corner and began to sing Christmas carols. "We sang familiar ones like 'Hark, the Herald Angels Sing' and 'O Come, All Ye Faithful.' We didn't bellow, we just sang softly but the still night air seemed to amplify our singing." They reported that many people came up to them smiling as if they knew the hymns, and nodding as if they agreed with the sentiments.

Whether or not the church in North Korea exists today is no longer questionable. In recent years Communist officials, China-based Korean Christians and tourists have all confirmed, in their own peculiar way, the reality of a true church behind the "concrete curtain."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Philippines 1988

by Larry Pratt
7/88

In the Philippines the gospel is changing the lives of huge numbers of people who in turn are changing the course of their country's history.

This April I had an opportunity to visit the Philippines. Officially, I was there on business to report on the condition of the armed civilian self-defense organizations that have sprung up throughout the islands in the last year or two.

Unofficially, I was there to make contact with Christian leaders and observe the impact of believers in that war-torn country. What I saw gives glory to God.

A new president in February, 1986, replaced the corruption-ridden dictatorship of Ferdinand Marcos as the result of concentrated days of national prayer. A revitalized military is headed by outspoken Christians who are making their mark in that institution. Pastors who had been uninvolved outside of their pulpits are now in the forefront of exposing the deceptions of communism from the light of Scripture.

With all of its poverty, factional political disputes, and problems left over from the Marcos period, the Philippines is a land of hope and opportunity.

I was given a briefing by Brigadier General Honesto Isleta dealing with the armed civilian self-defense organizations. General Isleta is the officer in charge of the counter-insurgency campaign against the communists in the Philippines.

I noticed things in Isleta's office I had not expected to see. On the wall behind his chair is a picture of his classmate, General Fidel Ramos, the current Minister of Defense. Above Ramos' picture is a photograph of President Corazon Aquino. Above both pictures is a sign the General had made up reading: "Jesus is Lord."

In reply to a comment about the sign, Isleta referred to Romans 13 in explaining that sovereignty comes from God, and that the Defense Minister was under the President whose authority in turn was derived from God to Whom they are all accountable.

Near the door into General Isleta's office was a six-foot long table completely covered with Christian tracts and pamphlets explaining, among other things, how to be born again.

Rev. Jun Vencer, President of the Philippine Council of Evangelical Churches (PCEC), told me that church growth has been strong since 1898 when the Spanish gave up control of the Philippines. This has occurred in the face of persecution, which in recent years has primarily come from guerrilla attacks on churches and pastors, carried out by the communist New People's Army (NPA).

Vencer reports that in 1987, of the 44 member groups in his organization, 164 churches were reported to have been closed and an equal number to have been "taxed" by the NPA. The communist guerrillas have ordered 81 pastors to stop preaching and have told 106 churches to stop holding home Bible studies.

Through March of this year, 34 pastors had been killed and 25 had been kidnapped. The rural areas are the toughest because the presence of the government is the weakest there.

A New Era with Aquino

Many people give nearly identical accounts of the 1986 revolution that deposed Marcos and led to the Aquino presidency. Politics increasingly centered on palace intrigues under the tumultuous days of the waning Marcos dictatorship. These entanglements had spread to the military and had made it increasingly ineffective in the face of a mounting challenge from the NPA.

When the EDSA Revolution (named after the connecting boulevard between the presidential palace and the military headquarters) broke out in February, 1986, the EDSA filled up with as many as two million people. The military was uncertain about what to do.

The people were fraternizing with the soldiers, particularly where the confrontation could be the most direct: all along EDSA. Troops loyal to Marcos were largely thwarted by the spontaneous popular outpouring. For four days this standoff continued during which time people all along EDSA and throughout the country were praying. Not one crime was reported in Manila during those four days.

The tension peaked during a flight of attack helicopters headed toward rebel positions commanded by officers such as Generals Isleta and Ramos. Isleta told me that he had been praying Psalm 91 during this time which promises God's protection, such as: "You shall not be afraid of the terror by night, nor of the arrow that flies by day" (Psalm 91:5).

Five minutes later, the helicopters put down without attacking, effectively ending the last possibility of civil war. Isleta told me that he later learned that Ramos had been praying the same Psalm at the very same time.

There seems to be little challenge to the legitimacy of the Aquino presidency. Corazon Aquino seems to be enormously popular throughout the population. One of the things that has most discredited the NPA with its constant barrage of terrorism has been Aquino's popularity. The NPA had justified its call to arms and its extortion and murder of non-combatants by pointing to the Marcos dictatorship. The NPA, however, has not let up one bit since the installation of the popularly elected Aquino government.

The Gospel Offensive

Davao, on the southern island of Mindanao, is the Philippines' second largest city. Even though the threat of Muslim terrorists has largely subsided, the NPA counted Davao as its most successful urban laboratory until 1987. The NPA's high-water mark of control nationally, to one degree or another, was 69 of the 73 provinces of the Philippines. Davao illustrates why the NPA is in retreat throughout the country.

A spiritual dimension unites the three main elements of successful counter insurgency in Davao (and in all the the Philippines). The military commander of the region is Col. Franco Calida. Calida claims to have a personal relationship with Jesus Christ, a testimony affirmed by Christians living in Davao. Calida is also credited with having provided the military leadership in blunting the NPA assault against Davao.

The Alsa Masa (rising of the people) is the foremost armed civilian self-defense organization. It was organized by the people to provide protection from NPA extortion and attack that the government could not provide, even under the improved conditions of the post-Marcos era. The Philippines has 7,200 islands with 42,000 vil-lages, making 100 percent protection an impossibility.

Christians in Davao reported that formation of the Alsa Masa was preceded by much prayer and fasting. In fact, Christians were active in setting up the Alsa Masa and other similar groups. (Some self-defense groups were not blessed with Christian influence, and as a result, there have been isolated episodes of vigilante activity.)

When the NPA assassinated Pastor Ben Maglinte's second associate pastor, he concluded that he might be next. Maglinte went to the other Bible-believing pastors in the Davao area and told them that he was probably the next one on the NPA hit list, but that they were likely to be targeted soon after because they were also preaching the gospel, not liberation theology.

Liberation theology has permeated much of the Catholic church as well as some protestant denominations and has been a particular problem in the Philippines. In a nut shell it has used Biblical sounding words to give the hatred fostered by Marxism the appearance of Christian love. The result has been to produce a self-righteousness among its adherents that allows them to justify theft and murder in the name of Christ.

Maglinte succeeded in organizing the pastors into a non-doctrinal group for the purpose of preaching the gospel and exposing the lies of communism from the light of Scripture. Sometimes the day-long seminars that these pastors hold can be reached only with a security force provided by the Armed Forces of the Philippines (AFP) to protect them from attack.

The result of Maglinte's work has been awesome. An entire region of Mindanao around the city of Davao has been converted from an area under communist control to one in which life has largely returned to normal.

The pastors continue to preach and teach in an ever-expanding zone throughout the island. In addition to church groups and the general public, the pastors have organized seminars specifically for teachers so they will be equipped to teach the school children the same information.

On the island of Cebu, I met with Jun Alcover. Alcover is an ex-communist who has heard personally the head of the Communist Party of the Philippines (CPP), Josè Sison, give fund-raising speeches in Australia before Catholic church groups. The money so collected is directed to the Philippines through groups that are supposedly dealing with poverty of victims of military abuse, but in fact, the funds end up in the hands of the CPP.

The French magazine, LeFigaro, ran a story on March 12, 1988, on two French researchers who found that the French Catholic Committee against Hunger and for Development has donated funds to organizations in the Philippines which were controlled or strongly influenced by the National Democratic Front (a communist front group), the CPP, or others. The authors were sued by the Catholic Committee for libel, but the suit was defeated in court.

Pastor Maglante told me of the desperate need he and his fellow pastors have for funds to buy paper, mimeograph machines, and literature for their work. Their organization is called CALCOM (Christian Action to Love Communists but hate communism). Contributions can be sent by checks made out to CALCOM c/o Pastor Ben Maglante; Bible Baptist Church; Plan. Rd. Dabio Toril; Davao, Mindanao; Republic of the Philippines.

The situation was much the same elsewhere in the Philippines. In Cebu, in addition to the pastors who are faithfully preaching the gospel, the Colonel in charge of the island for Gen. Isleta, Apolinario Castaño, speaks openly of the need for the peace of Jesus Christ. Castaño, a joyful man whose speech is effortlessly sprinkled with Scripture, is often heard on radio in Cebu exposing the fallacies of liberation theology and of Marxism.

Castaño's adjutant's office is headed by an officer who routinely applies Matthew 18 to conflict resolution among the military as well as among the people of the region. If the adversaries are not Christian, then it is explained to them that Matthew 18 will not be helpful to them unless they know Jesus Christ, and they are shown how they can know Him.

In the island of Negros Occidental where the war still rages in open battle, Pastor Salustiano Cabahug speaks of the church triumphant in history. He is entitled to the view, having been the leader of an embattled church for many years in the city of Bacolod. Cabahug pastors the Community Evangelical Church, formerly associated with the American Baptist Convention.

Cabahug's 1700 member church has sponsored the establishment of 10 daughter churches around the perimeter of Bacolod with another 1000 members. In addition, Cabahug's Bible College has trained the 27 pastors that the Community Church has sponsored up in the mountains. They used to have 28, but one was killed by the NPA. At the annual conferences Cabahug gets to hear the inspiring accounts of the bravery of these mountain pastors whose sole concern has been to preach the gospel with the confidence of Romans 8:37: "Yet in all these things we are more than conquerors through Him who loved us."

There is a great deal of interest in Christianity on the campus and among young professionals in the Philippines. For example, movie theaters in Makati, the modern business district of Manila, have been taken over as worship centers.

One of the groups in the forefront of this spiritual offensive is Maranatha Christian Fellowship. In a few short years they have built large congregations in the university belt of Manila and in Makati. They are now spreading their work to university centers in other cities of the Philippines.

Maranatha is training the future leaders of the Philippines to have a faithful Christian walk in whatever profession God has called them. And they are not just taking the sheep from other flocks to build up their own. One of Maranatha's active lay evangelists, a student leader in Dagupan, had been a leader in a communist student group before becoming a Christian. He has turned away from his proclamation of bloody revolution to proclaiming the praises of God.

The spiritual awakening occurring in the Philippines is incomprehensible to the communists who assume the spiritual dimension of man to be irrelevant. They may never know why their apparatus, so painstakingly built up over many years, faces what could be a steady, and even rapid, collapse. The next two years are not likely to be good ones for being a communist in the Philippines, but there is no doubt that they will be a great time for the Christians.

Filipino Bibles

MANILA, Philippines (EP) - The Philippine armed forces have received the first of 300,000 New Testaments to be supplied by the International Bible Society. The Scriptures are being sent in response to a request from General Fidel Ramos, Philippine Secretary for National Defense. Concerned with insurgency and poor morale in the armed forces, the government began a Values Formation Program to help soldiers build stronger moral values, develop spiritually, and regain the respect of the public.

Leaders of the program emphasize God's Word as the way to make military men's and women's hearts right. Army General Honesto Isleta told Christian leaders in the Philippines that "there are too many factions within the military. But before we can reconcile with each other, we must be reconciled within ourself. Only God can change us."

General Ramos asked the International Bible Society to fund the New Testaments since Bibles in the Philippines generally cost more than a soldier's daily wage. Each Bible, translated in either English or one of five leading Philippine dialects, will contain a special page explaining the gospel and how to receive Christ.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(c50c8b7b2cc2cf9ff925edec0ee94c0d_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(6a9b39b98eb945faa14c645ec99e4eaa_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Post-Marxist countries experience spiritual awakening

10/91

BUDAPEST, Hungary - "God has brought the republics of the Soviet Union to a time of evangelistic harvest unparalleled in history, but there are still tremendous obstacles to overcome," according to a Russian-speaking researcher after intensive study in the Soviet Union.

About 50 participants from post-Marxist countries plus about 130 members of the Lausanne Committee attended a six day summit in September in Budapest, Hungary sponsored by the Lausanne Committee on World Evangelism.

The assessments of the speakers from eight post-Marxist countries is that a religious revival is taking place in parts of Romania, Bulgaria and the Soviet Republics, but not in all post-Marxist countries.

Steve Weber, Eastern European regional director of Issachar, a religious research organization, told the Lausanne Committee that people in the Soviet Republics are crying for forgiveness and salvation to fill the spiritual void created by the death of Marxism.

Peter Kuzmic, a seminary president from Yugoslavia, said that civil wars as well as religious revivals could break out in any part of the new republics of the Soviet Union and the countries of Eastern Europe. Kuzmic explained that under communist rule, both nationalism and religion were at best tolerated, and at worst persecuted. "Now, with the collapse of Marxism and with the removal of totalitarianism, whatever has been repressed is now exploding."

Over and over, participants from post-Marxist countries said that instead of money, they need people who will plant their lives in the Soviet Republics, learn the language, and demonstrate what it means to be a Christian in a post-Marxist society.

Alexander Semchenko, president of a Protestant publishing company in Russia, said one of the greatest needs in the Soviet Republics is literature for Christian education and discipleship training.

Peotr Krauchuk, Baptist superintendent for central Russia, said that during the three days of darkness of the recent coup in the Soviet Union, Christians in Moscow gave out five New Testaments to each of the tank crews guarding the Russian parliament building. Krauchuk said two of the tank crews decided not to drive their tanks any further, and left.

With the removal of totalitarianism, whatever has been repressed is now exploding.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Reflections After Desert Storm

By Mark Shelby
9/91

Operation Desert Storm, the military name for the Persian Gulf Conflict of 1991, has yielded some unforeseen results. Many of America's young men and women accepted Jesus Christ during the war. Our generation has yet to see the full results of their spiritual transformation.

On the night of January 16, 1991, the night before the start of the Persian Gulf Conflict, I was attending a church prayer meeting called specifically about the Gulf Crisis. Having some knowledge of military tactics and strategy, I had wondered why our government was sending thousands of reserve troops into combat.

During the prayer service, God revealed to me that He had had a hand in sending in the reserve troops because there were very many believers in the reserves. These soldiers were being sent into a situation where the surrounding Muslim countries were completely closed to the Gospel. Now these nations were forced into a situation in which many Christians had come into their societies.

The Gospel was spread through our reserve soldiers to the armies of participating nations, and through those troops to the people of their homelands. This was also the door through which the Gospel went to the Muslim peoples of the world. God used the conflict to start to liberate these countries through the power of His Spirit.

Shortly after that, I had an assurance from God that he would also protect our troops from unnecessary destruction during the impending conflict. He reminded me of 2 Kings 6:16: "Don't be afraid. Those who are with us are more than those who are with them."

In this passage of scripture, the city where Elisha and his servant are staying is surrounded by an Aramean army sent there to capture Elisha. When Elisha's servant woke up the next day to go out, he saw that they were surrounded by this enemy army. In his distress, he cried out to Elisha. This is when Elisha told him not to worry, that there were more with them than there were with the enemy.

Then Elisha prayed to God: "Oh Lord, open his eyes so he may see." When Elisha's servant looked again he "saw the hills full of horses and chariots of fire all around Elisha." This was an angelic army of the Lord surrounding the enemy forces, and protecting Elisha. After that revelation, Elisha went on to win the war.

The evidence accumulated during the Persian Gulf Conflict fully supports the assurance given to many praying believers before the war even started. God's purpose - to "make disciples of all nations" - was brought a little closer to fruition, even in nations that are completely closed to Christian missionaries.

Another evidence of the power of God was the great number of soldiers who became Christians during the conflict. Media reports of troops praying, attending Bible studies and church services abounded. There were even reports of miracles which took place during the action.

In contrast to the tens of thousands of predicted casualties, there were only a few hundred Americans who died and even fewer injuries. The mighty hand of God was at work during the war, no doubt due to the prayers offered for the protection of our troops and for the promotion of the Gospel in that area of the world.

Although war is a horrible thing, God had a purpose which he accomplished through Desert Storm; and those who prayed for our troops were partners in the effectiveness of His purpose.

Onward Christian Pacifists?

A quote concerning the recent Gulf War:

"Blessed are the peacemakers," SOMEONE once said. Who are these peacemakers? They are not, as some might suppose, banner waving marchers and protesters. These only cause disunity, disloyalty, disruption and dispeace. The real peacemakers are our gallant troops and equally gallant Allies fighting to rid the world of evil in the Gulf. Peace comes after victory, victory comes after a battle.

- Rev. Canon Malcolm Widdecombe
Vicar, St. Philip & St. Jacob Anglican Church
Bristol, England

A quote concerning spiritual warfare:

The prayers of holy men appease God's wrath, drive away temptations, resist and overcome the devil, procure the ministry and service of angels, rescind the decrees of God. Prayer cures sickness and obtains pardon; it arrests the sun in its course and stays the wheels in the chariot of the moon; it rules over all the gods and opens and shuts the storehouses of rain, it unlocks the cabinet of the womb and quenches the violence of fire; it stops the mouths of lions and reconciles our suffering and weak faculties with the violence of torment and violence of persecution; it pleases God and supplies all our need.

- Jeremy Taylor
Purpose in Prayer

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

The Humiliation Factor: Beginning the Restoration of Iraq and Kuwait

By Rose Weiner and Jay Rogers

3/91

In the aftermath of the Persian Gulf War, many news sources referred to the "Humiliation of Iraq and Saddam Hussein." As this article goes to print, Hussein is reported to have a limited time left in power, as his own soldiers attempt to overthrow him.

The Muslim world was looking for a hero in Saddam Hussein. Instead they found a cruel man exposed in all of his vicious brutality. The humiliation of Iraq tells the story of the many people groups living in this area. Within Iraq there are Persians, Arabs, Palestinians, Kurdish and many other nationalities. The political boundary lines of Iraq do not speak of one nation, but of the cruel oppression of many.

This is similar to the conquest of Asia by the Japanese, when they surrendered after their defeat in World War II. The Emperor of Japan, Hirohito, surrendered not only his weapons and military forces but also surrendered his gods, believing that they were inadequate and unable to help the Japanese people. Observing the kindness in which the United States soldiers treated the defeated Japanese, he stated that he had never seen an army like the Americans, that did not rape, pillage and brutalize the captured foe.

Because of this, he requested that Christian missionaries be sent to Japan to teach the Japanese about the God of the Christians. General Douglas MacArthur asked for 1000 missionaries to come to the broken and receptive people of Japan. The church yawned and very few responded to the call. Today, Japan has become an economic giant but has a spiritual vacuum for a heart.

Perhaps nothing stands out more in the aftermath of the Gulf War than the contrast of the way the U.S. troops treated Iraqi POW's with the way Iraqis treated not only POW's, but the people of Kuwait as well as its own soldiers. Who could forget the scenes of allied airmen paraded before the camera who had obviously been beaten. Some of the first Iraqi soldiers to defect were poorly clothed, covered with lice. Many had wounds and sores that had not been treated. They were in desperate need of food.

After the ground war was underway, it was evident that many of the Iraqi soldiers were waiting to surrender. One soldier who was bare chested came out of his bunker clutching the piece of paper the allies had air dropped to tell the soldiers how to surrender. He laid down on the ground and his hands were tied behind his back, A U.S. soldier knelt down beside him and began to give him a drink of water.

There were other images of Iraqi soldiers coming out of their bunkers and kissing the hands of the U.S. soldiers to whom they were surrendering. Scenes of American soldiers giving medical aid to the wounded stand out in stark contrast to the gouged out eyes, cut off ears, and the sliced limbs and faces of the people of Kuwait who were treated so ruthlessly by their Iraqi captors.

Whether every American soldier professes to be a Christian or not, the American forces acted in principle according to the teachings of Jesus, "Love your enemies" and the teachings of Peter, "not returning evil for evil, or insult for insult, but giving a blessing instead." The impact of that Christian witness upon the Iraqi soldiers who received mercy left their imprint.

Christian mercy could be observed being extended through Norman Swartzcoff. As he walked toward the tent where he would take the official surrender from the Iraqi Generals, he instructed his aids, "Don't do anything to publicly humiliate these men. I don't want any of them to be embarrassed." They were searched in a tent privately before the meeting.

Although the American troops were not allowed to publicly display a Bible or cross while in Saudi Arabia, behind the scenes revival fires were burning as young men separated from American comfort and entertainment looked the possibility of death and immortality in the face. Many turned to God. Bible studies were held nightly from tent to tent.

Army Specialist Brad J. White wrote in a letter to his wife, "I've taken advantage of the endless hours of waiting. I've been going to a Bible study a couple of nights a week. It's really enlightening. I can fully understand now why God placed key figures of biblical times into the desert for days, months even years at a time. In some ways it's very cleansing." (Newsweek, "I Don't Want Any Tears", March 4, 1991, pp. 30-31)

In the meantime, some Iraqis began to loose hope in Allah. Iraqi women could be seen going to Orthodox churches to seek the help from the Christian God, as an ABC News video clip attested. "Humiliation" is closely related to the word "humility" which speaks of a humble and contrite heart. This is the heart revealed in these women - the willingness to open up in a new way to God.

The Christian witness, prayer and worship to God in the heart of Islamic territory did much to break the spiritual powers over the region. The war in the natural was a mirror of the war that was going on in the heavenlies as God moved to break the power of Islam in order to open up Moslem nations for the gospel. The Kuwaiti people are thankful to Americans for their liberty. Something they say that has created a bond between Kuwait and the American people that will always be there.

And now the Resistance Front wants democracy for Kuwait. The Resistance who worked during Iraq's occupation to protect the Iraqi people is demanding democracy, freedom of the speech, and freedom of press. The women are demanding a right to vote. They said the Emir can maintain his title as long as he doesn't stand in the way of liberty. This strikes at the heart of Islam which is dictatorial in nature and is on a collision course with free markets, free voting and free press. As the winds of freedom blow, Islamic nations will begin to open up to the gospel.

God is overturning nations on a massive scale never seen before. When the Lord of All Nations strikes down a great nation, brace yourself for action. Prepare for massive changes! The God of History will not lose the Great War for the Earth! Pray for laborers to be thrust into the harvest!

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Satanic Fury: The Force Behind Islam

Salman Rushdie's novel unleashes death sentence on author

by Margaret Sullivan

3/89

In February of this year the world came face to face with the forces behind the religion of Islam. The literary controversy over author Salman Rushdie's novel The Satanic Verses, which occasionally deals with Islam in a fanciful and irreverent way, became front-page news when the Ayatollah Khomeini condemned the author and decreed, "It is incumbent on every Muslim to do everything possible to send him to hell."

The Ayatollah's death sentence and $5 million reward for Rushdie's head are symptoms of a fast-growing religious movement which is showing its tyrannical tendencies. With an Islamic holy jihad declared upon the author, driving him into hiding, the Ayatollah has revealed the true colors of Islam to the West.

"Salman Rushdie is a dead man," an Iranian exile in Britain told Newsweek. "As long as the fatwa (theological ruling) remains, he could be killed at any time. There is no way to protect him. He will be followed for the rest of his life." Although the Indian-born author has reportedly repented for his statements, Khomeini told his followers to "send him to hell" for blaspheming their faith.

A former Muslim, Rushdie is now a British subject who doesn't consider his book blasphemous. Before going into hiding, he complained about the "Islamic thought police." Egyptian writer Naguib Mafouz, who became the first Arab to win the Nobel Prize in literature, agreed by saying that the Ayatollah should be condemned for "intellectual terrorism."

Muslim critics say Khomeini "hopped on the bandwagon" in mobilizing opposition to the book to consolidate his waning power among his followers, especially with Iran's economic crisis brewing discontent at home. Since the advent of his administration in 1979, Iran's economy has slowly descended into its present state of collapse due to high unemployment rates and factory production below half-capacity. The rising number of drug addicts and the high number of executions compounds the problem of a demoralized populace. Amnesty International has reported more than 1,000 executions of political prisoners since July, and Rushdie may be added to this number.¹

Why has a simple novel unleashed such fury from Muslims around the world? Consider one of the most controversial passages in which a character named Salman describes his disenchantment with a new religion called "Submission," which is the English translation of Islam, and its prophet "Mahound." The following passage satirizes the heart of Islam, and scoffs at the idea that the Koran is the holy scripture revealed to Mohammed by the archangel Gabriel:

"Amid the palm-trees of the oasis Gibreel appeared to the Prophet and found himself spouting rules, rules, rules, until the faithful could scarcely bear the prospect of anymore revelation ... It was as if no aspect of human existence was to be left unregulated, free. The revelation ... told the faithful how much to eat, how deeply they should sleep ..."

The Koran, translated, means "the Reading," or "the Recitation." In Islam, rote memorization is considered more virtuous than comprehending the meaning or the understanding of its passages. In fact, the title "Hafiz," or protector, is given to those who memorize it. The preoccupation with rules for every facet of life - along with unquestioning submission to authority - is a chief characteristic of the Islamic faith. Although Satanic Verses is offensive satire, it does unveil the deadly forces behind Islam.

Forced Submission and the Reign of Terror

One out of every five human beings in the world claims to be a Muslim. Once an Islamic government is installed in a nation, it is against the law to claim allegiance to any other belief. For example, one of the citizenship requirements in Saudi Arabia is allegiance to Islam.

Although the United States has been lambasted for supposedly imposing its Christian beliefs on the rest of the world, the Ayatollah and his followers have been viewed as a small, politically insignificant radical faction who should be allowed to exercise their beliefs under the protection of religious freedom - a Western idea - while attempting to export the Islamic revolution into other nations.

The concept of forced submission encompasses relationships between men and women. Muslim men have the sole power to divorce their wives at whim. Scourging wives, polygamy, and concubines are sanctioned by the Koran: "Men are in charge of women because Allah hath made the one of them to excel the other, and because they spend of their property (for the support of women). So good women are obedient, guarding in secret that which Allah hath guarded. As for those from whom ye fear rebellion, admonish them and banish them to beds apart, and scourge them" (Surat al-Nisa 4:176).

Women in Islamic countries must completely cover themselves, and can only expose their eyes and hands. Thus, although women are forced to completely cover themselves, they are vulnerable to becoming concubines, or sex-slaves. The Islamic solution to cure the lust problem in a man is to force the woman to submit and completely cover herself; her destiny is also fully placed in his hands.

But Muslim women are not the only victims of this unyielding force. Innocent people around the world have suffered as well. The Ayatollah Khomeini, the most powerful Muslim leader in the world, has brought terror, kidnappings, and murder to the West, while literally controlling the global oil supply. Rushdie's death sentence, as well as Iran's economic crisis, are the fruit of a growing religious movement which has brought a reign of terror upon Middle Eastern nations.

Consider the one million Armenian Christians who were slaughtered by Turkish Muslims at the beginning of the 20th century. The atrocities and kidnappings which are done for the cause of Islam are usually carried out by terrorist groups such as Al Jihad in Lebanon or Al Muhahideen in Iran. Al Muhahideen has provided the largest number of fanatic terrorist fighters in the war with Iraq. More than

1,000 people in the town of Diem in the Sudan were massacred in 1987 because of Islamic law.¹ When the Sudan was officially declared an Islamic republic, dozens of pastors were killed and many churches were destroyed.²

The violent, bloody history of Islam was inaugurated by its founder, Mohammed, who would kill those that refused to be converted during his crusades. When Mohammed's armies attacked cities, they offered their enemies three choices: 1) profess the Islam faith, 2) pay tribute, or 3) die by the sword. Many Christians died by the sword, but many others converted their churches into mosques.

Interestingly, the first victim of this practice was a poetess slain by one of his followers for a poem she composed that ridiculed him. Her verses on the folly of putting faith in a stranger who had slain so many of his own people spread throughout one of the main cities. The murderer was honored by Mohammed for his vile deed, and the poetess's family was converted to Islam after their lives were threatened with death.

This warlike militancy stems from the concept of "Jihad," or "Holy War." Men are required to go to war in order to spread Islam or defend it against infidels. One who dies in Jihad is guaranteed eternal life. The Ayatollah Khomeini has preached this doctrine of Jihad by saying, "The purest joy in Islam is to kill, and be killed for Allah."

According to the Koran: "The only reward of those who make war upon Allah and His messenger and strive after corruption in the land will be that they will be killed or crucified, or have their hands and feet on alternate sides cut off, or will be expelled out of the land. Such will be their degradation in the world, and in the Hereafter theirs will be an awful doom."

The growing menace and threat to freedom in the 1990s is not communism, but rather Islam, "the religion of the sword," which claims 85 million followers in the Middle East and Asia. Islam also claims approximately three million followers in the U.S. Nearly 612 mosques have been built in this country, and the Muslim Student Association wants to get on every major college campus.

The Difference Between Christianity and Islam

Islam, as revealed in the recent actions of the Ayatollah, is a religion of legalistic demands and merciless vengeance. True Christianity, on the opposite side of the spectrum, is characterized by love, forgiveness, and internal obedience to the indwelling Holy Spirit. Christianity will overcome the power of Islam by coming in an opposite spirit of love and forgiveness, rather than hatred, control, and vindictive violence.

In comparing Islam and Christianity, a good beginning is to examine the lives of Jesus and Mohammed. Jesus lived a sinless life, whereas Mohammed prayed earnestly and frequently for forgiveness of his sins. Jesus never conducted any bloody crusades, however, Mohammed fought or led in 66 battles. Jesus never ordered the death of anyone; Mohammed ordered the death of many men and women who refused to be converted to Islam.

Jesus's goal was to establish His kingdom internally in the heart of man first, and then let it affect the world; Mohammed wanted an earthly empire built by external obedience. Christianity is based on mercy and love for its enemies, whereas Islam requires the sword for its enemies. Jesus was crucified for the sins of the world and was resurrected on the third day. Mohammed died from pneumonia at age 62.

The Koran accurately describes the life, ministry, and divinity of Jesus Christ; however, the importance of the Cross is devalued because of the belief that Jesus "cast his likeness onto another man and that another man was crucified instead of Jesus."³ Redemption and the crucifixion of Jesus Christ are irrelevant to most Muslims, whereas for Christians it is a fundamental belief.

Muslims believe salvation is by works and repentance from sin. Therefore the power of atonement resident in the Cross is of no relevance. The Cross is just an empty religious symbol. For Christians, however, the cross is the avenue to becoming a new creature in Christ (II Corinthians 5:17). The sinful nature of man, which can't be changed by good deeds, must be dealt with, and a sinless sacrifice is needed to present to God. Thus the Cross is not only significant for atonement; it is the place of reconciliation between God and man.

How will the "Satanic fury" of militant Islam be stopped? There is only one force in the world which has the power to deliver man from hatred and violence - and that is the Christian gospel. The message of Jesus Christ's love and atonement has, in past centuries, tamed the barbarians of northern Europe, civilized the West, caused wars to cease, and liberated nations from dictatorship. It will be no different in the Muslim world. One day Christian liberty will blanket the Middle East, and the world will be a much safer place as a result.

1 Pletka, Daniel, "Infighting and a Lack of Cash Hinder Reconstruction Efforts," Insight Magazine, Feb. 27, 1989, pp. 28-30.

2 Shorrosh, Dr. Anis, Islam Revealed (Nashville, Tennessee:Thomas Nelson Publishers), 1988, p. 171

3 Ibid.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Singaporean student testimony

by Sean Hoo

University of Minnesota/Minneapolis

9/88

I was born and raised in Singapore in a Buddhist family. Naturally, I practiced the Buddhist faith, sincerely believing that I was worshipping God. In 1984, I came to the University of Minnesota to study business.

Within my first month in Minneapolis, I rented a car and drove to Toronto to visit a Singaporean friend who was studying there. I drove 90 miles an hour most of the way in order to get there quickly. Suddenly, I lost control of the car, and it spun around, went off the shoulder, and rolled over about four times. When my face went into the windshield, I remember crying out two words: "Oh, God!" The car was totally destroyed, but I escaped ... needing only eleven stitches.

I strongly believe it was God who saved my life, but I was confused because I did not cry out to my Buddhist god as I would have normally. It was at that point that I began searching for the God who saved my life. I went to a church service a few weeks after the accident and heard the gospel of Jesus Christ for the first time.

It was there that I met the God who saved my life! I stopped trying to reach Him through my own efforts, and, instead, trusted in His mercy and grace to save me. I then chose to serve Him as the Lord of my life and turned away from my Buddhist beliefs.

I felt as if I had been raised from the dead. I no longer had the desire to smoke, drink, and curse ... I only wanted to tell the whole world what Jesus had done for me. I contacted my Singaporean friends at Purdue University, the University of Wisconsin, and my friend in Canada. They all transferred to the University of Minnesota.

My testimony was evidence of the miracle-working power of Jesus Christ. Within weeks, all of these friends became Christians! I know that God is also going to use me when I return to Singapore and continue to preach the good news of Jesus Christ.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

South African Student Testimony

5/89

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (FR) - Christopher was a black Sotho chemistry graduate who spoke 14 languages at one of the most liberal and prestigious universities in South Africa. Paul was a white American missionary visiting Johannesburg to help begin a church. Neither of the two had anything in common, yet in the midst of the Afrikaan prejudice ingrained in the institutions of South Africa, these two men found common ground.

It wasn't through a political demonstration against apartheid or at a rally - which are routine at the University of Wits. Instead, the common ground that Christopher, or "Tswana," and Paul found was the Christian faith. "I was on campus sharing with people about Jesus," said Paul Serravalle, who traveled to Johannesburg from Gainesville, Florida. "Christopher just walked up to me and said 'Hi.' Ironically, the name Tswana means 'leave him alone.' "

Paul shared the Gospel with Christopher, and he became a Christian. An hour-and-a-half later, Christopher led a Zulu man in a prayer to become a Christian, while witnessing with Paul in Johannesburg's inner city. Christopher and Paul's relationship is an example of an undercurrent rippling throughout the nation, unifying whites and blacks in a manner that no law could initiate or enact. "When people see white Christians loving black Christians, it blows them away," Serravalle said.

Serravalle didn't realize the extent of institutionalized prejudice in South Africa until he tried to find housing for two black students in the church. "When they found out I was looking for housing for two black guys, and not myself, they refused to rent to them, and the multi-racial residences were always filled up." Johannesburg's inner-city has a large population of street people who come looking for work.

"There has been an improvement, but the civic centers administration, which is responsible for handling complaints, was instructed by the sheriff to not process anymore complaints. They basically have turned their back on implementing integrated housing," he explained.

South Africa has made headlines on everything from apartheid to the price of gold, and international sanctions have become routine foreign policy. No reasonable person could blame the world community for it's revulsion of the legalized institution of racial discrimination. Yet the dilemma of racial prejudice and discrimination is only part of the story of South Africa.

"Where sin abounds, grace abounds even more - that is a proven truth in South Africa," said Bill Bennot, pastor of the Maranatha Campus Ministry in Johannesburg. Maranatha began a church a year-and-a-half ago at the University of Wits, which is considered the "Berkeley" of South Africa. Since then the church has become a model of multi-racial diversity on a campus full of racial unrest.

"The campuses are facing more than just government intervention," said Bennot. "They are facing the intervention of the mercies of God. The predominant voice on campus has mainly been condemnation and confusion. Now the gospel of Jesus Christ is coming to the forefront with a message of redemption and reconciliation. Hundreds of students are shedding the cloak of sin and sharing boldly in their new-found 'robes of righteousness.' "

An example is Carol Visser, an Afrikaan biochemistry student: "I was a typical student - aimless, directionless, rebellious and without hope. But the love of Jesus Christ and the power of His death and resurrection changed my life. Now I am secure in the knowledge that He has a purpose and a destiny for my life and for many others that He will reach through my life."

"Young men and women are not only coming to their new found faith in Jesus, they are also responding to the call for leaders to go to the nations," Bennot explained. "In the first major outreach that Maranatha Ministries had at the Wits campus, 60 percent of those that gave their hearts to Jesus became members of the newly established church."

Debbie Ganesh, a dentistry student, says that God has prepared her to be a missionary. "I praise God for the calling He has put upon my life to go out into the nations and proclaim His glory." Gary Gilchrist, a professional golfer, said, "God reached down to reveal Jesus to me. And when He saved me, He also called me to be a witness to all peoples."

The zeal of the South African students is so great that Maranatha's first training school in Africa had to be established quickly to accommodate their desire to evangelize. Just a few months after the initial outreach, over 60 young people were trained and are a part of the church's evangelism and follow-up program. Even now Maranatha Ministries of Africa is preparing to establish it's second church during the early months of 1990.

Some members of the Maranatha Church in Johannesburg have already relocated to Cape Town, the new target city. A trained member of the Maranatha Church also transferred to the University of Durban on the east coast. She is now gathering information necessary to begin a new ministry.

Many different African nations are represented in the Maranatha Church and these students have a vision to go back and reach their nations. "The Zulu, North Sotho, South Sotho, Tswana, Mathabele, and Shona nations are examples of the diversity that the Lord is putting together to reach Africa for Jesus." said Bennot. "Truly the Lord takes the foolish things to confound the wise. Only Almighty God could take people from a nation known for racial discrimination and build them into a united body anointed to reach all groups of people."

A nine by twelve foot map of the world covers an entire wall in the Maranatha center - a clear indication, according to Bennot, of the seriousness of these students' love for Jesus and His world. "'To God be all the glory,' is their heart cry," he said, "and truly no one can take credit for this precious work except God Almighty."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Soviet Soldiers in Afghanistan

by Dan Wooding
4/88

WASHINGTON, D.C. (ODNS) - Soviet soldiers sent to Afghanistan as a punishment for their Christian faith are evangelizing Afghans and leading Bible studies there. This surprising news was revealed by an anonymous Open Doors News Service (ODNS) source who once lived in Afghanistan and has just returned from a fact-finding trip to that country.

"A large number of Soviet soldiers who are believers are actively sharing their faith with Afghans," the source said in an exclusive interview. "They are giving out Christian literature, as well as holding Bible studies and prayer meetings in the country."

He said the Soviet soldiers were sent to Afghanistan because of their Christian beliefs. "It's the Soviet government's way of persecuting them, but what they've done instead is send them on an evangelistic mission to one of the toughest mission fields in the world." He added, "Afghans are definitely becoming Christians because of their witness."

The source said his investigations in the country, one of the most difficult Islamic nations in the world to penetrate with the Christian message, revealed that the tiny church there is growing. "However, I'm not talking about hundreds of converts in the country," he said. "I would say that there are no more than one thousand Christians in the whole country."

According to church researcher, David Barrett, "Islam is the professed religion of virtually the entire populace." In his book, World Christian Encyclopedia, Barrett states that no missionaries, Catholic or Protestant, have been permitted inside Afghanistan. "Since the penalty for apostasy from Islam is death, the few native Afghans attracted to Christianity have in most cases left the country."

The first permanent Protestant church building in Afghanistan was completed in 1971 but destroyed by government order in 1973. According to Barrett, there were only 9,340 Christian adherents in Afghanistan in the mid-1980s, but some Afghanistan observers believe these numbers are overstated.

In his survey of the Afghan capital, the source said the largest gathering of believers is no more than fifteen. "That's tightly controlled and no Westerners get to attend these meetings. They are very careful because in the past they have been betrayed by 'spies.' Most Afghan Christians usually meet in two's and three's," he said.

The source said he thought it ironic that Soviet soldiers were at the forefront of evangelism in the country where almost all Western attempts at evangelism have been of little success.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Spain: Five Hundred Years and Religious Freedom

Pedro C. Moreno

8/92

At the time of commemoration of five hundred years since the Catholic Monarchs issued a decree by which thousands of unconverted Spanish Jews were expelled from Spain, this nation has signed some "Accords" that attempt, at least in part, to rectify old intolerances, especially in religious matters. The "Accords of Cooperation Between the Spanish State and the Federation of Israeli Communities and the Federation of Evangelical Entities" (FEREDE) were signed on February 21, 1990 and are currently in the process of ratification by the Spanish parliament (the Cortes).

Spain has had a pronounced history of religious intolerance. Once the Spanish civil war was over, the Roman Catholic Church contributed to the establishment of Franco's authoritarian rule through a "National Catholicism" that excluded all dissident religious movements (Concordat of 1953, Art. 1). Non-catholic churches were closed, religious publications were confiscated, civil marriages were forbidden, non-catholic religious educational centers were outlawed, and religious proselytism (other than catholic) was strictly prohibited.

José Cardona G., Executive Secretary of FEREDE, who recently was awarded the "Gold Medal" by the Spanish Pro-Human Rights League because of his defense of religious freedom in Spain, said: "Any political or religious dissidence was condemned to be repressed and extinguished ... in order to maintain the spiritual unity of the nation." (Principles of the National Movement, Art. 2).

As time went by the Franco regime began to soften, but very slowly because it was constrained by the concordat, "which really was a 'conformat' of the state to the requirements of the 'religious unity,'" said Cardona. In 1978 a new Constitution was signed, providing in Article 16 for "the freedom of religion, worship, and ideology for the individuals and communities, without other limitations in their manifestation than the necessary to maintain public order protected by law." The third part of the article, state established religion, declares: "No (religious) confession will have official status." Under this constitutional provision, Organic Law 7/1980 was enacted dealing with religious liberty, and the above-mentioned Accords were made possible based on this latter law.

The Accords drawn within the framework of the principle of "aconfessionality" of the state, recognize the "manifest rootage" in Spanish society of the Protestant Christian communities (and Jewish ones) and give them a status and prerogatives formerly enjoyed only by the Catholic church. Provisions in the Accords, divided in 13 articles, deal with issues such as elimination of property taxes for temples and other places of worship; and equals the term "Protestant minister" to "Catholic priest" affording the former the same recognition and privileges that the latter enjoys, making possible for Protestant ministers to serve as chaplains in the military and to obtain social security. The right to religious assistance by a member of his/her own creed, is also provided for, and can be exercised by any person interned in a military, educational, or health facility.

In the educational realm, public and private schools could be compelled to provide Protestant religious instruction to the students that so required it. With these provisions and considering that the Spanish Protestant population does not even reach one per cent of the population (71,000 people), the status of religious freedom in Spain would be one of the most comprehensive, comparable (at least in theory) to the one in the United States and others countries in Europe.

Enrique Mugica, Spanish Minister of Justice, in his speech given at the signing of these Accords remarked: "When we now speak of Spain, we do not speak of the one which has been for centuries the 'official' Spain, as if that would be the only possible one. There have always been other Spains, unavoidably connected to that which was considered 'heresy' or the resistance to the yoke of hegemonic officialism."

"A Spain," says Mugica referring to the real Spain, "heterodox but infinitely fertile, versatile, agile, creative and dynamic. It is the case of the converted Calvinists, Huguenots, and other forms of 'Protestants' in their original sense, because Protestants were, in the most pristine manner, those who raised their voice against the despotic rule of the officialized dogma, a dogma that has always tried to clothe itself with the prestige of the 'majority' creed."

Speaking about democracy, the Minister of Justice added: "It is necessary to recall sometimes that the history of Spain has not always been extremely good at compatibilizing the public sentiment and the democratic system. On the contrary, public matters have always been easy prey of a patrimonial deviation of the idea of 'the official.' In consequence, we have been slow to understand that democracy implies not only the realization of the will of the majority, but also the awareness of the limits of that majority." And he notes: "What we understand as the right to dissent in the defense of a (religious) belief, has become an essential factor of verification for the democratic system."

Finally, and in relation to the five hundred years, Mugica affirms: "Taking as a starting point this invitation to the maximum liberty and social integration of all creeds and beliefs, we can overcome the negative reference that for many involves the myth of '92. And I have used the word "myth" intentionally, because '92 is certainly the Fifth Centenary of a date in which it was inaugurated a time of affirmation and conquest, outwardly oriented and externalized with the expelling of the Jews. This time demonstrated the will to exclude from that political project anything that represented a minority, heterodoxy, dissidence, or mere diversity. The decree that provided for the expelling of the Jews meant, in effect, an exclusive and selective reading of the Spanish reality. A reading, that in my opinion could be equated to a 'self-denial.'"

The Minister of Justice sentenced: "For the Spanish democracy, '92 is not the vindication of exclusive epics with a totalitarian vocation, but on the contrary, the symbol of our own historical effort to advance toward democracy."

Pedro Moreno San Juan, is an attorney, President of the Rutherford Institute of Bolivia and representative for Spanish speaking countries.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(4b7a79268f6ba26c1471d4232fffa85a_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(95b425611cbd2b8716a140cf67c81822_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Testimony of prophetic minister from Singapore

Joy S. Ay Goh

God's mercy saw me through 30 years of ill health, rejection, pain, sorrow, failures, grief so intense that it led me to two suicide attempts, a long string of broken relationships, a constant change of jobs, a life full of rebellion and an intense interest in the occult. I was also constantly disillusioned by the wickedness and the corruption of the world. I looked for answers but found none. In the midst of all that, I had refused to submit my life to the Lord. I was stubborn, worldly and bitter - thinking that I could make it without Him.

It was prior to two incidents of being hit by bolts of lightning (while speaking on the telephone during heavy thunderstorms) that I was admitted in a hospital with breathing complications. The diagnosis was psychosomatic bronchial asthma. These unusual incidents left me drained of energy, weak, and sick. In His own way, God had given a very obvious call to surrender.

Finally, in the early months of 1986, after many traumatic experiences, I was brought to my knees in utter surrender to Him. The realization that there was absolutely nothing in this world worth living for, I gave myself wholly to seek Him. No longer do I count my life dear unto myself. For months with tears and weeping, I would go alone before the Lord at the back pews of a church. Then one morning the Lord told me to leave for America. I obeyed and sold whatever I had and left.

In America, the Lord put me in a campus ministry of young international students. Then God sent me to attend an international student conference in Seattle, Washington hosted by Maranatha Campus Ministries. I received the baptism of the Holy Spirit there and was miraculously delivered. It was a divine experience when I felt Jesus reach out to me, and comfort me on His shoulders while I wept. I could not open my eyes while the tangible presence of God and His love just overwhelmed me.

My life changed with new hope and direction. I had an intense hunger for the things of God. I surrendered my will and desires to Him and He began to put a new vision in my heart ... a vision to be involved and to be part of His glorious church. At this conference, I made a covenant with God to serve and to share this vision with the nations. That is my desire now - to take His life-changing power to the world!

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(5361750c22c4e047a52f4eac1ec2d4cc_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(870f5d5e9c0d57485634be3ecf52f3ca_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Churches in Latin America, India and China to experience explosive growth before 2000

By Jim Newton
2/92

OXFORD, England (WEIS) - A broad analysis of trends in world evangelization by the international director of the Lausanne Committee for World Evangelization predicts the largest response to the Gospel between now and AD 2000 will be in Latin America, India and China.

Tom Houston of Oxford, England, estimates that by AD 2000, there could be 50 million new believers in Latin America, 40 million in India, and 30 million in China.

Houston's forecasts entitled, A Scenario Status of World Evangelization, 1991-2000, are in the final stages of editing for possible publication by Missions Advance Research and Communication Center (MARC) in Monrovia, Calif., USA.

Houston says research by David Barrett, Patrick Johnstone and Frank Kaleb Jansen shows that Christians are only marginally increasing their percentage of the world population by 0.1 percent per annum. Barrett is author of the World Christian Encyclopedia, (1982), Johnstone is author of Operation World, (1986), and Jansen is author of Target Earth, (1989).

The "Scenario Status" is forecast in what Houston describes as "relatively homogeneous regions," with data on the status of world evangelization in various countries within each region. In each section, Houston also summarizes key factors and trends which affect evangelization in that region.

Latin America

The greatest response to the gospel, he says, will be in Latin America where 50 million new believers are anticipated. Currently members of Protestant/Evangelical churches comprise about 11 percent of the population. Houston predicts evangelical churches will continue to grow because of the Biblical message and warm fellowships they provide. About 75 percent of the evangelicals are Pentecostal.

Houston also forecasts fast growth of "mega-churches" like the Jotabeche church in Santiago, Chile, and the Vision of the Future church in Argentina. He says eight Assemblies of God churches in Brazil report memberships of 20,000 to 110,000.

India

Houston projects the possibility of 40 million new Christian believers in India, or five percent of the population, if the Christian churches can respond to the barriers they face. "India has the people resources, the education in its leadership, and a great story of contributing to nation development," Houston observes.

China and the Soviet Union

In China, the phenomenal growth of Christianity will continue, but at a slower pace than in past decades. Houston projects 30 million new believers in China, or three percent in 10 years.

In post-Marxist republics of the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, Houston cites 18 trends and characteristics which could lead to as many as 20 million people turning to Christ in the next 10 years.

Islamic Nations

In Southern, Eastern and Central Africa, Houston projects a total of 11 million new believers in non-Islamic parts of Africa. "Churches (in East and Central Africa) have struggled and grown incredibly in spite of, or perhaps because of adverse circumstances," Houston says. "The churches will continue to grow ... because they are the only element of hope in a bad situation."

In describing church growth in Indonesia, Malaysia, Comoros, Brunei and Maldives, Houston believes "achieving a 20 percent of population professing faith in Christ should be possible in 10 years. That would mean about 24 million converts."

Other Islamic sections of the world where response to evangelization is 10 percent of the population are in the African countries of Niger, Guinea, Mali, the Gambia, Senegal, Guinea Bissau, Ghana, Ivory Coast, Nigeria, Togo, Benin, Burkina Faso, Ethiopia and South Sudan. Houston forecasts about 23 million new believers there. If there is a major and unexpected favourable shift in the Islamic political scene in Pakistan and Bangladesh, Houston said there could be as many as 20 million people who might come to faith in Christ in those countries.

Challenges that face the Gospel

Houston says that poverty and literacy are significant factors indicating where the gospel needs to be preached. Low literacy rates call for a strong focus on the spread of literacy and use of non-print media in Christian communication, he observes.

In response to the scenario, Houston says Christians concerned about world evangelization should focus on the great blocks of resistant peoples, the greater openness to the gospel in light of the changing face of Communism, the challenge of secularism, migration, urbanization, poverty, injustice, corruption, and the mobilization of laity.

He also urges Christians to focus on "the concept of all the people of God in one place having a total strategy for evangelizing the place where God has placed them that puts the churches and the parachurch organizations in joint harness as different expressions of the one people of God."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(ab4e2b3fc7e7887b7a72f548aa6f5e60_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(104fbf564e2e5a8fbd84f31656d114c7_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Three Brave Nations: Baltic States

By Michael Bordeaux
10/91

During the past few years, the world has discovered the three small Baltic nations of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania. Once almost irrelevant to the politics of the late 20th century, the Baltic States have in recent years taken their place almost daily in television news.

The Baltics huddle together at the east end of the Baltic Sea, rendered almost invisible and anonymous on the map by the massive dominance of the Soviet Union, into which they were incorporated over 50 years ago. But then in the late 1980s, Glasnost prised out for the Soviet people the historical truth that the Germans and the Soviets abolished the independent existence of the three countries by the "secret protocol" of the Molotov-Ribbentrop Pact of 1939, which carved up eastern and central Europe into two spheres of influence.

On June 14, 1940 the Red Army marched in and there were elections under the threat of the gun, leading to their formal "incorporation" as Soviet Republics. The Nazis invaded a year later and as the Reds drove them out in 1944, the Baltics were led into an even deeper subjugation.

The bravery, nationalism and religious fervor of these oppressed people have now ignited the flames of freedom throughout the Soviet Union and the world. At first, however, the communists dealt with nationalism through deportation. The cream of two generations, politicians, scholars, clergy, leaders of industry, the armed forces and nationalists were removed to the arid desert of Kazakhstan or the mortal cold of Siberia. Approximately ten percent of the entire Baltic population were deported in cattle trucks. Many died under the deplorable conditions.

These tribulations had the effect of more than ever uniting three nations very different from each other in culture, language and religion, but sharing a similar recent history of brief independence between the World Wars and then subjugation. The only gain from the Molotov-Ribbentrop Pact in the whole of the Baltic States was that Lithuania regained its ancient capital of Vilnius from Poland in 1944.

The Baltic States, with their tradition of hard work, their efficiency and "Western" look, were then infiltrated by Russian immigrants who found life there to be attractive and now make up 20 percent of Lithuania's population; 40 percent of Estonia; and almost 50 percent of Latvia.

The Christian Revival

Lithuania

Lithuania is overtly the most "Christian" of the three nations, with nearly 80 percent of the non-immigrant population belonging to the Roman Catholic Church, which nurtured the spirit of the nation during times of great suffering. Where massive prison sentences awaited any suspected of independent political activity, attendance at church became a symbol of unspoken protest.

The KGB harassed, deported and imprisoned many Catholics; clergymen who did not fall into line were often physically beaten. Communist authorities responded by interrupting every local Christian activity outside the Church buildings, maintaining a crude campaign in the press against religion, and summoning priests to the State Offices of the Council for Religious Affairs. However, the communists could not keep the Roman Catholic clergy in line with their "progressive" policies against religious activism.

The Popular Fronts

In an era of unprecedented events in the Soviet bloc, the emergence of the popular fronts in the Baltic States forms one of the most astonishing developments: three tiny nations prepared to take on the might of the Soviet system, with its double threat of military intervention and KGB terrorism.

In Lithuania, the church found a way around the ban on political meetings by inaugurating "masses for the fatherland" and over 600 of these (that is one in almost every church) took place in 1988. With fewer ethnic Russians in Lithuania than the other Baltics, nationalistic religious fervor soon blossomed into Sajudis - which means "movement."

Vytautas Landsbergis, Lithuania's gentle and artistic president, a pianist and musicologist by profession, describes the movement as follows: "Sajudis is not a political party, but a movement. It does not seek to seize power, but rather to exert influence over those in power and thereby have a say in the running of the country's affairs."

Almost all the leaders of Sajudis, including Landsbergis, are Catholic. Within the movement are not only Christians and anyone who seeks to preserve the nation's heritage, but even a number of more progressive Communist party members. Full religious freedom was a fundamental point in its founding document and the Communist Party newspaper published the whole text of this on October 12, 1988.

In July of 1988, Lithuanian TV inaugurated a regular weekly series of religious programming on Sundays. For Lithuanian believers, who had lived through two invasions and fifty years of religious oppression, these events were indeed the dawning of a new age.

Estonia

One of the smallest nations in Europe, with only one and a half million population, Estonia is also one of the most remarkable. A close neighbor of Finland and its language descended from ancient Finnic, Estonia has kept apart from the Slavic culture, although its people feel a great solidarity with the two other Baltic States through common history and suffering. One notable exception is that, like the Scandinavian countries, Estonia is a child of the Protestant Reformation.

At the age of 42, Harri Mötsnik abandoned his work as a lawyer to become a Lutheran pastor, thereby incurring the wrath of Soviet authorities. This only sharpened his determination to preach the Gospel, however, in a form pointedly relevant to the oppressed people he was addressing. In the early 1980s, some of his sermons seemed provocative to the point of foolhardiness. He spoke of freedom and peace in these terms:

"Freedom is not understood or sufficiently valued until it is lost and the realization of its absence becomes a personal experience. Freedom is not an illusion, but an experience of reality ... Peace is very precious, because it is necessary for life. To a Christian peace means a good and secure life, clean air and water, health and long life. This includes a democratic, independent homeland, freedom of conscience and religion."

When the Estonians established their Popular Front in October 1988, the founders proclaimed in the press that the fight with religion was a relic of the past, that the obsolete Stalinist legislation must be changed, that Christians should actively promote holiness, patience, care for the old and the sick and inculcate moral values in the young. At its Constituent Congress, the Estonian Popular Front featured a whole section of debate entitled "Church and Society" which promoted legislative changes and greater equality of believers and atheists.

Later in the year, in mid-August, Estonia played host to the largest Christian youth festival ever to be held in the USSR, organized by the local churches. The opening rally took place in Tallinn's vast Oleviste Church. There were services also in the Lenin sports stadium which seats 6000.

Whatever the difficulties which the Estonian churches have faced, it is clear that they are set to be the focus of lively new ideas and rapid action.

Latvia

In 1988-89 the church in Latvia also experienced unprecedented revival and a determination to use every opportunity which the improved political situation offers. The Latvian Popular Front included significant points to guarantee religious freedom in its manifesto, recognizing the role of the church in the moral regeneration of society and in the affirmation of universal values.

Although less reported than similar demonstrations in East Germany and Poland at the same time, an indication of the ferment was the turn-out of over half a million people on the streets of Riga, almost one-fifth of the total population of the country, to celebrate "Independence Day" on November 19th, 1989.

The "Rebirth and Renewal" movement started with a conflict - just the sort which the atheist authorities always used to win. In 1985 a bright young theological student was in trouble with the authorities for his energetic work and strong stances within the Lutheran church. The local Council for Religious Affairs refused to sanction his ordination. The Latvian bishops bent to the intimidation, but a neighboring Lithuanian bishop granted the ordination.

This touched off a series of events which led to a national revival in the church in Latvia, the reopening of the Riga Cathedral and the deposition of a cowardly archbishop.

The new young pastor, Maris Ludviks, could have been shot under Stalin, imprisoned under Khrushchev or Brezhnev. Instead of caving in to pressure from the communist authorities, the Christian community rallied to Ludviks' aid. The two key players in this drama were: Modris Plate, a young pastor only in his early thirties, and Juris Rubenis, a young seminarian still in his twenties.

When the communist newspaper, Padmju jauntnē, began smear tactics directed against Ludviks, Plate led a group of five clergy in a visit to the editorial offices of the newspaper to protest and demand a retraction. The situation only worsened when the authorities were able to pressure Plate's archbishop to remove his ministry registration papers.

The conflict only snowballed, however, when a group of nineteen clergy signed a petition in Plate's defence. They were able to resist the Council of Religious Affairs. Plate's parishioners supported him and he continued on as their pastor without registration. This occurrence sparked the rapid growth of the "Rebirth and Renewal" movement, the stated purpose of which is to "defend openly the right of Latvians to live a Christian life." Among other things, they were able to print one of the first official Christian youth magazines, Zvaigznīte ("Little Star"), in the Soviet Union.

Now enter the second player, Juris Rubenis, who stepped to the center stage by being one of the original signers of the petition in support of Modris Plate. Rubenis was able to orchestrate the first service in the great Lutheran Cathedral of Riga in over thirty years. He relates:

"I was sitting at my desk one day when the idea came to me that we should ask permission to hold a service there. We could scarcely hope for success, because its conversion in 1959 into a concert hall stood as a symbol of the triumph of communism over religion. However, the Popular Front took up my proposal and, miraculously, we held a service at which Modris Plate and I officiated, but we were told it was just a one-off event.

"People packed out the church and spilled out across the square outside, but there were loudspeakers and those who did not come were able to watch on TV or listen in on radio, the first such transmission since the war. Of course our people now demanded regular services; after protracted arguments the authorities agreed."

Later Pastor Rubenis said that the TV transmission "led to a kind of seismic disturbance in people ... On that day a great many people reconsidered all that they had built up against faith in God."

Then in April of 1989, the Archbishop was voted out of the Lutheran Consistory of Latvia. New elections were held and into the Consistory came the key figures of Rubenis and Plate, together with six others who had been active in the "Rebirth and Renewal" movement. At its first meeting after their election, the Consistory made a statement which, remarkably, an official secular newspaper published:

"We denounce the arrogant and heartless policies on the ecological, economic and spiritual state of Latvia ... Only in an independent Latvian state, free from the dictates of any imperial center, will our people be able to realize fully either its national values or the universal values given to us by the Christian faith."

Karlis Gailitis, a nationalist Archbishop, age 53, was also consecrated after the elections. Archbishop Gailitis is far different from the previous leader from the Soviet Union who followed the conventional Communist Party line. Gailitis seems destined to play an international role among world Protestant leaders.

The Future of the Baltic States

In each Baltic State, in a very different way, the church is now playing a vital role. As these countries seek to implement their newfound independence, the church will be called upon to mediate rather than to incite, but it will never again play the subservient role it did under communism.

January 1991 saw the crack Soviet "Black Beret" troops gun down defenceless people on the streets of Vilnius and Riga. Then last summer, Russian tanks rumbled through the Baltic streets again during Genadi Yenayev's failed coup attempt in Moscow. Through all the turmoil, it is clear that it was the church that has increased the determination of the majority to break free from Soviet domination - once and for all.

Compiled from The Gospel's Triumph Over Communism, Bethany House Publishers, Minneapolis, MN.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

Original file name: Three Brave Nations- Baltics

This file was converted with TextToHTML - (c) 1995 Kris Coppieters

The Triumph of Faith and Freedom Over Communism

By K.E. Grubbs, Jr.

4/91

The New York Times Magazine recently alerted us to a "return to religion" among intellectuals. It struck me as odd that this august publication has finally gotten around to noticing this trend. This trend, however, could be reassuring because, if the intellectuals have hopped onto a bandwagon, then a strong chance exists that all the toots and whistles on that particular bandwagon will have been refashioned so that the toots whistle and the whistles toot.

Look at the recent intellectual fashions: it is not two years since serious analysts regarded Central and Eastern Europe as places where the communist system reflected the organic will of the people. About that time it was also fashionable to regard Nicaragua as a font of profound spiritual change; after all, the Sandinistas numbered among their comandantes a couple of priests.

This was also the time when Ronald Reagan was denounced by intellectuals for his alleged clumsiness and bellicosity when he made a moving speech in Berlin urging Mikhail Gorbachev to tear down the Wall.

But in 1989, when those self-same intellectuals least experienced it, the Berlin Wall came tumbling down, and with it began the collapse of the worst tyranny that has ever plagued humanity and all of humanity's enterprises - a tyranny that, not coincidentally, tried to kill off every vestige of religion and spirituality that it could not twist to its own ends.

As we know now, communism could not kill off either. Every faith communism has attacked has prevailed. Surely God Almighty works in history no matter what the intellectuals say.

A Different "Manifesto" Triumphs in Eastern Europe

What a joy it was for me when, last June, clacking along in an old socialist rail car from Prague to Budapest with a group of American journalists, we came to the environs of the Hungarian capital, the scene of so much bravery in the face of repression for this past half-century. There, silhouetted in the distance like a mighty fortress, was a great cathedral - Cardinal Mindszentsy's cathedral - outliving the great Christian leader's tormentors, an eternal reproach to the hubris that produced them.

The next day, I sat with Hungary's new president, Arpad Goncz, once imprisoned for his dissident activity, now a living testament to the biblical assurance that the last will be first, that the enslaved will be free. We did not really talk, the two of us, about the temporal versus the spiritual - the latter was so overwhelmingly evident that we felt no need to remark upon it. We talked instead about Soviet and American foreign policy.

Make no mistake, President Goncz told me, Hungarians are the beneficiaries of the Gorbachev era. But, like a great sailor, a great "harnesser of the wind," Gorbachev is reacting to history, not directing it. Much more than that, President Goncz added, his countrymen were beneficiaries of the Reagan era. They, along with other "middle Europeans," as he refers to them, were liberated by two Reagan salients in the 1980s.

First, Ronald Reagan made it possible for the West to win in the marketplace; though only minimal, deregulation and tax-cutting gave such a boost to the American economy that communist nations couldn't hope to compete. Second, Reagan made it impossible for the Soviets to keep up militarily by placing Pershing II missiles in West Germany and by his singular persistence in promoting the Strategic Defense initiative.

What? Central and Eastern Europe liberated by a combination of crass capitalism and macho militarism? When I reported back to my American companions what the Hungarian president said, they reacted in disbelief, as if I had teased or even coerced this sort of repugnant Reaganism out of one of Hungary's national heroes. How unlike anything these journalists - themselves candidates for a New York Times Magazine profile - had ever advocated at home.

No Union Between Christianity and Marxism

Indeed, I reflected afterwards, How unlike anything I had heard championed by American church leaders, many of whom for years have toiled, like alchemists of old, trying to meld Christianity with Marxism.

These American churchmen - so pathetically eager to deconstruct their own heritage that now even Christopher Columbus is regarded as an imperialist serpent in a native American Paradise - little resemble the Protestant clergy I had encountered several days before in Berlin, men who now filled the cabinet of the interim East German government.

Some of these officials, whose churches only months before were used as channels of anti-communist revolution, may have participated in the anti-Pershing peace movement of the 1980s, which was partially orchestrated by the Kremlin and the Hoenecker regime, but this merely demonstrates how the anti-authoritarianism of that movement backfired on the communists.

In truth, most of the real anti-war activists in the Soviet bloc were just as opposed to Russian warheads, and, significantly, they were more determined to exorcise Karl Marx than to embrace him.

Anti-Marxism is even more pronounced in the Polish Church. I once spent the day in the village of Lowice, where the anti-communist graffiti - Red Army, go home! - was surpassed only by traditional religious trappings. In such a climate communism could not hope to endure.

Now, if you're one of those who still imagine that Christianity and Marxism might be united, you could contend that the Red Army by no means represents Marxist philosophy at its purest. If you wish to belabor that point, I urge you to do it with a Polish priest, a Polish villager, a Polish intellectual. Indeed, go to the town square of Lowice blindfolded, spin around, and buttonhole the first Pole you meet. Tell him that Marx was just updating the Gospels; I dare you.

The Solidarity government, largely made up of Catholic intellectuals, has dedicated itself to applying the free market economics of Ludwig von Mises, Friedrich von Hayek, Milton Friedman and Michael Novak with an enthusiasm I also witnessed in Czechoslovakia and Hungary. Nowhere, to the apparent dismay of some of my American companions, was anyone interested in a union between Christianity and Marxism or in some sort of "Third Way," or halfway house between Marxism and capitalism constructed in equal parts by Karl Marx and Adam Smith.

Liberation Theology: The Old vs. the New

So here is a theology that has liberated millions, a perfectly traditional theology that recognizes God, not the state, as the prepolitical source of rights and freedoms. It is, in effect, a new kind of "liberation theology" for the world, based on faith and the free market.

But in pre-1989 Central and Eastern Europe, the regimes of Earl Hoeneker, Janos Kadar and Gustav Husak were actually funding and supplying weapons to Central American guerillas whose dictatorial aims were furthered by believers in the old socialist "liberation theology."

This brand of theology was very much the intellectual fashion in North as well as Latin America in the 1970s and 1980s. In Nicaragua, the communist regime even tried to appropriate Christian symbols, like the crucifix, which in its "new" form became a Sandinista soldier with a gun. It also organized a flimsy movement called "Inglesia Popular," a liberationist clique that fortunately never proved as popular as the traditional church.

Sandinista Interior Minister Tomas Borge, surely one of the most diabolical thugs in this hemisphere, even tried to link Jesus of Nazareth with his guerilla politics in a book of tortured meditations that admirers in upstate New York rushed into print. The Barabas temptation, 20th century style!

When in last year's elections the Sandinistas proved themselves as popular as their rump church, their norteamericano allies flew into paroxysms of hysteria. Yet the humiliated and defeated and defeated Marxist president of Nicaragua, Daniel Ortega, is still welcomed to New York's Riverside Church as a venerated speaker. Does anyone ask him about the mass graves of Sandinista opponents now reportedly being unearthed in his hapless country? No, these leftover "liberationists" flock to touch the hem of his bloody garment.

Am I too hard on the old liberationists? Of course, there are those attracted to the movement who eschew violence and truly minister to the poor and oppressed in Latin America. But it is difficult to imagine a more perfect test case for the old liberation theology than Nicaragua, where the regime imposed what was hailed as a purer form of socialism than had been tried in the Soviet bloc. This was to be the "grand experiment."

Even before it became evident that the experiment had failed miserably, the liberationists found ways to evade the truth. They did so primarily by buying into the socialist critique that holds the developed world, particularly the United States, accountable for the misery of the underdeveloped world.

They also glided over the vast empirical evidence that socialism invariably requires coercion in order to achieve its redistributionist objectives. The history of socialism has amply demonstrated that, when milder forms of coercion fail, then more violent forms follow.

Some of the better liberationists turned their gaze from Sandinista violence and marched off to Central America to set up their "base camps" where they fed and doctored the poor, but they still flagellated themselves for being North Americans and preached a communalism that didn't work in Jamestown or Plymouth Colony.

Faith and Politics

Not long ago, I worked in Washington D.C., where every aspect of one's daily life is shot through with politics. One Sunday, I sought refuge in nearby Alexandria's Christ Church, where you can still see the pews of Robert E Lee and George Washington. It was a special day for this historic church; Virginia's suffragan bishop was visiting.

Can you imagine the desolation I felt when he launched into a sermon on why we need gun control laws? As a journalist, I am tempted to throw up my hands sometimes! But I have been to Central and Eastern Europe, to Russia and to the Baltic States - I have seen a faith that liberates as opposed to a bogus one that enslaves.

One Sunday I found myself in a dingy Warsaw hotel room, trying to make sense of the keys on an old Polish typewriter, and attempting to write about the deep apprehension so many Poles, habituated to the incentiveless society, feel as they step determinedly into the "cold bath" of a free market economy. I switched on the television, and there to my surprise, was Robert Schuller preaching. Just the prescription for poor Poland!

As I remember, he was quoting John Wesley: "Make as much money as you can. Save as much money as you can. Give a way as much money as you can." How foreign these words sound to us in our contemporary culture. All the pundits tell us that we have been living through an era of arrant greed, never mind that in the past few years we were allowed only a marginal drop in our tax rates. But because of the very hegemony of those pundits, ridiculously well paid pundits at that, Schuller's message Wesleyan message continues to sound foreign.

The Last Refuge of the "Coercive Utopians"

Somewhere along the line, corresponding to the rise of secular faith in the almighty state, politicized churchmen latched onto the notion that people cannot discover for themselves unless coerced by the state. As a result, we have a school system that graduates people who do not know the half century in which the Civil War was fought, or where Mexico is; a school system that is so inadequate that former Education Secretary William Bennet suggested that parents should get their money back; a school system that, according to National Endowment for the Humanities chair Lynne Cheney, may be described as a "tyrannical machine."

As a result, we have also seen a War on Poverty, fought unsuccessfully along socialist lines, which has produced a permanent underclass and done incalculable damage to the black family. We have mobilized for a War on Drugs, already showing more perverse results on our inner city streets ... We have so deputed government at all levels that we have forgotten how to do it ourselves, and we react with astonishment when the legislative and judicial branches fail to show the omniscience and omnipotence we expected.

Globally, what we are seeing is the collapse of the "coercive utopians," much more dramatically, of course, where socialism has been tried. They seemed to be getting this heresy, and it is a heresy, out of their system in Central and Eastern Europe, in Nicaragua and elsewhere. Yet oddly enough, we seem even more keenly interested in it here, where Washington D.C., undeterred by the current Republican administration, has rediscovered the joy of regulating. This is a Washington, mind you, that cannot balance a budget, but wants desperately to regulate the institutions in which you have your checking and savings accounts.

Not long ago, two California professors, one a political scientist and one a "social ecologists," submitted an article to the Orange County Register that actually argued that planet earth could no longer afford to allow development in the poorest regions. What with the hole in the ozone and all that, claimed these professors, we simply cannot allow people facing imminent starvation to benefit from refrigeration.

As editorial and commentary director of the Register, I could not in good conscience accept such an article, but I was tempted to do so in order to publicize a stark confession of an attitude that has been commonly concealed by anti-development intellectuals. Again: it is the attitude that the least among us, the marginalized, the poor, should remain in their desperate condition so that they might be denied any entrepreneurial hopes, because if they succeed they will be too much like us.

It ought to be pointed out that these intellectuals might have a point if their apocalyptic scenarios were realistic. But, although my fellow journalists are eager to assure us that "no respectable scientist" disagrees that the sky is falling, or that the earth is warming, or that the ozone is depleting, it just isn't true. Many respectable scientists do disagree and are eager to debunk such theories.

But more and more Christians, Jews and other religious believers are jumping uncritically on the environmentalist bandwagon. One individual, a professed Christian, recently wrote me with the admonition that neither Godless environmentalism nor Godless economics could save our world. It happens that I agree with that formulation. But my admonisher betrayed a willingness to suspend the natural, God-created laws of economics in order to save creation.

So much for Christian humility, which is reflected by the millions of volitional decisions and voluntary transactions that ordinary, talented people engage in every day in hopes of improving their own and their families' lives.

A Free Market Revolution

Just before the collapse of socialism in the Soviet bloc, Lutheran sociologist Peter Berger wrote a marvelous book about the newly industrializing countries of East Asia. These "little tigers," or "little dragons" as they are sometimes called, are a part of a free market revolution and, as Berger documents, they are defeating poverty at an amazing rate.

Compare them to the Third World nations that have tried socialism for the last three decades and you will find that none of the latter have grown, and indeed, that most of them have moved backward. In Central and Eastern Europe last spring, I heard East Asia described everywhere as a model for post-communist aspirations.

Similarly, in Latin America, Hernando de Soto now an adviser to Peru's President Alberto Fujimori, has discovered the Promethean energy of a vast "informal sector," a kind of underground economy. Who comprises this informal sector? Why, all the poor Indians, handymen, street vendors, campesinos, who have long suffered under the mercantilist system of political permits, red tape and economic regulations. They simply started ignoring the law and doing business with one another. One might say they had no choice but to develop a market based on free choices.

Throughout the southern hemisphere political leaders are finally acknowledging the truth of de Soto's studies and are working to unleash the tremendous energy of the informal sector. Already the Berger/de Soto view of this newly enterprising world bids to change world history more than Marx ever did. And what is the animating spirit behind this development? Doubtless, it is at least an inchoate understanding of a few fundamentals central to our religious traditions.

These newly enterprising people, from Bangkok to Bogota, take the commandment to mean more than merely to procreate, but to engage in profitable business. They take the lovely metaphorical language of "throwing bread upon the water" to mean they should become entrepreneurs, by testing new products and services in their approximate marketplaces.

They understand the reference to the "lilies of the field" to embolden them to take risks, never trading freedom for security. They comprehend that if they are truly "created in the image of God," then they are to create, not redistribute.

This free market revolution, now rapidly causing borders to vanish around the world, can be nothing less than Providential. Let us hope that we will have enough wisdom not to replace the Almighty God with economic theory, nor faith with ideology, and that the New York Times Magazine will have the grace to notice.

Reprinted by permission from IMPRIMIS, the monthly journal of Hillsdale College. Subscriptions are free upon request. Write: IMPRIMIS, Hillsdale College, Hillsdale, MI 49242.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Twilight of Scandinavian Socialism

3/89

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (FR) - For years the nations of Scandinavia have been considered the most socialist of all Western democracies. They have the highest levels of taxation in the world - Denmark's highest marginal income tax rate is 68 percent. But the failure of socialist ideas, along with a growing Christian revival, is causing Scandinavian leaders to reconsider their economic philosophy.

The ruling Social Democratic parties of Sweden, Norway, and Denmark recently recommended the adoption of new ideas on the role of the state in the lives of its citizens. As the movement toward privatization of services and publicly owned industries is becoming popular in Margaret Thatcher's Britain, the Social Democrats are suggesting that Scandinavian countries follow suit by lowering taxes, decentralizing government-controlled business and industry, and privatizing state-controlled services.

"The greatest misconception," one Social Democrat told Insight magazine, "is that if only the rich are taxed more heavily, that would solve all problems. That is simply not true." Bringing about such major reforms in these nations will certainly not come without controversy. Opposition to the suggestions of party officials has already been sounded by the powerful Swedish Trade Union Confederation.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Testimony from Uganda

GAINESVILLE, FL (FR) - "You're just a schoolboy," the army officer told 17-year-old Paul Sandy. "Why are you telling people about things that are too complicated for you?" Uganda was under an iron-fisted military regime at the time, and Sandy and his friend, a pastor, had been arrested for preaching the gospel at an open air meeting. They narrowly escaped execution.

Sandy was the interpreter for the English preacher. During the message, Sandy said soldiers arrived and disrupted the meeting. "They told us to sit on the pavement, and then they cocked their guns to execute us ... but then a jeep with soldiers pulled up. They beat us up with the ends of their guns and then took us to the Malili army barracks for interrogation."

Sandy and his companion were brought into a small room and accused of instigating unrest and bringing confusion to the people. "We continued answering their questions and preaching to the officers. Scriptures flowed from our mouths. Jesus once said that we shouldn't worry about what we were to say when we were delivered up to the authorities - and that scripture was made real to me during that experience."

When asked by the military officers why they were preaching, the brave teenager answered: "We have a commission from our Lord Jesus Christ to preach the Gospel. We can't help but carry out our commission." Eventually they were released, but Sandy was sternly told to not preach the gospel again. "I was ready to die, if that was the time. Imprisonment for Christianity was common in my country," he added. Sandy has a noticeable scar on his right hand from the beatings he endured that day.

Today, 24-year-old Sandy is a student at the University of Florida who is aspiring to be an agriculturist. He became a Christian during the reign of Uganda's fiercest dictator Idi Amin. Uganda has had seven different presidents in power since it was thrown into a state of war 25 years ago. Says Sandy: "I've had to study through political instability; many times it got so bad that they closed the school and people left work."

In 1979, war started while he was in secondary school. "I was very far from God, and my mother was not a Christian. My father died when I was one." Falling shells and soldiers in his hometown, Kampala, the capitol city of Uganda, were a common sight.

"We narrowly survived by God's grace," he said. While sleeping at home one night, Sandy awoke to hear heavy footsteps advancing towards his bedroom. "The person turned the door handle and then came to my room. The glass in my window was broken, and I saw him point his machine gun inside and then there was a heavy blast of fire.

"He fired into my room and most of the shots went a few inches above my brother's bed. If he would have raised his head, he would have died," he said. "I never got to know the person's intentions, but I survived."

Another incident took place which caused Sandy to think seriously about where his life was going. Around 7 p.m. one evening, one of his brothers and some friends were talking in their home when his oldest brother - a doctor - arrived unexpectedly. Suddenly, they were ambushed by soldiers. "They shot everywhere, and my two sisters were afraid that they were going to be raped ... so they escaped and hid outside the house.

"The soldiers grabbed my mother, held her at gunpoint, and threatened to kill her if she didn't tell them where the two girls were hiding. Then, they turned around and opened fire on all of us. We all went down. When we got back up, none of us were wounded. We all survived. I can't tell you how we survived, only God knows. It shook up my life."

Sandy's two brothers were Christians at that time. His oldest brother gave his heart to Jesus after being healed through prayer while a medical student. "The rest of us thought Christianity was weird," said Sandy. "We teased our brothers, and it was very difficult for them to witness to us."

Sandy remembers the exact date that he became a Christian. It did not happen after hearing an evangelist on one of the many television or radio programs available to American Christians. On the evening of July 29, Sandy said "I found that God was speaking to me. His voice was very real.

"I couldn't push it away or put it aside. The voice asked, 'Who has your life?' and it was like a sword through my heart. I knew my life wasn't in my hands and couldn't give an appropriate answer. If I died at that point, I knew I would go straight to hell because I wasn't forgiven of sin, and hadn't received Jesus into my life. Everything became clear, it was suddenly as if my eyes were opened.

"I realized I was far from God, and needed His forgiveness. When my brother woke up, I told him that I had become a Christian. He thought I was teasing him." His brother was convinced, however, when Sandy asked to go to an evangelistic crusade with him.

Because he had been a troublemaker in school, Sandy's friends gave him two weeks to see if his conversion was genuine. "They couldn't believe me," Sandy related. "I passed out tracts and was nicknamed 'Young Jesus.'" A friend slapped him on the cheek and expected a violent reaction. "In my heart I heard a voice saying, 'He's trying you.' I walked away laughing."

Since then, Paul Sandy has led several youth groups in his church in Uganda, and has traveled through the U.S. with the African Children's Choir as a chaperone. "I feel that God has called me to be His witness and I have a burden to take the gospel to Uganda. I feel indebted to my country, especially to the orphans. I would like to see Uganda become economically self-sufficient."

- by Leilani Corpus

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Uganda's First Lady: AIDS a Moral Problem

2/92

Uganda, one of the nations hardest hit by AIDS, is advocating abstinence above any other prevention measure. The epidemic in Uganda now affects 30 percent of the country's child bearing population. The nation's First Lady, Janet Museveni, recently talked about the AIDS epidemic to reporters in Washington:

"AIDS is a loud and urgent symptom of a malady which has pervaded the whole human condition It is a physical manifestation - like environmental degradation, violence, and corruption in high office - of a deep-seated disorder in the spirit of man ... People have used sex in all sorts of ways that it was not meant for. It has taken AIDS for us to know what we've been doing with our bodies and to learn that we're really responsible for our lives."

"Teaching people to use condoms is, at best, only a short-term solution. What works is a change of behavior. Marriage is being used in all sorts of incorrect ways, and our children are watching us. We have to set an example for the young by instilling the virtues of self-control, faithfulness and honesty in relationships. The young represent our chance to survive. We must not fail them."

"We never really talk about our ethics, our morals, but I feel very strongly that this is the only answer. Ours is a spiritually illiterate generation. The Whole problem is tied in with the breakdown of morals in the world. AIDS is not the problem of Africa alone. It's a human problem, and we have to treat it as such."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Vineyard Conference in England

By Jay Rogers
12/90

GAINESVILLE, Florida (FR) - A ministry team from Gainesville, Florida recently returned from a short trip to London, England in October, where they took part in Vineyard Ministries' "Holiness unto the Lord" conference.

The ministry team, which was comprised of husband and wife, Mike and Theresa Williams, and Arty Hart, pastor of the Vineyard Christian Fellowship in Gainesville, were sent with the purpose of ministering to the Church in England and preparing the hearts of the church leaders for revival.

"We didn't really see what you would call a true revival," related Mike Williams, "but more of a preparation with the seeds of an awakening being planted. We saw 8000 people attend the conference. The large majority were church leaders, pastors and elders."

Mike Bickle of Kansas City Fellowship delivered a prophetic message which "broke the ice" during one of the first sessions of the conference. "God wants His Church back," explained Bickle. Some English pastors and leaders had been holding their people from God, Bickle said with powerful conviction.

In response to this message, English church leaders gave a general call for repentance. Over 5000 leaders responded to this call and came forward to the platform to repent.

"There was a tremendous desire on the part of the people to return to God," explained Mike Williams. "This spirit characterized the whole conference. People came together in unity from all kinds of denominations and different church backgrounds."

The conference was followed by a number of "satellite conferences" held in other parts of England. In a country where the people have a reputation for being reserved, especially in the staid, conservative Anglican churches, there has been a growing movement toward renewal for the past several years. The renewal movement seemed to be culminating at the time of the conference.

Supernatural manifestations were one of the characteristics of this renewal. Vineyard leader, John Wimber, called for church leaders who wanted to be filled with the Holy Spirit. Once again, the altars were jam-packed. Physical healings, including people with diabetes and heart problems were reported during the meetings. Vineyard pastor, Arty Hart, described the manifest presence of God as being "awesome."

"Throughout the entire conference, we constantly heard people being delivered from unclean spirits," said Hart. "Demons were screaming out because of the powerful presence of God."

"Even when John Wimber was just delivering a sermon, we had that happen several times," said Mike Williams concerning the demonic manifestations.

Historically speaking, such occurrences are not uncommon. Rather, they are characteristic of a powerful move of God in a geographical area called a visitation or an awakening.

During the time when Jesus Christ walked the earth, demonic manifestations were common even among religious people. (See Matt. 8:28-33; Mark 1:23-26; Luke 8:2.)

At the beginning of the ministries of George Whitefield and John Wesley, accounts of supernatural manifestations were also reported. This marked the beginning of a vast move of the Holy Spirit which has become known as "The First Great Awakening." This visitation ultimately transformed the spiritual life and social structures of England and America in the early 1700s.

In the early 1800s, more outbursts of the Holy Spirit's activity were common on America's sparsely populated frontier. Accounts given by ministers, such as Methodist circuit rider, Peter Cartwright, as well as the unbiased accounts of several unconverted witnesses, corroborate with the pattern of spiritual awakenings being accompanied by divine signs and wonders.

Evan Roberts, the great Welsh revivalist, has given us further accounts of the manifest power of God which occurred at the turn of the 20th century in parts of England and much of Wales.

Now in the early 1990s, these signs and wonders are making a comeback among English believers. Remarkably, much of the supernatural activity at the "Holiness unto the Lord" conference occurred among conservative Anglican Christians, who were yet unfamiliar with the practices of the charismatic movement.

This evidence confirms the predictions of many of the ministers who have worked to promote revival among English believers. England is destined to be a focal point of a great revival that will predominate church life in England for the much of the 1990s.

This revival will ultimately result in an awakening that will transform English social life. The economic recovery of England will be heralded as a "miracle" which will become the model for the rest of Europe. England's role as a spiritual leader for the world will be exalted and again, it will be rightfully said: "The sun never sets on the British empire."

And once again, England will send missionaries to the ends of the earth, to preach the Gospel until the whole world is filled with the knowledge of the glory of God.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

 Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Tenth Anniversary!

YWAM Leader Warns of AIDS Threat to Teens

Generation X: What Makes This Generation Different?

Invading America's High Schools with the Gospel

Jesus Movement - 20 years later

The 1990s: Decade of a New Generation

The Prophetic Generation

The Return of the 1960s Revolution

Risk Free From AIDS?

The Animal

Torch for Gospel

Virginity in Vogue

YOUTH OF DESTINY

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Back to The Forerunner!

YWAM Leader Warns of AIDS Threat to Teens

By Brenda A. Poklacki

9/90

"The AIDS epidemic of the 1990s, if no vaccine is found, will strike hardest among teenagers," says Floyd McClung, Jr., Youth With A Mission's (YWAM) Executive Director of International Operations.

"There is no such thing as safe sex apart from sexual abstinence." Experts predict half-a-million active cases of AIDS in the U.S. by 1994.

"Sexual abstinence, as a means of AIDS prevention, has not yet been discussed seriously in this nation - a nation that was built upon Christian values," McClung said.

Despite exhortations to "just say no," the average American teenager loses virginity at age 16. In vain, new approaches to AIDS education are being tried against a backdrop of evidence that sexually active teens still use condoms only sporadically.

A recent analysis of blood samples collected from 40 urban hospitals by the U.S. Center for Disease Control reveals 1 percent of 15 and 16-year-olds are infected with the AIDS virus, and among 21-year-olds the infection rate approaches 3 percent.

Even in cities that researchers defined as medium risk, such as Atlanta, Chicago and Dallas, about 1 percent of the 21-year-olds are infected. At college level, 1 in 500 students, a total of 25,000, may carry the virus, according to a blood-sample survey conducted at 19 campuses in 1988 by the American College Health Association.

Church going youth are very much involved in illicit sex, according to a survey conducted by the Josh McDowell Ministry. Of the 1,400 churchgoing young people queried, 43 percent said they had engaged in sexual intercourse by age 18. "Part of the reason is the Christian community has been reluctant to deal with the issue regardless of the evidence," said McClung.

"In the 'Red Light' district evil is blatant. In contrast, evil in suburbia has another form. I call it 'creeping compromise.' There, comfort dulls the spirit and complacency becomes acceptable."

McClung added, "I see a lot of spiritual blindness today. People have been conned by the enemy and duped by their culture and compromised without knowing it. They have bought into a value system that is not biblical. It's time to get back to a biblical standard of moral purity."

In Amsterdam and other urban centers of the world, YWAM has established ministry teams to reach out to youth in need, particularly those infected by the AIDS virus.

Special teams have also been trained to minister to the spiritual and practical needs of AIDS victims. These team members provide domestic and emotional support to people who are too ill to shop, cook, manage their home, etc.

"We minister to people before the AIDS test, right to death itself," said McClung. "We are basically doing what we have always done, reaching out in friendship to hurting people."

Floyd McClung, a native of Long Beach, California, moved to Amsterdam, Holland, in 1973. McClung founded YWAM-Amsterdam in 1973 and established a missionary training center in the infamous "Red Light" district of Amsterdam, Holland, in 1985. "De Poort" (The Gate), as the center is called, provides training to equip urban missionaries to drug addicts, pimps, prostitutes, and the disenfranchised. One person in three coming to the ministry for help has the AIDS virus.

From Amsterdam, Floyd and his wife, Sally, train urban ministry teams which are then sent to other cities all over the world. Floyd's most recent book, Living on the Devil's Doorstep, tells of his family's life in the Red Light District. The McClungs and their two children, Misha and Matthew, now live in the heart of Amsterdam.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Generation X: What Makes This Generation Different?

By Jay Rogers
11/93

The LORD says to my Lord:
"Sit at my right hand,
Until I make Thine enemies a footstool for Thy feet."
The LORD will stretch forth Thy strong scepter from Zion, saying,
"Rule in the midst of Thine enemies."
Thy people will volunteer freely in the day of Thy power;
In holy array, from the womb of the dawn,
Thy youth are to Thee as the dew.

- Psalms 110:1-3 -

All over the world, young people are coming to know the Lord Jesus Christ in unprecedented numbers. In nations where there is exponential church growth, such as mainland China and the former Soviet Union, the vast majority of the converts to Christ are children, teenagers and young adults.

Throughout the centuries, reformers and revivalists have interpreted Psalm 110 as a prophecy referring to a great end time harvest among the youth of the whole world. Look out to the horizon in the morning as far as you can see - and there will be the dew blanketing the earth. That is how it will be with this generation. Everywhere you look you will see the youth volunteering freely to serve God as part of an end time army of prophets.

Other scriptures confirm God's promise to bring revival among the youth: "And it shall come to pass in the last days, says God, I will pour out My Spirit on all flesh, your sons and daughters shall prophesy ... your young men shall see visions" (Joel 2:28). Moves of the Holy Spirit which characterize revival and spiritual awakening are always most evident among young people. Modern day surveys indicate that up to 85 percent who get saved are converted before age 30, and most people before age 25. Young people are the kindling which helps to set the fires of revival. In every generation, God has been faithful to bring a revival somewhere in the world among young people.

The 'Boomers and the 'Busters

The younger generation of Americans, those under age 30, are different from the generation that preceded them. The popular media have termed these two generations: the Baby-boomers and the Baby-busters. The Baby-boomer generation are the sons and daughters of World War Two veterans born from 1946 to 1962. The Baby-busters are the children of the Baby-boomer generation. Even the secular media have noticed that there is something unique about this generation. They have also been termed "Twenty-somethings" and "Generation X" in popular magazines.

It is no coincidence that this generation has come on the scene at the present time. The whole world is in a state of transition. As we close out the millennium, entire nations are in a state of upheaval. The social, economic and political landscape of the world is fast changing. It is a generation that has come of age "for such a time as this."

Generation X

This new generation is comprised of individuals with different ideas, who are as equally buoyed by promising opportunities as they are weighted down with problems. It is this generation, according to many youth experts, who have the greatest potential to attain greatness.

Studies have shown that there has been an explosion of entrepreneurialism by those 30 and younger. They are taking the entrepreneurial route first rather than going to corporate America. Economic adversity defines this group more than any other factor. Campus hiring is down as well as the median earnings for this age group. Necessity is the main reason why they are striking out on their own.

The computer revolution is the prime factor that makes this possible. While the older generation were the first to be brought up around television, Generation X were the first to be brought up with computers. Computers have so changed our culture, how we obtain information, how we do everything we do, that computer illiteracy in our age is akin to print illiteracy of past generations.

Twenty-somethings tend to be more confident in their abilities to work with and develop new technologies. Baby-busters often act like they know more about everything than the Baby-boomers. This aggravates the older generation to no end, because in many respects it is true. Thus they are often perceived to be arrogant by people just a few years older. This perceived arrogance is an unredeemed gifting that will be transformed by God into a boldness to do great exploits. This is a generation set apart by God to take the gospel to the ends of the earth.

A World-Wide Phenomenon

The emergence of Generation X is not something confined to American culture, but is occurring worldwide. There is a global network of young people who have been around computers their entire lives. They are able to begin businesses faster and run them cheaper. An above average 20-year-old, who is literate with video, audio and the written word has more potential to change the world than many corporations.

Coupled with the worldwide revival that God has predestined for this generation, their potential to change the world will explode into reality. The people who are chosen for this time will be revolutionaries. Those who are destined by God to be a part of this movement will be on the vanguard of a new era of renaissance and reformation.

Among our generation are some of these rare individuals who have a revolutionary message who can solve many of the world's problems and who can also relate to their generation in a relevant way. This new breed of Christians will be pioneers of new media technologies. They will utilize every new medium available to bring their prophetic message to the entire world.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(c444627dab9fee9a1550c053ffaaaae2_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(0d7ca0919e6c47bbd874bfa0189fe22e_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Invading America's High Schools with the Gospel

5/88

MINNEAPOLIS MN. (EP) - Youth Invasion Ministries has a plan. The organization, which sponsors a "Strategy" youthworker conference each year, presented its "master plan for invading America's 44,000 public schools: most recently at Strategy '88, and at the April 7-9 seminar held in Minneapolis.

That kind of successful invasion sounds like an impossible dream to many who are discouraged by court decisions that limit religious activities in public schools. But Rick Olson, co-director of Youth Invasion Ministries, says the idea that schools are closed to the gospel is a myth. "We are allowed in," he insists. "I work with youth pastors all over the country that are on campus every week, some of them every day of the week. I know of over 50 ways for a youth pastor or other adult to be allowed in a school."

Olson, who also works as a youth specialist for North Central Bible College (an Assemblies of God school in Minneapolis), acknowledges that there are some restrictions. "You can't just come in and set up shop for God," he says. "But you can come in to support the school's programs and in that way greatly influence students."

Olson, who presents the "Strategy" conferences with the help of fellow-worker Wendell Smith, says he works to teach youth workers to be wise as serpents and harmless as doves. "We talk about classroom speaking - how a youth pastor can be invited to speak on whatever topic is being talked about by a class and tie in a Christian perspective. We also see how an adult can teach the Bible as literature, act as chaperone for a high school class activity, or serve as a referee."

But getting adults on campus isn't the whole answer, says Olson. "As we raise up effective adult leaders, much of their ministry for invading the public schools will be behind the scenes training Christian students. They'll be equipping 'Holy Ghost SWAT Teams' for the campus. If we talk to kids about how to reach their campus, those kids can make a huge difference when they go to school."

Olson says his emphasis is on raising up volunteer workers and lay youth workers, rather than on equipping professional youth workers. "If we're going to affect whole high schools and towns it will take a great team effort, with qualified adults who know how to reach kids," he says. "Our goal is not on showing people how to put on big events in youth ministry, but to raise up big people for youth ministry who will pour their lives into kids so they become big kids for God."

The 1988 conference is the third "Strategy" meeting by Youth Invasion Ministries. What has happened as a result of the first two meetings? "We have a number of ministries that have been birthed, and others that have been charged with life because of the first two," says Olson. "I would say that the name of our conference really denotes what has happened in many ministries. People who have a burden and passion for kids suddenly have a strategy for their ministry. It's not a philosophy, but a hands-on approach to ministry."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Jesus Movement - 20 years later

9/90

COSTA MESA, California (FR) - "The Jesus Movement" - the very name conjures up images of the late sixties and early seventies, when long-haired Californian youth were being baptized en masse in the swirling waters of the Pacific beaches.

It has been over 20 years since the phenomenon known as the Jesus movement began - a short lived spiritual awakening which was the spark that lit the fire of many Christian youth movements - and the time when many of the Christian leaders of today got their start.

Yet Chuck Smith, founder of Calvary Chapel, the focal point of the Jesus movement, claims that it is not over yet - or perhaps, a new movement is just beginning. An evangelistic rally, held recently at the Pacific Ampitheater in Costa Mesa, California, drew 90,000 people over a five day period. A record 25,000 showed up on the last night.

At the close of each meeting, hundreds of people streamed forward to make public dedications to Christ. Altogether, more than 5000 people - mostly teenagers and young adults - gave their lives to Jesus Christ.

On Friday evening, a public baptism was held at Corona del Mar beach. Chuck Smith baptized over 100 new converts himself, standing in the surf for over three hours. Somewhere in between 500 and 1000 were baptized. Smith claims this exceeds the largest number he and his church have ever baptized at Corona del Mar at any time, even during the early 1970s, when thousands of young people were converted through his ministry.

Source: National and International Religion Report, August 27, 1990, Vol.4, No.18

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

The 1990s: Decade of a New Generation

By Jay Rogers
9/90

As we enter the 1990s, a new generation is appearing on the horizon - and the whole world is taking notice.

* A Newsweek Special Edition declares: "The New Teens" and attempts to answer these questions: "What makes them different? Who are their heroes? What problems do they face?"

* An Ebony magazine cover heralds: "The New Generation of the '90s" and describes a generation comprised of individuals with different ideas, who are "as equally bouyed by promising opportunities as they are weighted down with problems."

* A Time magazine cover proclaims "Twenty-Something" and examines a generation with unique culture, with their own set of problems, possibilities, situations and circumstances.

What is it that makes this generation so distinct?

It is no coincidence that this generation has come on the scene at the present time. The whole world is in a state of transition. As we close out the millenium, entire nations are in a state of upheaval. The social, economic and political landscape of the world is fast changing. This is a generation that has come of age "for such a time as this."

The most talked about, most written about generation of our time, which is described loosely as the "under 25 generation," has been raised in a new and often bewildering world and has attitudes and ideas which are radically different from those who preceded them.

The "tribal" cultures of the late 60s and early 70s gave way to the self-gratifying "me-generation" of the late 70s and 80s, with the flower children trading in their youthful idealism of peace and love for a more materialistic "yuppie" lifestyle.

And now a new generation emerges. And everyone is asking, "What are they like?"

Author and youth specialist Winkie Pratney, a New Zealander who worked for a teen drug abuse program during the 1960s, now observes, "In my thirty years of ministry, I have never experienced a better time to work with young people."

Rich Wilkerson, another veteran of the 60s era and founder of Mainstream, a youth ministry, comments on the coming of a new generation:

"What I see happening as I travel around this country is that the children of the so-called 'yuppie generation' are coming of age. The older generation, who were products of the hippie culture of the 1960s, championed themselves as the generation who were opposed to the Viet Nam war and materialism. Now they have become the most materialistic generation this nation has ever produced.

"This new generation," according to Wilkerson, "struggles with trust and has a tendency to disbelieve authority. These offspring are being raised by the most bonifide group of hypocrites in American history. Because authority is so hypocritical, it is viewed by these young people as threatening."

Yet, it is this generation, according to many youth experts, who have the greatest potential to attain greatness. One trend that contradicts all the trends of the past is that this generation has a deep desire to believe and hope and trust. In the midst of a spiritual vacuum that has been left by the selfishness and materialism of our society, young people have been asking questions in a search for meaning, love and purpose.

Historian Vincent Harding comments, "Parents are bankrupt spiritually. We have more technological advancement, more creature comforts, more opportunities than ever before, but no hope."

Consequently, more young people than ever are turning to God in hope of making some sense out of a confusing and often threatening world. Dr. Frederick Price, a Los Angeles area pastor, estimates that that 70% of his Crenshaw Christian Center congregation are young people.

"I've seen this upsurge for several years," claims Price. "As I travel around the country, I see young people coming forward, hungry to know about the things of God. They're coming by the truck loads."

One of the most obvious reasons for the spiritual hunger of this new generation of young people is the many new problems they face. These problems include the rapidly escalating threat of AIDS, the drug problem, and the pressure to succeed.

Threat of AIDS

Even with the threat of AIDS, the number of sexually active teens is significantly higher than ten years ago. According to Newsweek magazine, by March of 1990, the Centers for Disease Control had counted 1,429 cases of AIDS among teenagers, which is fewer than one percent of all AIDS cases.

Yet teenagers fear AIDS more than any other illness. There is, in fact, a need for concern. Although relatively few teens are diagnosed with AIDS, nearly a fifth of the people with AIDS are in their twenties. With a nearly ten year period between infection and the onset of symptoms, this would place many victims who contract the disease in their teenage years.

Drug Use Down

Although sexual activity is up, the use of illegal drugs is down among the "new teens." Use of alcohol, marijuana and cocaine fell significantly in the last ten years. The greater dangers of the modern world are perceived by many of these young people. Drugs are scarier to them than the group who widely experimented with substance abuse in the 60s and 70s.

Part of the reason for this decline is that parents may be as likely, in some cases, to be substance abusers as their children. Among this new generation are many of the offspring of the 1960s psychedelic drug culture. With a dizzying array of frightening options, drug use is less appealing to them than the revolutionaries of 20 years ago. However, many of the new generation who use drugs, do so earlier, especially those who start because of a parent's habit.

Pressure to Succeed

Life in the 1990s has become stressful to young people. As the percentage of the teenage population decreases relative to the adult world, the numbers of teenage pregnancies continue to rise; there are a growing number of minorities living at the poverty level; and there are a growing number of single parent households.

The most serious cause for concern, however, is the rise of suicide. The rate of 18 suicides per 100,000 teens in 1987, places this problem at an epidemic proportion. Social scientists, therefore, are studying teenagers more closely than ever in order to trace the problem to the source.

The pressure to succeed seems to be at the root of all of these problems. Pressure at a younger age to find a job, to choose a career, to do well at school, to have a good marriage and family life, to pay for college, and the fear of contracting AIDS are all concerns that plague the minds of young people.

A Quest for Purpose and Meaning

In their quest for finding a purpose and meaning in life, there is more of a thirst to tap into spiritual values than any of the previous generations. They hunger to fill spiritual voids and solve the problems of the world created by the apathy and self-centeredness of their parents.

It should not be surprising, therefore, when the current generation hits the college campuses and there is a social revolution that surpasses that of any generation of the modern times. The campuses will be the center of an outcry for peace of mind and stability that will ascend to the heavens. This will be a generation that calls on the name of God.

The campuses will become the subject of news reports. The growing consensus among the news media will be that a spiritual revival is occurring among university students. Daily reports of unprecedented numbers of students attending prayer rallies on campus will become commonplace.

For a period of time, it will be as if heaven had touched earth. It will become normal among students to talk about the experiences they have had in prayer. As they touch God, the answers to many of the problems that plague our world will be revealed to them. This is a generation of world changers. It is a generation that has come on the scene "for such a time as this."

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(d8ab143e904bfa3467271eec5af75a9b_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(4688aadfd656ded00cd6bdfae55089a9_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

The Prophetic Generation

By Jay Rogers
9/90

There is a new generation coming on the horizon. The first fruits of the young people born since Roe vs. Wade was passed in 1973 are coming on the college campuses as freshmen this Fall.

In the very age when abortion, drug abuse, divorce, immorality and violent crime threaten to destroy our nation, God is raising up a new generation of prophets to turn the tide of evil and bring Revival and Awakening to our nation.

In 1973, at about the same time that the first-fruits of these prophets were being conceived, the Supreme Court overturned the national ruling on illegalized abortion in the infamous Rowe vs. Wade decision. Satan, moving through evil men in seats of power, intended to squelch God's prophetic voice. This has always been the devil's strategy throughout history.

* In Moses' day, Pharaoh tried to wipe out the nation of Israel. Satan knew that Moses was going to be the rescuer of God's people and so he tried to wipe out that prophetic voice.

* In the day of Elijah, Satan again, through King Ahab, tried to destroy through infant sacrifice on the altars of Baal the 7000 prophets that God was raising up.

* When Jesus was born, Satan used Herod to try to wipe out the generation that would produce the Messiah.

* And today, in America's gross ignorance and wilfull disobedience, we have seen, since 1973, 20 to 30 million little ones destroyed. The enemy is willing to do this because he knows that this is the generation that will do exploits for the kingdom of God.

God is raising up an army!

There is a new generation coming - holy prophets of God who will speak words of healing and life to a dying world. God is raising up an army of young, radical, uncompromising believers who will lay their lives down to see others come to know God.

These soldiers are even now emerging - God Himself is raising them up! They will be more interested in serving their Lord Jesus Christ than in their own happiness. They will fight battles in the spiritual realms. And they will reap the greatest harvest the world have ever seen!

This generation will seek the face of God. They weep for a dying world. They will hear the heart cry of God. Then they will emerge with a message - "THUS SAITH THE LORD!" And the whole world will know that they have truly heard from God.

God has chosen this generation because they are willing to go up and possess the land. God has chosen them to be the generation that will enter into His rest. This will be a generation of destiny - even now God is birthing through them a prophetic voice that will go to the ends of the earth.

It is a prophetic generation that is coming. It is the witness of Moses and Elijah that Satan yearned to destroy, but could not. This is the hour and this is the generation. They shall be the first fruits of a harvest that has never been experienced before - they shall herald a move of the Spirit that has never been seen in the history of the world.

A Prophetic Psalm For Our Generation

The LORD says to my Lord:
"Sit at my right hand
until I make your enemies
a footstool for your feet."

The LORD will extend your mighty scepter from Zion;
you will rule in the midst of your enemies.
Your troops will be willing on your day of battle.

Arrayed in holy majesty,
from the womb of the dawn your young men will come to you like the dew.

Psalm 110:1-3

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

The Return of the 1960s Revolution

by Bob Martin
5/88

You say you want a revolution, well, you know -
we all want to change the world.
You tell me that it's evolution, well, you know -
we all want to change the world.
But when you talk about destruction,
don't you know that you can count me out?
And don't you know it's going to be all right, all right, all right.

You say you got a real solution, well, you know, we would all love to see the plan.
You ask me for a contribution, well, you know,
we all do with what we can.
But if you want money for people with minds that hate, all I can tell you is,
"Brother, you will have to wait."
Don't you know it's going to be all right, all right, all right.

You say you'll change the Constitution,
well, you know,
we all want to change your head.
You tell me it's the institution, well, you know, you better free your mind instead.
But if you go carrying pictures of Chairman Mao,
you ain't gonna make it with anyone anyhow.
Don't you know it's going to be all right, all right, all right ...

"Revolution" by The Beatles
(EMI Records, Ltd.)

The wild and radical 1960s are making a comeback, according to several recent reports on American pop culture. Apparently the youth of the '80s are developing an acute fascination with the music, the clothes, and the values of an earlier era.

"This is the season of 'born-again' hits," according to one music reviewer for The Los Angeles Times. After the sensational 1987 success of Ben E. King's "Stand By Me," a 1950s oldie, and Tiffany's version of "I Think We're Alone Now," a 1967 hit by Tommy James and the Blondells, record company executives are recognizing a new interest in nostalgic tunes. Two weeks after the Tiffany single went to the Number One spot on Billboard's sales charts, Billy Idol took the top spot with "Money Money," another remake of a Tommy James 1960s hit. 1

And the streak of remade oldies has shown no signs of waning. The Bangles' "Hazy Shade of Winter" and Elton John's "Candle in the Wind" have also enjoyed maximum airplay on Top 40 stations around the nation. This increased interest in tunes of the '60s has created a unique market: some radio stations today are devoting their entire programming schedules to oldies, such as KOFY in San Francisco - "The Nifty Ten Fifty" that plays nostalgic tunes 24 hours a day.

The attraction of the 1960s is not isolated to music, either. Fashion commentators are now recognizing that the 18-to-21-year-old customer is spending more time in vintage clothing stores. "It's amazing how many people make their wardrobes out of old clothes," said one store manager at a vintage clothing outfit on the West Coast. "There's been a terrific nostalgic interest in the last five years and it's just getting big in fashion right now," she added. 2

Among teen-agers and college freshmen, there has also been somewhat of a revolt against the materialism of the early 1980s. In a recent installment of "Bloom County," cartoonist Berke Breathed announced that Yuppies are dead, wealth is out, and greed and hedonism are passé. This seems to be the mood among more and more young Americans. But if the values of the '80s are now out, what is in? And why are we becoming so fascinated with the 1960s?

The upcoming generation - those young people who are now in high school and grade school - are the products of the "modern family." Dad is an aspiring corporate executive traveling from meeting to meeting; Mom, meanwhile, is heavily involved in her own career as well, leaving little time for the children. Both Mom and Dad must work, of course, to maintain their materialistic lifestyle. Meanwhile, Junior is assured that he is fortunate to have parents who live together ... even though he spends most of his time at a day-care center, in front of the VCR, or at the shopping mall with his skateboard.

The Lesson of Yesterday

The generation of the 1950s was just as materialistic as the one we live in today. Children were often isolated, alienated, and "turned off" to the next generation ... very similar to what Yuppie parents are doing in the '80s. The next generation - those children who became teen-agers in the 1960s - rejected their parents' materialistic philosophy. Young people began to search for real values ... and this led them to many places: the rock music subculture, Hare Krishna, or experimentation with drugs. They were led by the "prophets" of their day, The Beatles, who appropriately described the era as a time of revolution. The heartcry of young people during the 1960s was simple: "We all want to change the world!"

Great masses of young people went off to serve mankind in the Peace Corps at the bidding of President Kennedy. Today, according to Newsweek (February 8, 1988), a similar trend is developing. A "new volunteerism" has become fashionable among collegiates. "BMW's and the Almighty Buck are out," stated the report. "The new Yuppie rallying cry is volunteerism ..." Nearly 50 percent of the respondents to a recent Gallup Poll said they are involved in charity or volunteer work, up from 31 percent in 1984. According to Business Week's 1988 "Hip Parade" survey, volunteering and social commitment have replaced networking and materialism on the "What's In" list. 3

There is another interesting parallel between the 1960s and the present era ... one that is not likely to be the subject of a secular news documentary. The young people's revolt against the materialism of the 1950s had some positive results, one of them being what we now call The Jesus Movement. Characterized by thousands of long-haired, jean-clad teens who were converted to Christ on the beaches of Southern California, the Jesus Movement was an important social phenomenon of the 1960s.

The Jesus Movement gave birth to countless Christian leaders and ministries which are now leading the Church and pioneering Christian work around the world. It also brought thousands of young people into the churches of America, bringing new life and youthful zeal for the cause of Christ. It fired the Church for action and challenged dead religious traditions.

In my assessment of current trends in America, I believe that we are on the verge of another Jesus Movement on an even larger scale than the one that was spawned in the late '60s. Disillusioned young people today are not finding fulfillment in anything that the '80s have to offer. The Yuppie culture and the Sexual Revolution have both lost their appeal in the wake of the Stock Market Crash and the AIDS epidemic. New Age occultism is offering little spiritual reality. The young people of America are ripe for another wide-scale return to Christianity.

We are at this moment poised in a window of history, facing a generation of young people who are ready to be influenced and led by someone who has a message worth following. Who will lead the young people of the 1990s? Will it be another group of prophets like The Beatles, or will it be Christians who are awakened and ready to serve in this hour of great opportunity?

1 "Old Hits Live Again on New Vinyl," Daily Review, January 13, 1988, page 37.

2 "Vintage Clothing Revival," Daily Review, January 13, 1988, page 27.

3 "The New Volunteerism," Newsweek, February 8, 1988, page 42.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Risk Free From AIDS?

You want to be risk-free from AIDS? Don't have sex. And as long as you aren't shooting drugs, you'll be fine. You won't have to worry about who's had blood tests, and whether your condoms are latex or not. You also won't have to deal with pregnancy, herpes, syphilis, and ghonorrhea.

When you think that AIDS could kill you, waiting isn't a bad idea.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(95b425611cbd2b8716a140cf67c81822_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(b4eeff342f60cc7bcd67d869b4fedca2_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

The Animal

By Keith Johnson

I can remember asking myself, "Why do you do this to yourself?"

My best buddy and I had just finished sucking down enough Rumble Mints 100 proof between both of us to kill a man. Somehow that night we made it to a party in a cellar. The stairs were a snap going down, but as the party ended and it was time to go, I suddenly realized I couldn't even climb back up. I was trapped. I had gone too far and lost control again. It made me sick.

"Why do you do this to yourself," I asked ... "You're a fool."

The first time I got drunk I was fifteen. Some older friends I knew bought for me and a couple of friends. We drank vodka and O.J. and got foolish under a street light until we got sick and went home. I really didn't think I would do it again, but I did.

By the time I was 17, I had learned how to party. Getting high and drinking was the thing to do. Sports were the only thing that were keeping me from being a total burn out. Everyone knew me in high school. I did have a few things going for me. Academically, I was the pits, but get me in the art room and I was alright. Weekends would come and it was time to party!

My senior year rolled around and the time came to go for it. I thought of bizarre things to do that people would remember me by. I went wild! I got crazy! Friday night came and I would get smashed. My friends used to say, "If you want a good time, if you really want to party ... call the Animal!"

I loved to get crazy, I loved my booze and dope. Every time I partied, I would try to top myself. I was always searching for that ultimate buzz. I would drink more and more, smoke dope more and more, and do more and more crazy things for kicks. I got more and more out of control every time, "Hey, look at me everybody!"

But each time came that sick feeling of going too far, of losing control of myself. A couple of times, I even prayed to God when I was in deep trouble.

My senior year was half over and I started wearing a silk screened animal on my shirt. My friends liked them so I made them all "Animal" T-shirts. I started a club for animals. We went to all the football games together and partied together.

Then one Friday night my friends gave me some pills and I blacked out. Some of my friends thought it would be a good idea to throw me into a lake to revive me. I'm just lucky to be alive today. I started thinking about my life after that and I really didn't like what I saw.

But the "Animal" wouldn't give up that easy. I continued partying, but something was different. I would feel guilty more and more and started to get angry. A friend's mother told me about Jesus one day. I knew He was real and out there somewhere but I liked being an animal for now.

Shortly after graduation my parents moved and I reluctantly followed. I was an hour and a half away from my friends now. I started drinking regularly at clubs on weekends. Five drinks, then seven, then nine, then ten mixed drinks.

One Friday night I came into my favorite club and walked up to the bar without asking for a drink. A new bartender, whom I had never seen, said, "Hey, you're the Black Russian Kid." I had developed such a reputation for drinking close to a dozen Black Russians a night that this guy already knew about me!

Well I laughed it off at the time, but later that night as I lay in bed thinking about it, I got mad at myself. I felt like a jerk. I didn't want to be a drunk hanging around a meat joint! That Friday night I decided not to drink poison so I just cruised around the city ending up by Boston University's Nickerson Field. I saw hundreds of buses and all kinds of people going in. I didn't think anything of it at the time.

Then Saturday morning I was reading the paper and saw an ad for the Billy Graham Crusade at Boston University that Saturday night. I thought, "What the heck, why not go?" So I called a friend and asked him if he would go with me. To my surprise, he said yes, so we went.

As we sat there, way up in the bleachers, I felt a little uneasy. Deep down, I was tired of life, sick of drinking and empty inside. To be honest I was scared. The future didn't look too good to me and nobody knew it but God and myself.

It was time to hear Graham speak and I was all ears. His message was especially for young people that night. I don't remember the message word for word, but I do remember a few things he said. He started by talking about the great opportunity young people have in America - how they are free to decide who they want to be.

On the surface, everything was alright, but wait a minute! "Why is it," he asked, "that the problem of suicide has reached epidemic proportions among young people. Why have over 3 million teens been treated for alcoholism? Why have so many violent crimes been committed by young people? Why are there so many that are angry, bitter and unfulfilled?"

"There is no question something is wrong with our American society," he went on to say. "I would like to believe that everything is O.K. but the statistics don't lie." He was talking about the various problems our nation faces, especially among the youth. He said that society will have to pay the price for its sinful lifestyle.

Then he read from this portion of the Bible, "For the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life in Christ Jesus, our Lord" (Romans 6:23).

I took a good honest look at myself and my life and I knew I would eventually have to pay the price for my sins. Eventually I would either get killed driving while drunk or become an alcoholic. Furthermore, the penalty for a sinful lifestyle must be paid when we die. We all have to stand before Jesus Christ the Son of God to face judgment.

But there is hope for you! Jesus Christ, the very Son of God, loves you and died for you on a cross and He did it for all sinners. Graham asked, "O.K. You say, 'What do I have to do to be ready to stand before God?'" Then he read this from the Bible, "Repent then and turn to God so that your sins may be wiped out" (Acts 3:19).

I didn't know what it meant to repent until he explained it. He said it this way: "To repent means to change your mind and opinion concerning sin as it is seen in its true perspective - that is through God's eyes. To repent then, means to turn away from sin and turn to God with your whole heart."

So, to sum it up, the first thing that God's Word says you must do is to repent. Secondly, you must receive Christ into your heart by faith.

As I sat there listening, I started understanding for the first time what it meant to be saved. I knew that night that Jesus loved me and that I could trust Him. He was one friend who would never let me down. I knew He died for me to free me from the power of sin.

I didn't have to be an animal anymore. Never was I challenged like this before. I had been living in sin my whole life and it was easy - but now to give my heart to Jesus Christ and repent and turn away from my sins - that took some guts!

I can remember the last thing Graham read from the Word of God was this, "I tell you NOW is the time of God's favor, NOW is the day of salvation" (2 Corinthians 6:2). I had heard enough. It was time to decide!

God made mankind with a free will. The Bible says, "You were made in the image of God." He didn't make zombies or robots with a pre-programmed mind to accept Him. No, He never forces you to accept Him. He only loves you and offers you eternal life. But God is holy and with Him there can be no sin so we must repent and turn from sin and give our hearts to Him.

I gave my heart to Him that night and today I'm a new man. He took away hate and violence and gave me love and peace. I have hope now. I have a new type of excitement about life - my life! And I want to introduce people to Jesus. If he could save the "Animal" He can save anyone.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

[!\[\]\(d5d7044e5caf6907399af2dced8d6ff8_img.jpg\) Up one level](#)

[!\[\]\(35dc653d59570f8f891c312eeece91a2_img.jpg\) Back to document index](#)

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Torch for Gospel

by Dan Wooding
Open Doors News Service
4/88

Thousands of young Christians from all over the world will be taking part in a marathon that will carry lighted torches to the far corners of the earth. The event, called "Target 2000: Great Commission Torch Run," will see relay teams of young runners carrying hand-held flames - symbolizing the Gospel - across all continents during the next eighteen months.

Christian leaders and teen-agers from all continents will gather on the Mount of Ascension, in Israel, on Easter Sunday (April 3) to see the first torch lit in a special dedication ceremony.

"Once the first flame has been carried down from the mountain and run to Lod Airport, it will be used to light other beacons to be transported by air and sea to other parts of the world," said a spokesman for Youth With A Mission, one of the organizers of the event.

"Then, in Africa, Europe, Australia and the Americas, these torches will in turn be used to light others that will fan out across the countries to take the message of the event to thousands of villagers, towns and cities. Along the way, the run will be used as a special focus for local concerts and rallies - centering on revival in their communities - and as a springboard for missions and outreach projects."

The round-the-world run is being organized by leaders of many Christian organizations, linking up with scores of churches on the route who will take responsibility for carrying a torch part of the way on its journey. Organizers hope that the project will eventually involve upwards of 100,000 young people in the run itself, associated rallies, outreaches and conferences.

The idea was conceived by YWAM founder and mission statesman, Loren Cunningham. He said the event was intended to encourage young Christians to take their part in world evangelism, and to raise expectancy in seeing all countries reached for Christ in this generation.

"Can you imagine the impact as tens of thousands - even hundreds of thousands - of young people are seen running with these torches," he said. Cunningham said the effect will show to the participants that world evangelization by the year 2000 is possible.

"They will say, 'Not only can it be done - but we will do it, Lord Jesus,'" he said. "Young people do the impossible before they find out it's impossible - that's why God uses them so often," he said.

Months of detailed work has gone into the event, planning routes through busy cities and remote territories, even checking that live flames can be carried on aircraft - they have to be placed in a special container, and have a seat of their own.

The marathon will be featured next year in Singapore at the conference on World Evangelization called by the Lausanne Committee for World Evangelization. "By bringing attention to next year's conference in Singapore, the organizers also believe that worldwide prayer will bring the delegates a vision from God for the strategies and initiatives needed to fulfill the Great Commission," said the YWAM spokesman.

"The seven-fold aim of Target 2000 includes Bible and Christian literature distribution and building church unity, as well as prayer and proclamation. Organizations and individuals wanting more information about how they can take part in the run in their nation or region should write to:

Target 2000: Great Commission Torch Run
Prins Hendrikkade 50
1012 AC Amsterdam,
The Netherlands

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

Virginity in Vogue

By Leilani Corpus

The Sexual Revolution of the 1960s is coming to an abrupt halt and virginity is making a comeback on high school campuses. That's the report from the Princeton Religion Research Center, which recently announced that an increasing proportion of Americans consider premarital sex wrong. The statistics they discovered demonstrate the reversal of an 18-year trend: two years ago, 39 percent said premarital sex was wrong; today 46 percent say it is wrong.

"A key factor in this trend reversal may be growing concern over the risk of disease," such as herpes and AIDS, the Center said in its report, although most respondents (83 percent) cited moral and religious reasons for their opinions. Among those from age 18 to 29, the proportion considering premarital sex wrong had climbed from 18 percent to 27 percent.

The war cry against the establishment in the 1960s was for sexual freedom, but the definition of this rallying cry has now been rewritten after two decades of suffering the disastrous consequences of increasing venereal diseases and the recent AIDS epidemic. Health professionals and educators are proclaiming a new solution: responsible "safe sex" with its virtues of contraceptive usage and sex education.

Safe sex adherents are diligent about carrying their contraceptives and checking their partners' sexual history. Contraceptive manufacturers have painted routine usage as a virtue, like taking your vitamins. In all their advertising, however, they fail to share the startling statistics of increasing teen pregnancies that have resulted from the use of their products.

Although using contraceptives and policing your partner's sexual activity is a laudable attempt at stopping the spread of a disease, one very important element missing from the safe sex solution is values. The real issue is not the clinical advantages of having a clean partner, or whether or not you are using contraceptives. At the bottom of the safe sex promotion is the idea that self-gratification is still OK, as long as it is performed within the confines of medical safety. And that idea, more and more social commentators are saying, is dangerous.

Sociologist George Gilder, in his book Men and Marraige, said that men who respond to short term sexual desires are apt to have significantly higher rates of suicide, drug and alcohol addiction, mental disease, accidental death, and arrest. There is a vital difference between "responding to a short term sexual desire" even with the endorsement of health professionals, and being willing to wait until marriage to gratify that desire in its proper context.

The danger of "safe sex theology" is that it is a fearful knee-jerk reaction to the terror of AIDS and other diseases, but not a warning about the dangers of sexual permissiveness. Safe sex, in essence, is the same permissive sex of the '60s with the 1980s' Good Housekeeping seal of medical approval.

A Revolt Against Permissiveness

Thousands of high-school students in Northern California have discovered a solution which goes a step ahead of safe sex and effectively solves the problem: virginity. "Clean Teens," based in Modesto, California, and directed by 18-year-old Kirk McCall, is the nation's only teen-led group that seeks to advocate sexual abstinence before marriage.

Clean Teens organized a rally which drew 1,000 people last October. "There is a real desire for abstinence among youth," said McCall. "When they hear positive reasons for abstinence, they say, 'Now I know why to say no.'"

"Chastity is important because of the physical repercussions of promiscuity: AIDs, other sexually transmitted diseases, and the rising rate of teen pregnancies. Those who go along with sex before marriage for emotional reasons find emotional problems later in life - guilt, frustration, jealousy," McCall explained.

Virginity, once considered a stigma for unpopular homely girls, is becoming the new anthem for those raised in a decade of routine divorce, relationships built on convenience, and widespread availability of contraceptives.

Virginity has proven to be a sound answer throughout the ages because it builds mutual respect and trust in a relationship. Virginity is a very viable solution, despite the messages from contraceptive manufacturers and health professionals that young people must be involved in permissive sex.

Have you considered the fact that you don't have to be involved in permissive sex? It takes more self-control, of course, to direct and harness the sexual appetite through virginity. But it seems that more and more voices in society are advocating it as the most sensible answer to our current sexual dilemma.

"Sexual freedom includes choosing to say no," says Marie Lee, in the September issue of Young Miss magazine. "I have many friends who admit they wish they had not started having sexual relations in their teens."

Courts in this nation have not had such a favorable response to the new abstinence movement. Plaintiffs in Bowen vs. Kendrick are currently seeking to overturn a U.S. district court ruling that struck down the federal Adolescent Family Life Act - which permits government funding of religious organizations that promote teen-age chastity.

In April of 1987, the district court declared the act unconstitutional, claiming it advances religion and fosters an "excessive entanglement between government and religion," in violation of the First Amendment establishment clause. While pregnant teen-agers are being counseled to have abortions without parental consent, U.S. courts are declaring it unconstitutional to fund organizations that promote chastity.

But despite such resistance, it does appear that the days of the campus stud are drawing to an end in the wake of the 27,000 who have died from AIDS and the quarter million expected to be infected by 1991. He is probably the most dangerous man on campus.

Safe Sex Guidelines

The author and designer of safe sex is God Himself. His laws will not be broken or invalidated by a vogue or chic sexual philosophy. The Bible declares, "Do not be deceived, God is not mocked; for whatever a man sows, this he will also reap" (Galatians 6:7). Those who attempt to break God's laws will find themselves broken instead.

According to the Bible, sexuality is a gift from God which requires certain responsibilities. Because we are a steward of our sexuality, it can either be properly used or gravely abused. We will reap what we sow in either abusing it or using it properly within the safe confines of marriage.

The marriage relationship was instituted by God for the purpose of expressing His gift of sexuality. It's not meant to be an excuse to have sex, but it certainly is worth waiting for in the light of the mounting statistics which demonstrate the side effects of today's "safe sex." When you wait for the right person, and they in turn wait for you, your patience adds the necessary degree of faithfulness and trust that cements a marriage together for a lifetime.

Commitment to a marriage partner doesn't begin when the certificate is signed, or even with the ceremony. Instead, it begins today with your decision to keep yourself sexually pure. Are you really committed to having a lasting marriage? Don't wait until you receive a positive pregnancy test or AIDS test results, but instead make a decision now by saying 'no.'

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

YOUTH OF DESTINY

By Mike and Yvette Kell

WHERE LIGHT MEETS DARKNESS THERE YOU WILL FIND THE CHAMPIONS.

Have you ever wondered - "Why am I here?" - "What am I supposed to do with my life?" or even - "Who am I?"

God said that in the last days young men and women would volunteer freely to serve Him.¹

In these last days, God said that the youth will cover the earth like the dew. At dawn, when light meets darkness, the earth is covered with dew. In the same way, there is coming a confrontation of light versus the darkness in the spiritual realm - the kingdom of God versus the kingdom of Satan. When these forces clash, the youth, like the dew, will cover the earth as a mighty army of God.

Will you be one of God's champions in the earth? Will you take your stand as a disciple of the Lord Jesus Christ and fulfill your destiny in Him?

From the beginning of time, God the Father had a dream. He had a dream of a beautiful creation. He also dreamed that one day His Son, the Lord Jesus, would rule over this beautiful creation. This dream has not ended - God continues to speak to the hearts of men through the ages; imparting within them a glimpse of His plan for creation.

God's plan is for the nations of the earth. This plan has been continually unfolding generation after generation. Each generation is unique with its own aspect of fulfilling God's purpose for the earth which He already predetermined.

God still has that dream today. It has not changed and it will come to pass. Just as in times past, God is speaking to the hearts of men and women concerning His purpose for the earth. He is also raising up an entire generation of young men and women who will fulfill His purpose.

You are a part of this generation that will fulfill God's purpose in the earth.

Dreams and Visions

For ages men and women have endured great trials, suffered tremendous hardship and even shed their own blood because of the dreams that God has placed within their hearts. Once a man or woman catches even a glimpse of God's purpose, something deep within them comes to life and they are never the same again.

Before you were even born God knew the purpose for which He created you. You are not on this earth by chance, but rather you are alive for a specific reason. And you are alive during one of the most exciting and strategic times in history - on the brink of the fulfillment of God's dream for the earth.

Deep within you lies a destiny. Part of God's dream already lies within your heart like a seed. God planned a great purpose for your life even before the beginning of time and He has planted that dream deep within your heart.

Hearts Aflame with Destiny

God's dream was carried from generation to generation in the hearts of men and women who had heard His voice call them to a great purpose.

4000 years ago, God spoke to a man named Abraham and promised to make him a father of many nations. This was an exciting promise, yet there was a problem. Abraham and Sarah were very old and they had no children.²

As in the case of Abraham, God's dream for your life will always be bigger than yourself. It will go far beyond what you can do in and of yourself. God's plan for your life is a part of His purpose for the whole world and it will only happen when you put your trust completely in God's ability to bring it to pass.

Abraham did not look to his and Sarah's inability to have a child but with respect for the promise of God, he did not waiver in unbelief, but grew strong in faith, giving glory to God, and being fully assured that what He has promised He was able also to perform.

Abraham dared to believe the impossible. He was willing to stake his whole life on a promise from God. He did not just settle for what was good; he wanted God's best, for in "hope against hope" Abraham believed the promise of God - the God "who gives life to the dead and calls into being that which does not exist."³

3500 years ago, a man named Moses was raised in luxury in the house of Pharaoh, but by faith Moses, when he had grown up, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; choosing rather to endure ill-treatment with the people of God, than to enjoy the passing pleasures of sin; considering the reproach of Christ greater than the treasures of Egypt; for he was looking for a reward.⁴

The Promise

2000 years ago, God sent His Son, born of a virgin, into the world. Through Jesus Christ's death on the cross, whereby He took upon Himself all the sins of the world, and His resurrection, He made it possible for men and women to be forgiven and cleansed of their sins and to become sons and daughters of their Father in heaven.

Having received all power and authority in heaven and earth by conquering the forces of darkness, Jesus now commissioned His disciples to go and make disciples of all nations. God's dream for the world is still shining brightly. And we are alive at the most exciting time in history. We are on the verge of the completion of God's purposes and the return of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

The Apostle Paul came on the scene following the Ascension of the Lord Jesus into heaven and the outpouring of the Holy Spirit. There was an intense struggle as the first Christian church was being birthed. God's Spirit was moving mightily upon the hearts of many people at the same time there was much persecution unleashed upon these early believers.

One of the leading persecutors of the Church was a man named Saul, but his life was radically changed by a revelation of Jesus Christ. One day Saul was blinded by a sudden flash of light from heaven and he heard Jesus ask him why he was persecuting Him. When Saul realized he was resisting God, he repented and made Jesus the Lord of his life. Jesus told Saul, later to be known as the Apostle Paul, to follow Him and he would be told what he must do.⁵

God had chosen Paul to take the message of salvation through Jesus Christ to the Gentiles. Paul came to a place where he fell on his knees and asked Jesus, "Lord what must I do?"

Paul's life was no longer his own. He knew deep down in his heart that there was a destiny for his life and a purpose he was created for. And he knew it was something he must do.

Each of us, when we ask Jesus to come into our hearts to forgive us and set us free from sin and to be our Lord, are called for a specific purpose. Your salvation and your purpose in life cannot be separated. They were both established by God before He even created the world.

The Nature of the Battle

Today, the battle of light versus darkness is taking place in the nations of the world. It is reported on the news every night; it is in the newspaper everyday. The forces of darkness are spewing out evil directly opposing the kingdom of God.

Though the Gospel message has many enemies, it shall prevail. This message is the word of the cross. Through willingly dying on the cross (the most brutal method of execution known to the Romans) Jesus destroyed all the power of darkness; and all authority in heaven and earth has been given to Him. And every nation on the face of the earth will bow its knee to His lordship and all the peoples of the earth will confess Him to be the ruler of the world.

The battle is raging all around you. For those with ears to hear and eyes to see this glorious triumphant struggle between light and darkness, they will be the champions of God's purpose. Where will you find these young men and women of God? Where light clashes with darkness - there you will find the CHAMPIONS!

What is this great struggle between light and darkness; good and evil? It comes down to one thing ... obedience. Will men and nations obey the Word of God and live, or disobey and die?

The Chosen Generation

In discerning the call of God and the destiny that He has upon your life, the bottom line is - you are not your own. You have been bought with a price. Jesus Christ paid an enormous price for you when He died on the Cross.

You belong to God. Your life is not yours to spend anyway you please.

God has one requirement of you. You must settle once and for all that Jesus Christ is the Lord of every area of your life. "Lord" means ruler or authority. Making Jesus Lord means giving your will, thoughts, feelings and emotions to Him. It means saying, "Jesus is in charge and now I am getting direction for my life directly from Him."

It is the Lord who raises up kingdoms and sets them aside. He has set the boundaries of nations before time even began.

In the beginning, God created men and women in His image to rule over His creation. When man sinned, God did not give up on His plan for men and women to rule over His creation.

God's plan continued as He raised up a man to set His chosen people free from bondage and to bring them into a promised land, a land flowing with milk and honey. He forgave His people and gave an abundant opportunity for every man and woman to fulfill their purpose in God.

This man's name was Moses. The devil, working through Pharaoh, wanted to stop God's plan by attempting to kill Moses. Pharaoh ordered that all the male Hebrew children were to be killed at birth, but Moses' parents hid him so he could live and fulfill his destiny in God.

Moses fulfilled his purpose and brought God's people to the promised land. God's plan continued for many years until the time came that God would send His only Son, Jesus, to deliver all men and women from being slaves to sin and to make us His sons and daughters.

At the time of the birth of Jesus, the King of Judea was named Herod and - like Pharaoh - he commanded his soldiers to kill every male child two years old and younger in the land where Jesus was born. But an angel told Jesus' parents to take Him to a secret place so that He could fulfill His purpose and destiny in God to become the Savior of the world.

After Jesus was raised from the dead, He repeated the command that God had originally given to Adam and Eve in the garden of Eden. Jesus told His disciples to go and make disciples of all the nations of the earth.

Today, there is an anxious longing in the world for the generation that will fulfill this great commission in the earth. In Joel 2:28-29, the prophet tells us of a generation of young men and women that God will use to fulfill His purpose. The Apostle Peter repeated this prophecy on the day of Pentecost in 33 A.D. about a generation of young men and women that God will raise up in the last days to fulfill his purpose.

This brings us to the day and age in which we now live. You are a part of this prophetic generation of young men and women that is about to explode onto the scene. God said, through the prophet Joel and the Apostle Peter, that in the last days He would pour out His Spirit, they would have dreams and visions and that they would prophesy.

Yet once again, in this generation Satan is trying to stop God's purpose by trying to kill this prophetic generation of young men and women who are chosen of God. Since 1973, in the United States alone, over 25 million babies have been killed through abortion in the devil's attempt to stop this generation from fulfilling God's purpose in the earth.

Thank God that, like Moses and Jesus, your life has been spared so that you can fulfill your purpose and destiny in these last days. You are the ones the prophet Joel and the Apostle Peter spoke of in the Bible. You are a part of the chosen generation. You are the a part of the generation who will fulfill their purpose and destiny in these last days.

Everything about you - your personality, the way you look, the time and place you were born - God was lovingly planned before He even created the world so that you could be a part of His dream for the nations.

God has said: "Before I formed you in the womb I knew you, and before you were born I consecrated you; I have appointed you a prophet to the nations."

A Child of Destiny

You are chosen of God - His hand is upon your life for his purpose. Your value cannot be measured by anything on this earth. The value of something is measured by the price paid for it. You were purchased with the blood of Lord Jesus Christ. God gave the most precious thing in His heart so that He could have you.

God is speaking to you right now deep down in your heart. God will continue to speak to you in the days to come with dreams and visions for your life. God is always with you no matter where you go or what you do.

If you will give yourself fully to the Lord Jesus Christ, your heart will become a fertile garden for God's dream to grow in your heart. Give God all that is within you - give Him your whole heart and soul - and He will use you powerfully to be a prophet to your generation. You will have an impact on your world and you will become a part of His growing family - many sons and daughters destined for glory.

1. Psalm 110
2. Gen. 18:11
3. Hebrews 11: 3,9
4. Hebrews 11:24,25
5. Acts 9: 1-6

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

 Up one level

Back to document index

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

FREE VIDEO OFFER!

Are you a university student? Do you long to see a spiritual awakening at your school? Media House International will send you a FREE copy of the video, "The Asbury Revival." This life-changing video contains eyewitness footage from the Revival at Asbury College in 1970 in Wilmore, Kentucky. This video is a $20 value, but is free to you if you are a university student! All you have to do is send your name, address, and proof of student status (such as a photocopy of your student I.D.) to:

Media House International
P.O. Box 362173
Melbourne FL 32936-2173

Be sure to mention that you saw this offer on the The Forerunner International home page!

Remember: You must reply by mail and include proof of current student status!

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY

ТИРЕДБЕКТННК

PREDVESTNIK - THE VOICE OF A NEW GENERATION

Learn more about Predvestnik - the Russian language Forerunner

Alexei Salapatov: The editor of Predvestnik preaches the vision of the Russian Forerunner - A RealPlayer video file

Read articles from Predvestnik in RUSSIAN! An extensive site of Christian articles in the Russian language with instructions on how to set your web browser to see Russian fonts.

Karl Marx?

Global Vision for Predvestnik

Important questions answered concerning the future focus of Predvestnik

The Internet: A New Opportunity to Reach the Nations

Letters to Predvestnik

More Letters to Predvestnik

Alphia's Testimony: A Tatar Muslim Finds Faith in Jesus Christ

Report from Kazan, Tatarstan

Tatarstan: Making a Decision Between Islam and Christianity

Report on Trip to Ukraine, Russia and Tatarstan

Special "Islam Issue"

Chechnya

Conversion of Muslims to Christ in former USSR

Election '96

Choices Made in the Russian Federation

From Under The Rubble

Rebuilding Russia

Rebuilding Russia - Part 2

RUSSIAN INVASION OF ISRAEL?

Russian abortion debate grows

Christian Reconstruction in the former USSR: Whose Kingdom Is Here?

Zhirinovsky on Religion in Russia

More articles on the former USSR from The Forerunner

Predvestnik is made possible by the generous contributions of Christians all over the United States of America. All donations to Predvestnik through Media House International are tax-deductible.

To receive our free monthly newsletter which describes the ministry of Predvestnik in the former USSR, email us at: Media House International and remember to type in your postal address.

Or, write us at:

Media House International, P.O. Box 362173, Melbourne, FL 32936-2173.

Yours for King Jesus and His Crown Rights,

Jay Rogers

Director, Media House International

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

MEDIA HOUSE INT'L | FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY | MORE ON FORMER USSR

About Predvestnik: The Russian language version of The Forerunner

IN AUGUST 1991, COMMUNIST HARDLINERS led an unsuccessful coup in an attempt to seize power and close the doors of the Soviet Union. We think it's fitting that the very next day after the coup failed, the first issue of Predvestnik (which means Forerunner or Herald) was printed in Moscow. It was truly the end of an old order and the dawning of a new day.

Since that time, ten issues of Predvestnik have been produced in the former USSR. After printing the first issue at 100,000 copies, we received many warm responses telling us about its positive effects. The first issue was introductory in character and was mostly used in evangelism rallies throughout the former USSR. We presented the simple Gospel message of Jesus Christ. In the following quarterly issues, which had 16 pages and 20,000 copies each, we covered many deeper topics, including:

- * Occult roots and bankruptcy of Marxism (at that time, when the Soviet Union existed, it was rather relevant);
- * Cults, the occult and false religions;
- * Authority and authenticity of the Bible;
- * Creation vs. evolution;
- * Philosophy of freedom and democracy;
- * Analysis of the Orthodox Church and her positive and negative influences on our culture and society (the Orthodox denomination in Russia and Ukraine has much greater credit with the common people than the yet-weaker Protestant churches);
- * History of Christianity.

Each issue contained inspiring and challenging articles, sermons and testimonies of famous teachers and ordinary Christians. The staff tried to keep readers informed of the latest news in the Christian world from all over the planet.

Our distribution network has been growing steadily and now consists of over 30 distributors in seven post-Soviet republics. Among these are individuals, as well as churches and ministries. From these centers, copies of Predvestnik are sent to even further reaches of the post-Soviet Union. We are aiming to expand distribution and to produce a bimonthly newspaper.

It is noteworthy that Predvestnik seems to be in favor with the three largest Protestant mainstreams in the former USSR: Baptists, Pentecostals and Charismatics. Although they have some disagreements between each other, churches of each movement are in the number of our distributors. This is possible because we have been trying to place the emphasis on Jesus Christ Himself and historical orthodoxy, rather than on ideas inherent in a single stream or denomination.

At the early stage of our history, we used many materials from foreign ministers for the newspaper, mostly from Americans. While we consider it important to communicate to our readers the rich heritage of Western Christianity, today it has become clear that people in our country are more responsive to a message which is based upon the Word of God and applied to their particular situation. That means we have to answer people's needs through messages born in hearts of local Christians, those who know well about life here and the present conditions of our society. This is our main goal for the future: to be a competent source of meaningful, easy-to-apply information about the relevance of Christianity to daily life, from a sound biblical viewpoint.

We believe it would not be hype or exaggeration to say that Predvestnik is a unique publication. While various denominations in Christianity have their own publications in the former USSR, this newspaper stands out as a publication that tries to consider "global" Christianity, placing an emphasis on similarities, not differences, as many have testified. This makes the newspaper appealing and attractive to more people. Predvestnik has made its mark in its short existence. We are becoming well-known in many regions as a unique ministry. We understand that all this is due to God's grace, to Whom we give all the credit.

Alexei Salapatov

Editor-in-chief

While studying computer science at Kiev Polytechnical Institute, Alexei oversees the printing, production and business transactions of Predvestnik.

Sergei Zavgorodny

Associate editor

An experienced Christian writer who has travelled extensively through the former USSR, Sergei is responsible for editorial content and distribution of Predvestnik.

Roman Medvid

Translation consultant

In addition to serving as a full-time translator for another Christian mission in Kiev, Roman is a translation and production consultant for Predvestnik.

Our Address:

Predvestnik, P.O. Box 22, Kiev-105, 253105, Ukraine.

email: alex@predvestnik.freenet.kiev.ua

or, in the USA:

Media House International, P.O. Box 362173, Melbourne, FL 32936

email: Media House International

Did You Know?

* Predvestnik has a wide distribution network covering about 100 regions in 11 post-Soviet countries. See if you can find the following cities where we have distribution centers on the map above:

RUSSIA: Moscow, Anapa, Arkhangelsk, Kaliningrad, Kazan, Krasnodar, Murmansk, Naberezhnya Chelny, Nizhny Novgorod, Nizhnikamsk, Saint Petersburg, Samara, Sochi, Stavropol, Vologda

SIBERIAN RUSSIA: Barnaul, Irkutsk, Kemerovo, Khabarovsk, Novosibirsk, Omsk, Vladivostok, Yakutsk

BELOUS: Minsk

UKRAINE: Kiev, Chernigov, Dnieprozherzinsk, Izmail, Lvov, Melitopol, Mukachevo, Rovno, Smela, Sumy

MOLDOVA: Kishinev

LATVIA: Daugavpils

GEORGIA: Tbilisi

ARMENIA: Erevan

KAZAKHSTAN: Alma Ata, Temirtau

UZBEKISTAN: Tashkent

KIRGHISTAN: Bishkek

We have also distributed in all three of the Baltic States, the Far East, Siberia, Moldava and even above the Arctic Circle! Predvestnik has the unique ability to reach many people groups in areas unreached with the Gospel.

* The former USSR has the seventh largest Muslim population in the world. Predvestnik is producing a special newspaper for use in reaching the Muslims in Kazakhstan, Uzbekistan, Kirghistan, Turkmenistan, Tadjikstan and along the Volga river valley.

* Russia has the largest Chinese border of any nation. We plan to reach China with a Chinese language version of The Forerunner. We will print this newspaper in Kiev; ship it to Chinese border cities such as Vladivostok; and carry it into China.

* Ukraine is the second largest nation in Europe (besides Russia) and has 53 million people (sixth in population after Russia, Germany, England, France and Italy). We have our widest distribution network in Ukraine covering all regions of the republic.

* There are 280 million people in the former USSR. Most of them are unreached with the Gospel. Predvestnik is expanding into the furthest reaches of the former USSR.

* There are 150 unreached people groups (or nations) in the former USSR - Over 90 percent speak Russian as a primary or secondary language. Predvestnik is having an impact on these unreached peoples.

Two Newly Released Videos!

God's Law and Society

Order on-line now!

The Beast of Revelation Identified

Order on-line now!

Now you can donate directly to Media House International through the Internet!
It takes just a few moments. Donate any amount you choose -- no matter how small or large.

PREDVESTNIK | FEEDBACK | SEARCH | ABOUT MHI | JAY'S BIOGRAPHY | MORE ON FORMER USSR

Åàçåðå "Їđāāāāñōīēē" èçāāåðñŷ ñ èðēŷ 1991 āīāå

● Ñāāæēē īīāð

● Íīāīñòü íāāāēē

● Àððēâ 1991-1997 āā.

● Íàø êīēēāēðēâ

● Èñòīðēŷ āàçåðû

● Web-ìāñòåð

Ñòðāīēöå íāīāēāíå 15/04/98

How to read Russian on this web-site

Setting up your browser&CP1251 fonts

- Âåøē ēīīāíòåðēē

© Designed by Alexei Salapatov

